This is a condition of affairs greatly to be regretted. The best directors and the best stars cannot make a successful film without a good story to work upon. "Box office attractions" though they be, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks must have good picture plays. When their vehicles are not satisfying and convincing their business falls off. Charlie Chaplin in "One A. M." falls down hard. Mary Pickford in "A Poor Little Rich Girl" shows all day to crowded houses. In a few others of her screen plays not necessary to mention, the business of the attraction suffered because "the story was not there." In fact, it is safe to say that if the biggest moving picture star is given several bad plays in succession it may mean the end of his or her vogue!

It is not alone that the moving picture producers pay no commensurate price for a good photoplay, carefully constructed, but their studio departments are generally stupidly conducted by ignorant, discourteous and grossly conceited individuals. A writer's manuscript meets with the most astonishing and exasperating treatment, the which would take up this whole page simply to cite some flagrant instances of.

It is notoriously true that ideas are stolen and plots confiscated. The law courts record any number of proven instances of plagiarism paid for heavily.

Payment Inadequate.

The inadequate payment, when payment was made, has long been notorious. Edward Childs Carpenter was offered fifty dollars for a scenario, which it is said he later turned into "A Cinderella Man." At the highest price that might have been paid for this as a photoplay it would have brought him a thousand dollars. As a play for the speaking stage it will bring Mr. Carpenter two hundred thousand.

Such instances can be cited by the hundreds.

The poor pay proffered for original work for the screen is not the only grievance of the author. The ridiculous butchery of an original manuscript when it is finally shown on the screen has long been a matter of exasperation to the author.

His picture play is bought on its merits—for what is in the idea, the plot and the characters. When it is screened the author sees it as a hodgepodge and a hash of all the old stale stage and screen situations.

I recently sold a five-reel feature to a leading producing company. The head of the company, a man of intelligence, bought my complete photoplay because he liked it in its every detail. When I saw it on the screen two-thirds of what I had written was omitted and situations from "Rolling Stones," "Within the Law," "The Lion and the Mouse," and even Joaquin Miller's old melodrama, "The Days of 49," were interpolated! My name was flashed on the screen as the author of this mess of plagiarism!

It is not the living alone who are treated thus. The masterpieces of the great dead are mangled likewise. Books that are standard and beloved are butchered to make a movie holiday. "Don Quixote" is made a burlesque melodrama and he is killed finally by a bullet! "Sappho" is turned into a "White Slave" film. The characters of Dickens are twisted and perverted out of all original semblance and the stories themselves are changed wholly around! As a consequence, the millions who love and revere the great authors and their masterpieces are disgusted and regard pictures with contempt, while the ignorant, who have never read the great standard stories of all time, are disappointed in the presentation on the screen of great books of which they had heard and had expected much.

These are no solitary cases. There is hardly a masterpiece of fiction that has not been twisted into puerile "hokum" for the screen.

Star Must Have "Sympathy."

When I asked why Sappho was made a repentant-more-sinned-against-than-sinning Magdalene, I was told, "Well, the star must get the sympathy." The star perhaps (and perhaps not) got the sympathy, but one of the greatest stories ever told was made into drivel on the screen.

The highest paid writer around a moving picture studio is the press agent, who chronicles "dog stories" of the star and flapdoodle about the "movie magnate" that heads the concern.

With but few exceptions the scenario editors and staff scenario writers of almost all the big producing companies are poorly paid men and women of no reputation, originality or ability. And yet, of all things, the story is most vital.

Rex Beach's "The Barrier," without a star, with only actors carefully selected and the story itself well directed, scored one of the greatest successes of the screen. The average five and seven-reel "star" feature costs from $20,000 to $40,000 to produce. The salaries of picture stars range from $500 a week to $15,000. Yet the scenario department—no member of which receives even a moiety of this much money—is expected to beg, borrow or steal the story. How long would magazines endure if the stories were so handled, so written and so paid for?

Writing Railroad Thrillers

By Edward W. Matlak

Past Master of "Railroad Stuff" Gives a Few Tips to the Ambitious Aspirant

I HAVE been asked to give you a few words about writing railroad thrillers. For the benefit of any of your readers who have not yet mastered the art, I will say that in order to write this type of screen story, to my way of thinking, a knowledge of what a modern railroad is and how it is operated is the first essential—and a little imagination is about all that is necessary to fill out the balance of the prescription.

Like any other subject, it is hard to write railroad stuff unless you know how. The reason that so many scenario writers have failed to land this type of story is because they do not know anything about a railroad other than it is something to cuss when the trains are late. Not more than three out of a million can even read a time table gotten out by experts for the "public." What would the poor public get out of a "working schedule"? And how long would it take a layman to learn where all the block signals and switches on a two-hundred-mile division are located—and to take a night express over the line on time. It takes time to get this dope. In fact, there is a lot to learn in any department of a railroad and without this knowledge any attempt to write a story about the rail is apt to prove a flivver—for it cannot, and does not ring true. I have seen a number of so-called railroad stories screened, and to anyone who is "in the Know" it is to laugh.

Another thing to be kept in mind is this: While for a railroad man to write a railroad story that would be easily understood by another railroader should not be a difficult task—the fact must always be kept in mind that all the people who will see the story are not railroad folks, and therefore the story while ringing true must not be so constructed that the fellow on the "outside" will wonder what it is all about.

Another item not to be overlooked is the cost of production. It costs a wad of money to smash up engines and equipment and the results in jarring the "thrill" nerve do not by any means justify the expense. You can get them going stronger by working matters up to a point where something is going to happen unless—and there is where you begin to work. Show then seventeen different ways for a quick-witted hero or heroine to prevent a seemingly unavoidable collision and get them stopped with the pilots rubbing noses.

It goes as well as smashing up a couple of engines and costs less. You can't kid an audience these days into believing the villain goes to his doom in the spill. They know only too well that the "wreck" cost $50,000 to stage; that forty guns were trained on the mess, and that they will see scenes of the same smash in the next fifty pictures built around any old bunch of stuff that will give some lead a chance to crawl out of a studio coach window while the smoke pots get in their deadly work.

One or two other simple rules will not be out of place, the first being that the writer should always have a healthy regard for the Honorable Board of Censors and avoid as much as possible the writing of anything that savors of rough stuff. If you must have a villain to do some dirty work to get the trouble started, make him get the stunt over in some smooth manner that will get "by"—for if they cut it out the whole story falls dead in its tracks.

Last, and possibly the most important point to be kept in mind: Do not show railroad employes in a bad light. The railroads will not stand for it, nor will the men, for a finer body of sober and intelligent craftsmen are not to be found anywhere.

How I Came to Write "Continuity"

By Lloyd Lonergan

Old Time Thanhouser Script Writer Gives Glimpses of His Experiences

EVERYBODY knows what "continuity" is nowadays, but Edwin Thanhouser is the man who invented it. There wasn't such an animal in 1909, when he started his studio in New Rochelle. Inquiries developed the fact that it was "all up to" the director.

"Just rely on him," Mr. Thanhouser was told. "A good director will take a company out, see something that will screen well, take it and write a story around it. Scenarios will be the least of your troubles."

Lloyd Lonergan.

But the man who is now my boss couldn't see it that way. He had had a long experience in the theatrical game, made a name for himself with his stock company in Milwaukee, and persisted in the belief that the pictures were a form of dramatic art.

"When I had my theatrical company," he said, "I never told the director, 'Go and put on a play,' and trusted to his inventive genius. I selected a manuscript I liked, and he followed it. And I don't see any reason why the same course shouldn't be a success in the motion picture game."

And that's how I came to "write continuity," and see it put on the screen at a time when other companies let the directors do everything. I figured out one day that if all the negatives that have filmed my scripts were laid out in a path six feet wide, they would make a celluloid road from New Rochelle to the shores of the Falkland Islands.

In the early days we didn't go in so much for quick, snappy action. A reel usually ran from 18 to 25 scenes, and people made exits and entrances much as they do on the legitimate stage. A year or so ago I saw a reissue of a picture which, when released some ten years ago, created a sensation, but how old-fashioned it does appear now. For example, there was one scene that ran this way:

"Set—Corner of drawing room. Woman on with her husband. He bids her farewell and off. Gay Lothario enters. He and wife embrace, show alarm. Lothario goes behind curtain. Husband enters—says he is tired; reclines on lounge. Wife rubs his head; he goes to sleep. Lothario from behind curtain; wife gives him dagger and bids him slay her loving husband. He protests; she insists. He about to do it, then drops knife. He and wife both repent and weep."

This was all one scene. Today it would probably be shown in some forty flashes.

I wonder what has become of the old free lance writers who, seven or eight years ago, used to flood the studios with their offerings. Some of their scripts were so funny that I made notes of them, but not for screen presentation.

Probably the most unusual story of the bunch came from a chap in the Middle West. It narrated the history of an unfortunate family that certainly had trouble in bunches. There was a mortgage on the old homestead, father had lost his job, brother was unjustly in jail, mother had consumption, and it was all up to little ingenue daughter. And she wrote a motion picture script. Scenes of suspense while waiting for the returns to come in. And just as the villain was about to put everybody out in the snow, a letter arrived from the film company, enclosing a check that settled for all their troubles.

And this suppositious check paid for a one-reel script, for those were the only kind in those days. I often wished that that mythical company was in existence.

Another letter in my collection accompanied an offering from a small town in Pennsylvania. It reads as follows:

"This play is written by my son, Thomas, who is 16 years old. He is too delicate to go to work and since he had a bad fall, two years ago, has been very backward in school. The doctor thinks that in time he may outgrow his feeble mental condition, but in the meanwhile he has turned his attention to motion picture writing, and perhaps there may be a place for him there, so I send you this story which he wrote after supper last evening.

Very respectfully,

Another cherished gem of mine is a script which I figure conservatively would cost $250,000 to put on, and it was only written for two reels at that. The flatiron building is wrecked, there follows a panic among the spectators on Fifth avenue (author indicated that this scene could be taken at night when traffic was light, and there would be nobody to interfere with our supers), there is a collision between two ocean liners, and a few other trifles. As a sample, look at scene 28.

"Scene 28. An observation parlor car on a railroad. Mildred and Henry are on the back platform. He is making love to her. He looks ahead, around side of car, and shrieks as he sees that bridge is open. Mildred, who is looking down the track, cries out that the next train is coming. Henry's train stops. Mildred rushes into his arms, crying, 'Save me! Save me!' As Henry holds her tight, the other engine crashes into the observation car. Henry and Mildred are hurtled into the air, landing on the country road, alongside of the train, just as an auto dashes by. The chauffeur just dodges by them."

Yes, it is a great business, scenario writing, but it is much more fun to read the stories sent in from the outside—that is, if one has a sense of humor.

"Caged Authors"

By E. Clement d'Art

The Motion Picture Industry is Two Hundred Years Behind the Publishing Business

SOME two centuries ago, in England, book publishers hired "tame authors," i. e., gentlemen or ladies of a literary turn of mind who reported at the offices of the publisher, day in and day out, signed their names on a register and next to it wrote out neatly the time at which they had arrived, worked some ten or twelve hours at a stretch and "turned out" the bulk of the literature of the period. They were a rather ill paid lot; some five pounds may have been the reward for a novel out of which the publisher possibly gathered some fifteen or twenty thousand pounds. Their surroundings were not very inspiring, consisting mostly of a dark cellar right under the publisher's presses. There the "tame authors" were duly "caged" for the day. The work of the "tame author" was subject to arbitrary changes and alterations. The publisher being a man of vast experience and sound judgment, a hard-headed and hard-hearted business man, knew exactly how a book should be written, knew exactly what the public wanted and was bent on supplying just what was needed. The work of the "tame author" suffered accordingly. The results of the imprisoned troubadour's efforts coupled with the efforts of the publisher were not of the best.

E. Clement d'Art.

Of course, some writers were foolhardy, wild and temperamental enough to seek to retain their freedom. Among the latter were the men whose literature has survived. They were foolish enough to write masterpieces. But, for the future fame and present liberty they paid dearly enough. Hunger was often their lot—and countless humiliations; they were forced to cater to some distinguished patron if they wanted to live at all.

Now that we have this beautiful picture in mind, let us look at another and contemplate the various improvements due to modern progress, innovation, the spirit of the twentieth century and the birth of a new industry—not unlike the other in some respects.

Tame Authors in Disuse.

Publishers no longer use tame authors, no longer pay $25 for a MS. out of which they make a fortune. They have acquired a good deal of respect for an author's style and his handling of the story. But how is it with the motion picture industry? A state of affairs which very much resembles the one described above confronts us.

Every motion picture concern has its staff of caged writers. They are rather ill paid. Their surroundings are often not as inspiring as they might be. The result of their labors is not always of the best and their work is subject to ruthless and heedless changes. They work under pressure; quantity, not quality, seeming to be the object.

An office, a time clock, stifling, imagination-killing business surroundings are not conducive to the development of art in its highest form, and a scenario writer is or should be an artist.

Producers Penny Wise.

Motion picture producers are penny wise and pound foolish. They spend very little on the scenario and fortunes in the proper production of poor ideas. They fail to realize that the photoplay proper, the written scenario, is the very keystone of the industry. That "the play is the thing" cannot be repeated over-often, but it is perfectly useless to mutter the magic words as a lama mumbles his prayers. The whole meaning and import of the sentence must be fully realized, absorbed, understood.

As things stand, the photo playwriter is thrown on the mercies, often very ungentle, of the director who "produces" and more than often ruins his play. His scenario is taken apart and put together again. Some characters are removed and others added. All this is done hurriedly, on the spur of the moment, often taking but one scene under consideration and not the scenario as a whole. Result: a Great Picture—NOT.

Motion picture concerns would do well to study the publishing business as it is today in this country. Publishers are both courteous and honest. They pay fair prices. The printers and illustrators (which artists and craftsmen correspond to the motion picture director and his staff), are not permitted to alter the story so that it will fit the type in which it is printed or the illustrations which adorn the book. Perhaps the editor may have a few changes to suggest, but the author is duly consulted.

To the end of securing better scenarios, the outside author must be given better opportunities. Then the stories will come. Caged authors will not do. A scenario editor should be an editor: a sound judge, a good psychologist, a fair writer, an accomplished technician, a trained literary man, not a human factory made to turn out ten or fifteen reels a week, or more if more can be got out of him.

Must Create a Real Market.

Offers to purchase scenarios must become more genuine and less of an advertising scheme. Proper prices must be paid for proper material. A certain broad-mindedness which does not at present prevail must be introduced; scenarios must be accepted, bought and paid for because they are good, because they are worth producing, not because they happen to appeal to the whim of a more or less literate manager or because they happen to fit a certain star. The star is no doubt a consideration, but there are enough stars on Broadway, and on the screen, to make the heavens jealous, and the play is of greater, of far greater moment, the choice being less plentiful when real merit is sought.

Plenty of time should be spent on the writing of the scenario. When in proper shape, the scenario should be handed to the director with instructions to produce "as is," the director, unless he is a genius, to make no changes other than those rendered absolutely necessary by his locations and to use his artistic temperament on nought but the faithful rendering of the author's work. Writers should be paid by the reel or on a royalty basis or both. This is the only fair way and, in the long run, the most economical. A writer of talent should be placed in a position to produce his own pictures, for he, better than anyone, knows the exact meaning of his own words and can best adapt any changes that may prove necessary. If he really has talent and imagination, he will succeed.

Now that I have written all this and read it over, I see fingers being pointed at me in derision and hear mocking laughter and fancy people saying: "Writing about 'caged authors,' are you? Why, you are one yourself."

Yes, with this difference:

The Edison Studios are located at the Bronx Park, and through the window of my little office I can see green trees and rocks and little children at play, and all this is not uninspiring. The offices are part of the studio and the atmosphere is not strictly one of business. On the contrary a certain literary spirit prevails. We can all think clearly—and cleanly.

The New Old Art

By Derwent Hall Caine

Sees Some Things to Be Corrected Before Motion Pictures Come to Their Own

I HAVE frequently been asked whether I considered motion pictures an art. Most assuredly. It is not only the newest art, but it is also a very near form of the oldest art. When the drama was in its infancy the method employed to give it expression was pantomime. In the huge coliseums of ancient Rome and Athens, the play was almost entirely spectacular. Even now the less civilized humans employ motions to express any excess of feeling. This proves to me that it is natural to express feeling by movement. Now art is a copy of nature, so surely to reproduce a story by pantomime must be an art. With the smaller theaters came the perfecting of the speaking drama and the neglect of the spectacular. But now that the larger theater is popular again, it is found almost impossible to make the speaking drama a success, without a spectacular display. It is only within recent years that the Russian ballet has come into its own, which is a living form of motion pictures.

Derwent Hall Caine.

The screen motion pictures is, in my opinion, in its very early infancy. I think the first thing to wean it from its present state of crudeness would be to use stories that have real merit. The screen has yet to see the great moving picture writer. If Dumas were alive now and his interest and great art were directed to the screen, we should realize the possibilities of the screen, which we only now dimly feel. As things are at present, the author is considered of such little importance, that I have frequently searched in vain for a mention of his name, while the producer's name occupies half the advertising bill. A bad story cannot be made good by good acting and a good story cannot be killed by bad acting or producing.

In the speaking drama we find it essential to have small models made of the suggested scenes, where the action takes place. In motion pictures frequently the scene is built after having been only roughly explained to the carpenter. The result is seldom entirely satisfactory but is used because of the time and labor involved in making another scene. Why should not a competent artist be employed to design each scene and models be built for inspection? The financial outlay of this would be as nothing compared to the time lost in repairing the errors made by the present forms. Several directors have told me with pride that they have taken footage ranging from 50,000 to 75,000 feet of negative to make a 6,000-foot film. This strikes me as a matter for apology rather than boasting, for surely if the director was fully competent to direct his artists and if he knew the best way to obtain his results, it would not be necessary to experiment with the camera working.

As things are at present, motion pictures cannot present any serious rivalry to the spoken drama, but that is not surprising considering that serious attention is not devoted, in the right way, to the production of a film. In the first place, famous authors have not yet been called in to write original scenarios. The few famous authors, whose works have been used, have merely sold some old book or play which was not originally written with any intention of its being utilized for moving pictures. The people who are called in to transform the story into filming action are mechanics and not story tellers. The result is usually a very deteriorated edition of the original story.

Too Little Preparation.

A stage director spends weeks and often months of careful study on the MS. of the play he is to produce. While the moving picture director has the MS. thrust upon him and is told to "get along with it" allowing him no chance to study or use his imagination. Then the actor of the legitimate stage has his part many weeks in advance of his initial appearance, allowing him time to acquire the psychology of the character he is to play. Whereas in the moving pictures, an actor is often called to the studio, given a rough idea of the scene he is to play that day without his being told what precedes or follows. What chance has he for characterization?

Too little attention has been paid, up to the present, to the music for moving pictures. I was at a moving picture theater not long ago and a funeral march accompanied the antics of some kittens. The value of words in a song can be lost by bad musical setting and a film which tells one story while the music tells a different one is confusing to the senses. Why shouldn't great living composers be employed to write appropriate music for the film?

I think that I have suggested a sufficient number of improvements which are apparent to me to justify my optimism regarding the future of this New Old Art.

The Scenario of Today

By Phil Lang

Method of Building Up a Motion Picture Play for the Kalem Company Told by the Production Manager

FOR many years we have heard the scenario discussed from various angles. The story of such-and-such a picture was good, but its technical development was bad. More frequently, in this day of over-production, there is little or no story, but an abundance of technique. If the author of a long-winded, pointless story does not technique his characters all around Robin Hood's proverbial barn, the director accomplishes the demise of the slight idea by meanderings which lead nowhere. And while the discussions continue, the scenario—the real, practical scenario — remains one thing:

Phil Lang.

It is the manuscript from which the director produces the picture.

Surely this definition is elementary and trite—but if the manuscript does not live up to this definition, it is not a scenario.

Authors have longed for the day when their scenarios will be produced as written—few realizing that producers are equally anxious for that day to arrive. Yet how many writers have really submitted scenarios? There are some, of course. Several years ago we secured from C. Gardner Sullivan one of his early feature scenarios, "The Invisible Power"—a worthy forerunner of his recent brilliant successes—which was produced practically scene for scene as written. But there are few Sullivans, and when they appear they invariably are called in to write in conjunction with the producer, or are made attractive offers for the exclusive acquisition of their work.

Thus today we find few scenarios written on the outside. Nearly every producer who buys material asks for a synopsis of the plot, without the detailed continuity of action. This is not because the editorial departments think they have a monopoly on brains. It is because they know that artistic productions can be made only from scenarios which contain every necessary detail. The day of hit or miss has gone. If a picture is to be successful, the production in its entirety must be carefully planned before a foot of film is taken. It is not practical in every case to summon the author to the conferences in which all details are threshed out. There are instances, however, wherein co-operation between the producer and the outside writer are equally fruitful.

Our series "The Girl from Frisco" and "The American Girl" offer interesting examples of scenario perfection—made possible only by the co-operation of author, editor, technical writer and director. In the case of "The Girl from Frisco," written by Robert Welles Ritchie of New York, the co-operation took place across three thousand miles and demonstrates the advantages of a unity of effort even under unfavorable circumstances.

Frederick R. Bechdolt, the noted fiction writer, who lives in Carmel, California, was engaged to write "The American Girl." We had a conference in San Francisco. In a short time he delivered the first four episodes for production in two reels each.

Mr. Bechdolt's work was that of an experienced plot builder who had conscientiously endeavored to observe the photoplay angle, but each of his plots contained material for five reels. When we had worked out the vital features of each story, revised synopses were written by our staff writer, Frank Howard Clark, a technical expert, who has had five years' training in the Kalem school.

I then invited Mr. Bechdolt to visit our Glendale, California, studio that he might see how entire incidents had been removed from his plots without detriment to the whole; why a quarry was more practical than a lime kiln; why an incident which he had planned to take place on a river must be produced on the desert—there being no rivers doing business.

The author took such an interest in the work that he rented a cottage in Glendale and wrote the remaining episodes of the series on the ground. He explored the surrounding country and discovered many new locations which suggested plots—such as "The Door in the Mountain" and "The Ghost of the Desert."

One day Mr. Bechdolt, having seen several of his plots produced, having observed the difficulties experienced in securing odd types for extras and the trouble in transporting them to locations, came up with a smile and asked for his latest plot.

"It's those smuggled Chinamen," he said. "The smuggling business is merely incidental, so I'm not going to ask you to round up Mongolian extras. I'll have the villain smuggle something that he can carry with him."

For every plot a revised synopsis was prepared, covering all points raised in discussion, and the detailed scenario written therefrom. Then the complete scenario, ready for production, was turned over to Director James W. Horne, who, having been a writer, realizes that the story is the first essential and that before taking his first scene he must know just exactly what is going to happen in the final scene.

Horne, who has produced many of the popular Kalem series, always takes home the scenario and completely re-types it—not to change it, but to put it in his own words. In doing so he assimilates every detail. He incorporates bits of dialogue which aid him in building up scenes. He gauges the various situations. He notes the wardrobe to be worn by the characters, how the stage sets must be built, etc.

Ten copies of this scenario are made and distributed among the various departments. Two copies are posted for the cast to read, for each player must report with the proper wardrobe, personal props and full knowledge of the story. And that there may be no delays, every small part is cast and the players informed when to report, the presence of every necessary prop is verified and the availability of each needed location is confirmed before the machinery of production is put in motion.

A similar course is followed in the production of all of our pictures—and the foundation for the complete preparation in advance is the detailed scenario.

Robert Welles Ritchie, who is spending the summer in Northern California, is writing a new serial for us and to date has paid us three visits to confer. We now look to authors of such calibre as Ritchie, Bechdolt and E. W. Hornung (the author of "Stingaree"), for our stories, and, for obvious reasons it is not always practical to have them on the ground. This condition necessitates that we have two photoplay specialists on each plot—the experienced plot builder and the experienced technical writer.

I have a warm regard for the old guard of scenario writers, whose work I have known so well for the past six years. They patiently studied the technique of scenario writing, while their big brothers, the fiction men, sat back and, sometimes, scoffed. Today the scenario field needs both. The literary man—the builder of big plots—rarely if ever masters the entire intricacies of scenario technique. He should not be called upon nor expected to do so, as long as he observes the essentials of the photoplay. And our friends of the old guard either must become big plot builders, in this day of "story first," or resignedly fall into their niche and utilize their technical education in adapting the other fellow's story.

Ideals and Realities

By Edward T. Lowe, Jr.

Essanay Photoplay Editor Notes the Difference and Says It's Best to Please the Public

AN IDEAL is a truthful reality—no more! So called ideals are usually vague enough to make one call for hard realism, for ideals, in the great majority of cases, are merely the exaggerated ideas of an individual.

Edward T. Lowe, Jr.

It is always easier to laugh at some one else falling downstairs than it is to laugh when we fall ourselves—yet it is possible for anyone to fall downstairs; on the other hand, it is highly improbable that we or our neighbors will ever take to slinging pies at each other.

It is my desire to show our neighbors "falling downstairs" in such a way as to create a natural laugh at the predicament—trying to recall a similar instance, or at least the possibility of one, and not to portray the other, a highly unnatural phase of the same situation. The instance is purely figurative. We want the public to laugh with, and not at us.

About the Public.

Please the public! Those three words form the basis of judgment on which stories for production should be selected. Why? For the simple reason that, after all, it is from the public the money comes and it is the public which should be pleased—not an individual.

It is up to the photoplay editor to keep his finger on the public's pulse. If it beats faster at the sight of a certain type of picture, then he must see that they get it—in homeopathic doses—irrespective of his personal like or dislike of the subject. The psychology of the "homeopathic dose" is there—give them just enough of one thing to leave them unsatiated.

All Art—and surely, the "moving picture" is establishing an Art of its own—should have personality and universality in its appeal to those who "pay the piper"—the public. Not too personal, like the Cubist or Futurist, so as to reach only a chosen few, but personal in as much as the emotions appealed to are common to all, thereby becoming at once universal.

It is the editor's quickened vision which enables him to select from a mass of material the ones with the universal themes and which will at once appeal through their "human touches."

The public is tiring—has been tired a long time, had we but realized it—of watching on the screen emotions which they have never felt and which they are not likely to feel. It is true that occasionally they do hear of some wild woman who "vamps" around—more occasionally do they hear of wild murders and debauches, but, when this happens under their immediate notice, they turn from it in disgust. Therefore, is it rational to suppose that they desire for amusement, a morbid presentation of things from which they turn in horror and disgust in real life? It is not?

Anent the Amateur.

As for being taught how to make a million in photoplay writing in "ten easy lessons"—it can't be done! Have you ever noticed how much easier it is to tell how a thing should be done, than to go ahead and do it yourself? "Original" ideas are always in demand, but the so-called "original idea" is not the idea itself, but rather the novelty of treatment. In business, in painting, in sculpture, in writing novels—this statement is fact—why not in the writing of the photoplay? Gray matter is, fortunately or unfortunately, just as much of a necessity in the correct development of a photoplay as it is in some patent or business proposition. A musician may conceive a wonderful melody, but, minus the knowledge of how to set the notes down on paper, his idea is of little value. So it is with the photoplay.

And again the public.

Please the Public!

Successful Writer of Photoplays Introduces Himself—Is Strong for the Good Story

"DO YOUR bit," urged THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in a letter to me recently. "We think you will be able to give us something interesting from your experiences, and what you think the future will bring forth."

Needless to say, I feel that my experiences in the moving picture field will not prove of any great interest to the army of readers of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, but as long as the editor commands, here goes as to how I broke into the game:

H. Tipton Steck.

In 1908 I had graduated from a two-year course in business college—including a thorough schooling in shorthand and stenography, much to my disgust. However, my mother had the foresight to see that my mind was wandering in literary channels, and that the art of thumping a typewriter would come in mighty handy to me, so I suffered through the latter course and then stepped out with a chest expansion of quite some inches to face the cold world. What was I to do? Where could I begin? A friend who possessed a business office gave me a job. For several weeks I chased myself around his business domicile with bunches of paper in my hand and a great void in my brain, until I awoke one morning with the certain feeling that I was not arriving at the goal I had photographed plainly on my visionary horizon.

Needless to say, I threw up the sponge and, as most all literary bugs do, I sought employment on a daily newspaper. I was a raw cub, and my experiences with barking city editors were laughable, and at the same time tragic to poor me. However, I struggled on, and then a good friend who had been exalted to the stellar position of political editor of an afternoon sheet, got me on as press agent, and I wrote reams of dope about Miss Isadora Duncan and her dances, poultry shows, flower shows, etc., etc.

Next this good friend, and another friend of his, decided to start a weekly paper in a little suburb of this large and glorious town, and asked me to go out and be editor to the inky infant. I did so, and for many months struggled to dig up sufficient news that would prove interesting to the local folk about whom it was written. We sold papers on the streets, for the first time in the history of the burg; we opened a vein of scandal about the Honorable Mayor that ran him out of office at the next election; we even clamped the vise on the Chief of Police, exposed him in connection with certain profitable grafts, dared him to close up our office, then accepted his peace offerings of punk cigars—but continued to revile him in our sheet until we ran out of money and had to give up the ghost.

Then I launched into magazine writing, and received a check every six months—if I was lucky—until one day an ad. concerning scenarios and ideas for motion pictures was brought to my attention. I didn't know a scenario from a barn door, but I wrote something I thought was good and mailed it. It came back. I wrote another. Same thing. Again I tried, but the mailman was a villain, and chuckled with ghoulish glee as he deposited my brain-child at the door with the usual polite rejection slip. I was mad. I wrote another, and with it sent a letter demanding to know what was wrong with the concern that they flippantly returned my masterpieces. It worked. I got a check—and a long letter from the editor inviting me to come over and see him.

Introduced to the Screen.

This was my introduction to the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, and I am rather proud to say that I have never worked for any other company in the past eight years. Mr. George K. Spoor, President of Essanay, signed checks for my effusions for a year, then put me on the staff to write for G. M. Anderson ("Broncho Billy"), who at that time was taking the first company out West. In eight months I wrote enough stuff to keep Mr. Anderson busy for two years, then Mr. Spoor took pity on me and made me Scenario Editor. From early morning until late at night, I read and read and read—ideas, synopses, scenarios, some written in pale pink and tied up with baby ribbon, others accompanied by tearful letters stating the writer had nine wives and a starving child to support, and that my refusal would send them straight to perdition. Needless to say, ninety-nine out of every hundred scripts received were returned to the authors, but again I am rather proud to say I bought the first ideas of such well-known writers as James Oliver Curwood, Roy McCardell, Frank X. Finnegan, Mary Roberts Rinehart and many others, also that I was instrumental in shoving along the first checks to such scenario writers of present-day reputation as Anthony Kelly, Monte Katterjohn, Maibelle Heikes Justice, Epes W. Sargent, Joseph Anthony Roach, Emmet Campbell Hall, Edward T. Lowe, Jr., and have watched with pride their rapid advancement to the top-rung of the ladder of success in their chosen field.

Takes a Step Up.

From scenario editor I graduated into the chair of advertising manager for Essanay, then Mr. Spoor was good enough to create for me the position of manager of negative production, enabling me to have jurisdiction over the scenario from the time of its receipt from the outside source until it was seen as the finished product on the screen. Naturally, this was all technical training. My soul still yearned to blacken reams of good white paper with the children of my brain, consequently over two years ago I turned my whole attention to writing for the screen, and the Essanay Company has been gracious enough to accept very nearly everything I have turned out. My eight years' experience with one company have taught me many things. I have watched the game develop from almost nothing to the fifth largest industry in the world, have toiled with the best writers, the best directors, the best actors and actresses, and I wouldn't give a King's ransom for the splendid friends I have made, both in and out of the profession.

And the movies are going on and on, and the gradually trend upward will take the camera into realms hitherto unexplored, one of which is the hospital operating room, where the marvels of modern surgery will be laid bare on the screen for students to study, thereby eliminating the old system of inanimate slides.

Public Must Be Pleased.

The future of the game depends entirely on the factors now at work, and others—possibly newcomers—who are to rise like Moses of old and lead us out of the wilderness. It is a survival of the fittest. The day of the open market has swooped upon us like a vengeance. The public must be pleased. Exhibitors must be pleased, and the producers must please if they would survive.

The sane adjustment of salaries to so-called stars will go a long way toward placing the moving picture game on a sound basis once more, as it was in the beginning when the best known stars today were eager and glad to toil for a mere stipend. The day is past when great stars from the legitimate stage can invade the motion picture studio, command their own figure in salary, and burst forth upon the screen as wonderful successes. The proof of the pudding is the wail of protest going up all over the country from the weary screen-public and the weary exhibitor, who nightly are forced to watch the ludicrous antics of one of the reputable stage stars lumbering through a wretched story—usually a dramatization of a play-failure—grimacing at the camera, and committing every known misconception and blunder known in the studio, for the mere stipend of a million or so per.

Story Is Above All.

With the exception of a very few, the moving picture public have made their idols, and these have risen to stellar heights without the afflictions of years of stage experience, and because their performance is a reflection of their natural—not artificial—selves.

Paramount above all is the story. I shall not go into detail about the finished scenario. Enough has been written concerning this angle, but I wish to merely add my hearty appreciation and admiration of the men high up in the game today, who have at last realized that the story, a thoroughly workmanlike scenario of that story, placed in the hands of a capable director whose business it is to see that that scenario is conveyed to the screen exactly as it is written by the mediums of intelligent casting, settings, lighting, properties, etc., is the only real, dyed-in-the-wool way to number themselves among those who would survive and keep abreast of the onrushing times.

"Tapping the Thought Wireless"

By June Mathis

Waves Sometimes Get Crossed with Dire Results, Says Metro Scenario Editress

THE usual cry of the young author who goes to moving picture theater and sees a story that is similar to an idea of his own, is that is has been stolen—that it is part of his own brain-child.

My advice to the author who has an original or novel idea is not to think about it too much, not to tell their friends, until they put their story on paper and have sent it on its round to the various producing companies; because thoughts are dangerous to those attuned to the inspirational world—that intangible place where they are first born.

June Mathis.

Don't think that I am expounding a "new thought," because thoughts are the oldest things in the world. Mother Eve had to think before she succumbed to temptation. So we all must think: but some are more attuned to receive and throw out their thoughts than others. It all depends upon the voltage of the brain—how well equipped our mental wireless is, and what station is at the other end—music, poetry, prose or mechanical. Just as the Sayreville wireless station has power to communicate at a greater distance than the school boy with an inventive turn of mind, who rigs up a tiny apparatus that will transmit the distance of a block; for all thoughts travel in waves. Hence, those who have already connected—[illegible]

During a play contest conducted by a well-known manager, three plays were submitted among the many: One from southern California, one from Oregon and another from Maine. The readers were startled by the same plot, similarity of names, and even dialogue.

Whose thought traveled to the three corners of our great country, and who received it first?

Explain this, and you have almost answered the riddle of the universe.

So, when you submit a story, and other similar stories appear, do not accuse the scenario editor of stealing, for he may be innocent. He may have been the one with whom the thought was first born and you unconsciously tapped the wires of inspiration that he set vibrating. That is, if inspiration can be accorded to a scenario editor.

THE SCREEN'S CHAMPION UNCLE.

Did you ever hear of "Uncle Barnes"? "Whose uncle?" you ask, "and does his nephew like him?" As it happens, "Uncle Barnes" is the uncle of so many nephews—and nieces—that we would have a hard time calculating them, and indeed they would cut a formidable figure in a census. For Justus D. Barnes is the uncle in most of the Thanhouser pictures you see, and he has been uncle-ing to Thanhouser actors, male and female, since the formation of the company. He has been an uncle in 500 Thanhouser photoplays to date and the average of nieces and nephews in each is three. That would make 1,500 persons he has officiated to as uncle in his screen career.

Why Not Classify the Moving Picture?

By EDWARD WEITZEL

ONE of the advantages that the spoken stage has derived from its long if not always honorable existence is the proper classification of its product. From Polonious to Brunetiere the different forms of the drama have been clearly understood and as clearly labeled so that one form need never be mistaken for the other. Tragedy, comedy, farce, burlesque, the modern serious drama—these are all classified and graded so that they appeal to different orders of intellects and the prices of admission to the theaters wherein they are housed are graded accordingly.

Forty years ago when most of the cities in the United States boasted of but one theater, and Edwin Booth in Hamlet, Joseph Jefferson in Rip Van Winkle, Oliver Doud Byron in "Across the Continent," Callender's Minstrels and the Peake Family Bell Ringers, all played in this one theater during the season, the prices of admission were regulated by the merits of the attraction. By this system patrons knew in advance the probable worth of the entertainment they would get for their money. With the introduction of the three grades of theaters: the high price, the popular price, and the ten-twenty-and-thirty-cent houses, it became still easier to know what class of "show" to expect. When the moving picture brought the career of the cheapest grade theater to an end the family moving picture theater, like the spoken theater of forty years ago, took to housing all grades of pictures and charged the same price of admission to all. This condition is slowly being adjusted, but the moving picture is still a long way behind its elder brother in this phase of its classification.

The most important distinction to be settled, and one that is not recognized at present, is the difference between the photo-drama and what may properly be called the photo-novel. The laws of the drama, using the word in its technical sense, have not changed since the advent of the moving picture, nor will they change so long as human nature remains what it is. Clayton Hamilton's definition of drama as "objective action" is merely another way of saying that we would rather see a human struggle than be told about it. Dispite the opinion of the late Professor Munsterburg, the fact that the moving picture can visualize narrative is no advantage in creating screen drama for the reason that its use breaks the continuity of action which is so great a factor in maintaining suspense. In the spoken drama, plays with long scenes describing what has taken place are often said to talk themselves to death. Many a screen drama achieves the same result by too frequent use of the cutback. The day is coming when this device will be as obsolete as the stage aside, as far as the highest form of screen drama is concerned. At the present time photo-dramas made wholly without its aid or nearly so have the greatest power to hold the spectator.

Some stories are so compelling in themselves that it is almost impossible to destroy their grip upon the attention, but progressive objective action whenever possible is the one and only way to construct them, if the product is to be labelled screen-drama. The fact that plays on the order of "On Trial," whether told on the stage or the screen, start at the catastrophe, then go back and explain what leads up to it, does not alter this rule. All such stories belong to a special class of screen fiction and are fashioned after the French criminal novel invented by Gaboriau who, in building up his story, merely followed the method pursued by the police in obtaining evidence after some startling crime has taken place. While it has been demonstrated that screen-drama will not admit of the variety of tempos possible to the spoken drama nor attain the speed and the full dramatic stop of the stage climax, it is essential in fashioning a photo-drama to approach as nearly as is practical to these important adjuncts to dramatic action.

The psychology of this formula is simple: the body of spectators before the screen must be held and swayed as if they were one person. They have assembled to watch the complete showing of a drama and their attention must be firmly fixed by the employment of suspense and surprise. That is, they must be tricked into believing that the drama before them is actually taking place. The surest way to achieve this result is by progressive objective action to its fullest possible extent.

To claim that a body of spectators cannot be entertained by screen stories that follow the construction of the printed novel rather than that of the spoken drama, is not tenable in the light of present day knowledge. The grade of screen fiction adapted to this form is a special one, however, and usually involves too many characters to be handled in any other way. But here, also, the cutback should be used as sparingly as may be, and every necessary incident should be held to the shortest footage consistent with clearness and effectiveness in telling the story. In other words, when the argument has convinced, why continue to argue?

All other forms of the screen's activities that are born of the imagination come under the same rule, even the big spectacular productions in which the art of the moving picture is supreme. And the editors of the Topical Weeklies are not unmindful of the soundness of this dramatic law—which is also a universal truth.

Variety the Spice of Picture Life

By HELEN HOLMES.

IT HAS been said that it takes all sorts of people to make up a world and I daresay it is a wise provision of Nature that all of us are not possessed of the same tastes in all things. Even granting this, however, I must insist that there are two phases of theatrical work which I am absolutely and totally unable to understand.

One of these is: Why does an actress elect to work on the legitimate stage? The other is Why, out of every hundred film actresses, do ninety-nine of them possess an ingrowing desire to become honest-Injun, sure-for-goodness screen vampires? I have tried to answer those questions and I find that I cannot.

Now please don't misunderstand me. Don't think that I do not love and appreciate the spoken drama, or that I do not enjoy watching the serpent-eyed women of the screen who glide about through the various sets, wrecking homes and creating more and more candidates for the Suicide Club. I am unusually fond of both these forms of indoor sports. But just as one may be fond of chicken en casserole without in the least liking to prepare the fowl concoction, so one may like to see the results of other people's efforts at the spoken drama and at pictured vamping without in the least desiring to join in the frolic. So it is with me. I like the results, but I cannot see for the life of me how one can really enjoy the labor that produces those results.

The reason for my view of the situation lies in the fact that personally I crave variety and demand exercise and naturally cannot understand those persons who accept work that is so very much of a sameness and which does not offer opportunity for enough exercise by about ninety-nine and forty-four one-hundredths per cent.

Helen Holmes on Engine.

When I first became a member of a film company producing railroad pictures I did it with no expectation or intention of remaining long. I expected the work to become monotonous in a short time and when that time came I fully intended to desert it for something else. I still intend to do so, but if the past five years is anything to base conclusions on the day is still as far away as it was at the outset. For I have yet to repeat a previous day's work, and until I do it will be safe to say that I shall remain in this line.

It comes closer to being exactly what I require than anything I can imagine with a salary attached to it. Each day is entirely different from every other day. I go out in the morning without an idea what is to be done and so the day is crowded with surprises. Everything is new to me because I do not know it is going to happen usually until about three minutes before they begin cranking the camera. All this is exactly what I want, for there isn't a chance for old Col. Deadly Monotony to creep up and get a strangle hold on me. The result is that I love every minute of the working day.

Moreover, I get plenty of exercise, and, if there is anything I must have next to variety, it is exercise, jumping trains, going hand-over-hand along telephone wires, dropping from heights, diving, swimming, driving autos and locomotives and riding horseback are part of the day's work and give me enough exercise so that by evening I am comfortably tired and ready to rest and enjoy a little home quiet.

Very likely my sisters of the speaking stage and those of the screen who lean toward a college education in vamping find it as hard to imagine a sane mind electing to do the work I have chosen as it is for me to understand the working of their minds. Of course, I do not know this to be so, for I have never asked one of them. Speaking for myself, however, I must say that their love of what they are doing constitutes the one thing theatrical which I am entirely unable to understand.

But, as I remarked at the outset, it takes all manner of folk to make a world and it is probably fortunate for us all that individual tastes are not identical.

The Story

By Col. J. E. Brady.

When a man desires to erect a building the first thing he does is to call in an architect and have his plans drawn. From these plans work is commenced. First comes the excavation and then is laid the foundation. Now, if this foundation is well laid; if the piling and supports are resting on bed rock, there will never be any question as to its ability to erect a superstructure, whose cornices if needs be will reach the sky. But if the foundation is weak, the superstructure eventually will topple and fall.

What the foundation is to a building, so too is the story to the finished motion picture play. If your story is strong, clean and good; if the scenario is well made, you have at least laid a foundation for a superstructure of success—there is more than an even chance of achieving what we most desire—a good, wholesome picture.

Col. J. E. Brady.

On the other hand, if your story, after having passed through the manuscript department, is weak, it will take the finest acting and the most superlative direction to make a passable play. A poor director may make a poor story into a fairly passable play, but if he does it will be because he has injected into his script ideas not thought of by the original writer or the scenario man. But in this case he has harked back and rebuilt the foundation.

The province of the motion picture, I take it, is to portray real life upon the screen, and the more nearly we visualize actual happenings the better our chance of success. The day of exaggerations, of depicting unholy passions, of crime, has gone by. Crime may be an incident, when its solution or punishment points to a higher moral, but never the entire story. We know there are rotten things in the world—but I believe what the public now desires is to see the sweet and good things of life depicted rather than the sordid and impure. Heart interest, with human touches, tears, laughter and joy are the great things in the pictures of today—and the future.

Comedy Picture Production

By SIDNEY DREW

COMEDY is one of the most abused words in the photoplay dictionary. According to the motion picture usage of the word, all plays not dramas must be comedies, though Ben Johnson and Noah Webster are more definite on this subject. Perhaps you can remember fifteen years back, when Johnny, stepping on the hose and getting a wetting from the irate gardener, or Maude's young man being turned out of the front parlor at midnight by her father in a style of evening dress not intended for publication, was regarded as comedy. It would not be comedy today, and yet much of the current production will probably be looked back to with the same amazement at its acceptance that we now feel as we recall the fifty and hundred-foot copies that once were regarded as so great an advancement over the previous twenty-five and thirty-foot lengths.

Sidney Drew.

Comedy is and always will be an amusing story humorously told. If it is a good story, well told, then it is a comedy, but if it has no story or cannot be told humorously, then no amount of bolstering will ever make it into a comedy. You may add a lot of knockabout and perhaps get an acceptable farce or you can write in sensation and get travesty, but you cannot by these means change the unfit into comedy, and the broad use of "comedy" to apply to anything intended to be diverting is a misuse of an ancient and honorable word.

There are persons—very many persons—who prefer farce to comedy, who would rather see a man run over a train than to fear that the train will run over the man. There are perhaps even more who like to watch clowns break crockery than the artistic ten commandments. There is no reason why they should not have these preferences, but there is no good reason why they should call these things they like comedies and not by their proper names. If we had a more distinct nomenclature, I think that perhaps some good might accrue. Certainly it would give greater dignity to true comedy.

To my own way of thinking comedy is, first of all, a good story. It is a story and not merely an incident or collection of incidents. There must be a plot to obtain and hold the interest. This plot does not necessarily require profound depths, but there must be a distinct and well defined plot, however tenuous that plot may be. There must be a distinct and clearly defined objective upon which the interest may be centered, and the interest must arise from mental processes and not from mere mechanical appeal. Without a plot there cannot possibly be continuity of interest, and where this continuity is lacking, then the laughter rises from what is done at the moment rather than from why a thing is done.

Of course, the plot must be related in humorous action, if possible, just as the humorous story must be told in diverting phrase, but idea and incident must be combined to get the fullest effect. Incident alone cannot be depended upon, and incident alone cannot ever have a lasting effect.

Horseplay Not Humor.

But humorous action does not means gross horseplay. It does not mean that characters are to dash madly into scenes, trip over matches and fall out of the scene again. The action itself may not always be marked to be amusing. To take a crude illustration, suppose that a character in the story is about to thrash his ancient enemy. He feels so certain of victory that he bribes the policeman on the beat not to interfere. Now he goes to the field of battle and unexpectedly gets the worst of it. He is the first to call for the police and the scene flashes between the combat and the suborned officer placidly smiling at the sounds of the affray and never dreaming that it is his patron who is calling for aid. There is nothing humorous in the spectacle of a policeman on a street corner. In a comedy of incident he would have to suffer indignity to get a laugh. In the comedy with a plot, the plot makes the action humorous. We are not, in reality, laughing at the policeman. He is merely the symbol of the idea. We are laughing at the predicament into which our hero has unwittingly thrust himself. It is this thought and not the sight of the policeman at which we laugh. The policeman merely stands for the thought, yet it is humorous action within my meaning of the term in that the policeman represents the thought.

Appeal to the Mind.

In our own comedies Mrs. Drew and myself seek to appeal to the mind as well as to the eye, but to appeal to the mind through the eye. We value the advantage of the brightly written captions, but believe that these should supplement and not replace the comedy in the action. The clever caption may either prepare for the comedy situation or may follow and intensify it, but it is always an accessory and not the chief aim. It is absurd to talk of the caption as an intrusion to be avoided. It should be avoided only when it really is an intrusion. In a story which depends almost wholly upon captions to explain the story and gain the laughs, the captions will be intrusive because they usurp the functions of the pictured action, but the play without captions would not be better because of the absence of captions; indeed it probably would not be as good. The cleverness of an author displays itself in the expertness with which he handles captions rather than in his skill in avoiding them.

The same may be said to hold true of expression. As I said in these pages some time since, in my plays I seldom use profuse conversations among my characters, partly because they are unnecessary, but principally because they are unreal. If I meet a man whom I dislike, I do not tell him that I detest him. My dislike shows in my glance or in some slight but pronounced action. And if this is true in real life, it should be so upon the screen, which merely aims to reproduce life, but because facial expression and bodily gesture are used, it does not follow that these should be overdone with the careful emphasis of the circus clown. That is, I think, where many make an error, both in comedy and dramatic production. They become so definite as to be unreal, and at once all charm vanishes. In comedy, particularly, there should be an utter absence of exaggeration, if only for the reason that the temptation to overemphasize is so strong.

The fault of most productions, and in comedy particularly, is this: There is too great a tendency to regard the motion picture patrons as fools. It is unreasonable and decidedly uncomplimentary to those who support the silent stage to suggest that they have the mental equipment of a child of seven or eight. Doubtless there is a small percentage of adult patrons who cannot grasp the subtle, but why make all pictures to appeal to this comparatively small element? Why insult eighty per cent. of the patrons to please the lesser fifth? We are making our own comedies to please the intelligent. There are many who prefer knockabout work, but since there is a field amply able to support an appeal to more refined intelligences, we cater to that clientele and find it profitable. To me it is one of the amazing—and discouraging—things of photoplay that the intellectual standard is set too low to appeal to the intelligent. Why cannot we have more than one standard? The lover of melodrama might not appreciate Ibsen, but we have Ibsen and melodrama, and both are profitable. In the motion picture of the future I believe we shall find plays made to suit all minds, but not trying to suit all minds with the same play. That is the great present error.

The Comedy Scenario

By Agnes C. Johnston

"WHAT'S the trouble Agnes? Bad news? Static in your latest picture or has your star animal actor been captured by the dog-catcher again?" These are the questions that greet me, when I emerge from my "writery" with my smile up-side-down and an expression of gloom on my face that would make a thunder cloud look cheerful. "Nothing," I answer, "except that I've just finished a five-reel comedy scenario and all my chuckles have trickled down through my fingers into the typewriter and my sense of humor is dog-tired."

Agnes C. Johnston.

And that's the way it is. After writing a tragic drama I'm as gay as a lark, but nothing sobers me like the composition of a side-splitting comedy. I guess it's what James or some psychologist or other calls "reaction." Of course my S. of H. muscle is only fagged for the moment and every long sprint increases its power and makes it easier for me to "funnify" again.

But comedy is harder to write than drama, because it is more true to life, because it is simpler. And because it is harder, it is more fun, just as tennis is lots jollier than croquet. When I first started to perpetrate plots for pictures, I picked out all the things I didn't know anything about and gloomed and gloomed and gloomed. You see I haven't had much experience in the deeper emotions of life—I've never murdered anybody or been arrested or divorced or even in love. I guess every writer feels the call to write about the unknown, and of course it is easier, because he doesn't have to worry about whether it satisfies his sense of logic. He just gives free scope to his imagination.

I found, however, that when I picked out people in every-day life and used incidents and plots inspired by my own experience, the work was infinitely much better and more successful. I think the comedy scenario is the nearest to real life. I don't mean the slap-stick variety, which has a use of its own, but the comedy-drama about "just folks," with the smile, sandwiched in with the tear, each increasing the other's potency by power of contrast.

Comedy-Drama the Ideal.

The comedy-drama is the successful—the ideal photoplay. First of all because the moving picture is elemental. It is action and belongs to the cave-man style of entertainment. It provokes first emotions, and then thought through those emotions. And laughter and tears are primal feelings. So the comedy-drama is particularly adapted to the photo-play. For lacking the spoken word, the picture must be ever-changing, must be vital. It must have light and shade. It must also have continuity and a certain number of screened titles to explain the action. Therefore, whenever I have scenes or titles, which are necessary only for clarity, I make it a rule to "get a laugh" out of each one, by a little humorous twist and thus escape that bug-bear of an intricate plot—"dragginess."

Our old friend William Shakespeare knew well the value of comedy for contrast and was an artist when it came to "sandwiching." They say tears and smiles are very close together and to provoke the one is to have an easy way for the other. When you want your audience to get a real thrill, give them first a touch of fun and your "weepy" scene will be doubly effective, while the comedy relief from it will sparkle like sunshine after a storm.

Comedy Climax—New Device.

Another device, which is just beginning to have its place in the moving picture, is the comedy climax. The transition from tragedy to comedy, that surprises your audience, that makes them sit up and gasp out "Oh." There's nothing that I enjoy better than teasing my audience along this way, working up an exciting incident that threatens death and destruction to my fair heroine and then ending with a simple comedy twist that saves the day. It's sweet music to mine ears, when I sit watching an audience watching one of my pictures and hear that sudden startled gasp, which breaks into a chuckle and ends in a roar of laughter.

Aside from the fact that people want light entertainment now more than ever, because there is so much darkness in the world, is the element that humor has in all success. Consider the stage successes of this year, of all years, the great authors, all great men, all great things.

If they weren't humorous in theme they had a plentiful seasoning of fun. Even the tragic writers had a certain ironic wit. We might say that they were merely inverted humorists.

And why is comedy necessary to all success? Because it is life. Do you know a single person in the world—except yourself, for we always take ourselves seriously—who hasn't some peculiarity, some trait or characteristic, which you consider funny? A character in a story, play or picture must be true to life and therefore must cause us to smile once in a while. Not the loud guffaw of ridicule, but the laugh that comes from the heart—that means sympathy. The word humor is very near the word human. The three most successful movie artists of the day make us laugh. The human interest—the heart interest play is the comedy-drama—the most appealing heroine, the dear little smile girl. Another rule I have discovered in my writing is: "Introduce your leading character with a laugh."

A little touch of laughter makes the whole world kin. A sense of humor is the most powerful asset to health, wealth and happiness. It conquers all things. It is the beginning of smiles, sunshine, light, knowledge, philosophy! The world is crazy about it and always looking for a chance to exercise it. There is nothing that a man prides himself about more and no one likes to admit he hasn't got it. It means Courage, Faith, Hope and Charity all in one. It's the little sling-shot that's going to put all the horrible old Goliaths of Prejudice, Hate and Fear out of business. It is the little keynote of success and the comedy-scenario means the successful photoplay

I have my own little theory about the war, just as everyone else has. I just have a notion that if about three years ago someone had only tickled the Kaiser there wouldn't have been any war. Perhaps he was born without a funny bone, I don't know. Anyhow it's too bad he can't stop thinking up mean things to do to his enemies and see a few comedy moving pictures.

Comedy Favored by War

By Bryant Washburn

THE motion picture industry is on the eve of the greatest era of prosperity in its history. I can almost hear some pessimists, reading this now, remark: "Well, he's an actor; what does he know about it?"

I know this much, and maybe it may be something, after all. From the producing standpoint motion pictures are going to be better than they ever were before. They are better now than they have been, and there is every reason to believe that they are going to be better still. I can vouch for that because, being an actor, I am in the thick of the producing end of the game. And just as sure as these improvements keep up, just so sure is the prosperity of the motion picture industry going to increase. Of course, there are going to be failures. Some manufacturers and exhibitors are going to have to close their doors, never to open them again. But that will help the real industry, instead of injuring it. For the failures will be the "weak sisters"—the ones who refuse to keep up with the progressive strides of the business, and improve their pictures and exhibiting facilities. It will be their own fault, and deserving of no sympathy. With these "drones" of one of the busiest and biggest "hives" in commerce out, then the workers—the "live wires"—will have all the better chance to go ahead; and the public will get what it demands—better "movies."

Bryant Washburn.

I have been appearing personally in conjunction with showings of my "Skinner" pictures at various theaters in and around Chicago recently and have had an excellent opportunity to get in closer touch with exhibitors.

I am a firm believer in the closest co-operation not only between the manufacturer and the exhibitor, but between the actor and the exhibitor. In my talks with numerous proprietors of theaters wherein I appeared I got a score of good points which have helped me in my work since then. Undoubtedly the exhibitor is the man who knows the public best. He has his finger on the pulse of public desire always, and is the quickest to observe the changes in that desire. Therefore the producer must look to him in a great measure for indicators as to the kind of pictures which will make the biggest hits. And the actor can learn his audiences better.

It is the result of these little talks, as well as my own judgment, that leads me to predict that comedy-drama and straight comedy will predominate on the screen from now on. We are in the midst of war, even though we do not hear the guns roaring nor see the trainloads of wounded coming in. But even now the horror of the thing is beginning to take its hold on the country. And before long the full realization of what is happening to our loved ones across the seas in the trenches will give rise to a wave of sadness and depression which will cover the country.

The Red Cross is preparing to do its noble work in relieving the suffering of our soldiers on the battlefields. But who is going to relieve the suffering of the women and children and old men at home?

Motion pictures will be called upon to bear the brunt of this relief work, because motion pictures reach the greatest number of people in the widest range of territory. They are accessible to the rich and poor alike. And in the picture theaters the public will seek momentary relief from its mental depressions.

It is for that reason I predict that comedy-drama and straight comedy will be in greatest demand henceforth. In England and France the governments have taken a hand in providing something for the populace that will relieve the mental distress. Light forms of entertainment are encouraged and the public urged to patronize them. It brings a merciful relief to the doubly suffering country. I would not be at all surprised to see such a measure adopted in this country as well.

I want to conclude by taking this liberty of passing my good wishes on to exhibitors at the convention, and those unfortunately unable to attend. I want to thank them all for their patronage of my pictures, and to assure them that I am striving with might and main always to give them better pictures for their patrons and my patrons

Hopping to a Close-Up

EDWARD H. GRIFFITH, INTERVIEWED BY HIMSELF

IT WAS a warmish day. A pale, purplish haze hung over those purlieus of Nieuw Amsterdam collectively designated as the Bronx, as I journeyed thitherward.

"This," I reflected, "is what I call a rotten assignment."

The editor had said to me: "I want you to go up to the Edison studios, which are located on New York's 'last frontier' a trifle west of the Zoo, and have a talk with a director named Griffith.

"Yes," said I, "I've heard of him, only I didn't know he was back from Europe."

"No, no, that's not the fellow at all. I want you to get him to talk—a little common sense, if you can. Anyhow, get him to say something. Ask him about his experience as a director. Get him to tell you something about the problems he has to solve and how he solves them. Find how he gets best results with actors—everything you can about his business."

Edward H. Griffith.

I found Mr. Griffith in his office. He apologized for being there. An office is no place for a motion picture director to spend much time, he explained.

"There is only one place where a director spends less time," said Mr. Griffith, "and that is in bed."

"Is it true," I asked, "that a director is a genius entirely surrounded by boobs?"

"From his point of view—frequently, yes. But, looking at it from the other side of the camera, the director is frequently, a boob completely circumnambiated by geniuses. It is probably true that there was never a picture put on that at least one actor in the cast didn't feel he could do a better job of 'shooting-the-piece.' And in many cases he may have been justified in feeling that way.

"The best directors in the profession have been actors. Some of the most successful have been newspapermen or scenario writers and editors. Probably there are no fields of endeavor which better fit a man for the gruelling business of producing photoplays, than the Stage and the Fourth Estate. Both give him so much which is of inestimable value in making pictures.

"There is nothing esoteric about directing, unless common-sense and good taste and judgment are eleusinian mysteries. A director needs no bar of camphor ice upon his pale brow, no opium-eating, no shots-in-the-arm.

"But in a greater or less degree he does, absolutely, need a knowledge of human nature and the world. He needs at least a modicum of the dramatic instinct and he needs tact, patience, enthusiasm and some business ability. He should have imagination sufficient to supply what the scenario writer has failed to supply, or at least, enough to grasp what the writer has supplied.

"A director might be compared to an editor, in the more literary, rather than the journalese sense of the term. He correlates and he commentates. He is an interpreter and a translator, for he must translate terms of thought into action.

Story Director's First Concern.

"And, as the editor's first concern is the story, so should be the director's. That is the greatest single factor in his success or failure. Recognizing this, producers no longer hand to a director for production a story which does not enthuse and inspire him, in which he has not implicit confidence as a material for a picture. If he has any judgment at all, the exercise of it should begin there.

"He, nor anyone else, can arrogate to himself the omniscience of knowing just what the public wants. Specifically, that is. But, generally speaking, he knows the public wants any story which interests and entertains it. He knows the public will accept any story which is simple, human and true. And by this time he knows the public will not accept anything which is printed on film simply because it has had to accept a vast amount of rubbish in the past. The public is no longer any more awed by the photographed movement than it is by the printed word.

"It is noteworthy that most of the successful pictures have been made from stories written for the screen. While this matter is of the province of the scenario department, it so vitally concerns the director that a word is not irrelevant. It is an interesting fact, too, that probably never before has there been so much attempt at adaptation for the screen of material purely literary, or purporting to be so.

"Those who can write original stories for the screen are pitifully few. While there will always be literature worthy of transmutation to the screen, the production of motion pictures will not, in my belief, come into its own until it has proportionately the same quantity and quality of specialized talent that has made the production of magazines what it is in America today.

Meeting Demands of Writers.

"One of the director's frequent and important problems is meeting the demands of scenario writers unfamiliar with, or careless of the production end of the collaboration. Naturally, when this does not vitally concern the story, it is a problem the director can solve quickly. But, too often the problems do vitally concern the story.

"It would be folly to ask that every scenario writer shall have been a director, or that every director a writer for the screen. The more they know of each other's technique, the better will they genuinely co-operate. An interesting solution of the familiar travail of getting a story into a picture is found in the producing writer plan. As the stage has benefited by producing authors, so will the screen benefit by having trained as directors, though it is reasonable to assume that this happy combination will probably be little more the rule than it is in the theater.

"Cost is a problem confronting every director, whether he will or no, and every good director meets it squarely and attempts to solve it without any puerile excuses that 'it stultifies his art' or that he is 'an artist, not an adding machine.' No one of the geniuses of the American stage ever put on a play, no matter how lavish, but that he had estimated, in some terms or other, what the cost would be. I speak of the great producers, most of whom were their own directors. Certainly a motion picture director should not be compelled to devote time more valuable elsewhere, on accounting details, but he should be keenly interested in the subject of cost. Probably no good director ever uses everything he makes, but it is safe to say that no good director ever really wastes very much in any way.

"To my way of thinking the director's responsibility begins with the story and ends only when the critics have expressed their opinion of the picture. He should be concerned with every step in its production, particularly the cutting and assembling, which no one else should do if best results are to be had."

"I believe," said I, interrupting Mr. Griffith at this point, "that you've said about all they're going to print. You'd better say something about yourself."

He then confessed that until two years ago when he went to Thomas A. Edison, Inc., as scenario editor, he had been a newspaperman in Chicago and Cleveland, Ohio. He began directing about a year ago and since that time he has produced for the Edison Conquest Program two, three, four and five-reel pictures, among them "The Star Spangled Banner," "Black Beauty," "Scouring for Washington," "Barnaby Lee," "The Boy Who Cried Wolf" and "Billy and the Big Stick," the latter two from stories by Richard Harding Davis.

Specialization the Keynote to Success

By J. P. McGowan

Signal Director Believes the Specialist Travels Farther in the Long Run

NEARLY four years ago a well-known business man, on a visit to a studio at which I was then working, asked me, "How long is it going to take you motion picture producers to learn that if you are to succeed you must specialize?"

Then seeing that I did not exactly understand what he meant, he continued, "Today is the day of the specialist. The jack-of-all-trades of a few years ago is going down before the advance of the expert. Except in small towns and in the motion picture industry, every individual is specializing, not in one line, but in one branch of one line. If a man is a carpenter, that is where he stops. He does not set himself up as a painter, or a paperhanger, a plumber or a shingler. He is a carpenter.

Jack McGowan and His Crew.

"Likewise the same is true of the doctor. He no longer calls himself a 'cure-all'; he specializes. Attorneys devote their time not to all branches of law, but to one particular branch, either criminal, civil, or corporation law. And instead of the once popular all-around automobile repair man we now have the carburetor expert, the ignition specialist and even the tire expert.

"Think it over," he concluded. "There may be food for thought in it. Don't think your business is so much different from other businesses that one man can succeed in equal degree in the production of one-reel slapstick comedies and of five-reel vampire features. You would not engage a character man to play juvenile leads; you would not give a tragedian a role in a farce comedy; you wouldn't try to make an emotional actress work in an animal thriller, and yet the majority of you producers would feel capable of directing the production of all those types of films. What you need is specialization. Think it over."

I did think it over and the more I pondered the more I realized that there was indeed food for thought in his remarks. I found that the average producer considered himself able to produce any class of film from comedy to tragedy, from drama to wildest "meller," and that he thought he could do either equally well. I ran over the list of successful producers and found, to my surprise, that almost without exception they were men who had specialized in one particular line of work. One made short heart-interest stories; another made two-reel melodramas; a third, multiple-reel features, and so on. To be sure, most of them had tried several types before they struck the one for which they were best fitted. But having found that type, they had invariably stuck to it.

Having accepted the truth of my friend's theory, I applied it to myself and found that the one type of film I had produced with anything like consistent success was railroad melodrama. On the spot I concluded that must be my forte if I had one at all. From that day to this I have specialized in railroad films and I do not for a moment doubt that whatever small success may have been mine has been due almost entirely to this specialization.

In fact, so satisfied was I with the experiment, that when the Signal Film Corporation was formed I did not hesitate to suggest we continue to work along similiar lines. S. S. Hutchinson, president of the company, was quick to see the logic of my argument and to agree to a trial. That we regarded the trial as a success is proved by the fact that during the two years of our existence our original policy has never been changed. We decided to make railroad films exclusively and we have adhered rigidly to that policy. We have been tempted at times to deviate, but in each instance our better judgment has eventually decided us to let the old order remain unchanged.

A Dream In Realization

Interview with LOIS WEBER by ARTHUR DENISON

"MISS WEBER, the editor of the Moving Picture World wants a story from you. He would like you to talk about the thing nearest your heart if you can do it in a thousand words."

"That's an outlandish thing to ask any woman to do," Miss Weber replied, "to say an even thousand words and then stop. But say I may talk about anything I choose. That's an inducement. And I think I should like to talk about courage at this moment. It would be rather timely, anyway, wouldn't it? And if you have ever tried taking a cheque book and a good deal of real enthusiasm and in two weeks converting them into a motion picture studio, you'll understand the kind of courage I mean. I'm certain that it doesn't take more to face a regiment. That is what I have been doing; but when my studio is finished, it will be worth all the time and effort that have gone into it. For it will be unlike any other I know of.

Lois Weber.

"For a long time it has been a dream of mine, as I suppose it has been of many another director, to have a company and studio of my own. Now that dream is about realized, for I have the grounds; the stage is fast nearing completion and we are already in some of the buildings. And not only is it a complete and efficient studio, but it will be the pleasantest to work in of any of the large number I have seen. We have taken a charming old estate here in Hollywood and converted it into our workshop. We have acres of ground, and shade trees and hedges and gardens, to say nothing of a tennis court. That may sound sentimental and feminine to many; but I am sure that we will make better pictures all the way round from having an inspiring and delightful environment in which to work.

"Of course, the thing nearest my heart at the present time is the picture which I am making, and those which I am to do in the future. And my using the word 'sentimental' brings to mind a point about those pictures which I intend to produce. It lies in the difference between sentimentality and true sentiment. You know, I think, that I can count on the fingers of one hand all the pictures which I have seen that were founded on true sentiment. And the number that have sprung from purely sentimental ideas is appalling. Believe me, this is something more than a mere juggling with words. The fault isn't limited to the making of motion pictures. There's not a doubt in my mind but that ninety per cent. of the trouble in the world is caused by the general inability to distinguish between sentimentality and the matter of true sentiment; between the sham and the real. And the motion picture industry, or the motion picture art, if you prefer, is not going to attain the position of honor which it should occupy until it learns to make that distinction. I know what the common answer to all this is. That the public as a whole is sentimental and that unless you give them what they want you're not going to make any money. And let those who set themselves up as idealists chatter as much as they please about their art, the commercial side cannot be neglected. We're all in business to make money. But there are at least two ways of going about it. You can pander to the whim of the moment; or you can build with an eye to the future. Personally, I prefer the latter. Results may not come so fast; but they are surer and more stable when they do come.

"I've produced many pictures that I think contained a liberal dose of ideas, and they've made money. And I don't think the ideas were sentimental. To be quite frank with you, I used to be a good deal of a sentimentalist myself. But many years of hard work has taken that out of me. And after nine years of making motion pictures if I see anything clearly, it is that the frothy, unreal picture is doomed. I know that for a long time the picture public has liked to think that the hero can do no wrong. But that's an illusion which can't last forever. I think it's riding to a fall now.

The time can't be far off when the man or woman who comes to a picture is going to look about and realize that no such perfect creature as the time-honored hero exists either on this earth below or the heaven above. And they are going to even more willingly pay their nickels and their dimes to see a flesh and blood person whom they can recognize out of their own experience than they ever were to see a dummy concocted of all the impossible virtues a scenario writer could imagine.

"I've told you I have a pleasant studio in which to work. Naturally that pleases me. But the public isn't going to know that I stood in the shade of a California pepper tree when I directed such and such a scene. It is the quality of picture which comes out of that studio by which I shall stand or fall. And consequently I shall labor hard and long to make them constructive pictures of real ideas which shall have some intimate bearing on the lives of the people who will see them. If I can swing that big a contract successfully, I shall be happy.

"One thing which I have never been able to do before and which I shall do now that I have my own studio is to have every seat needed in a picture ready before I begin to take a scene. In that way I shall be able to take my whole picture practically in sequence. I think the inability to do that has been one of the greatest difficulties under which both actors and director have labored. Always before, it has gone something like this: Mrs. Smith is in her kitchen for Scene 8. Mrs. Smith comes back to her kitchen for Scene 200 and the director tells her, 'Now, Mrs. Smith, your husband has left you, your baby fallen out of the third story window and your bank has failed since you were here last. Please convey those things.' If the picture is taken in its proper sequence Mrs. Smith will have experienced those things before she is called upon to display their effect, and the characterization can be built accordingly. If I am able to carry out that one thing, it should go a long way toward knitting a picture into a more plausible and connected whole. And I have several kindred experiments which I shall give a fair trial.

"But in the end, I pin my faith to my story, for all the sumptuous settings in the world and a cast of two dozen stars will not and cannot carry a bad story to a legitimate and pronounced success. And I pin my faith to that story which is a slice out of real life."

Viewpoint of the Actress

By Eileen Sedgwick.

HAVE you ever stopped to consider to what extent man's brain has gone in the production of motion pictures? It would seem that long ago it was supposed to have reached its limit, but, on the contrary, it has just begun.

When I look around and think of the different directors I have worked with since leaving the legitimate stage three years ago, I marvel at the wonderful ideas and different styles of these clever men and women who are devoting their lives to an art that is giving more pleasure to millions of poor people than all other forms of entertainment combined, and at a very small cost.

Eileen Sedgwick.

Among all these wonderfully clever people you will hardly find two who work alike. From the director down to the camera man each has a different idea of shooting a scene and from different angles. I have seen on many occasions in the one company where the director, assistant and camera man each had a different suggestion about taking a scene, and it was hard to distinguish which was the cleverest idea.

And, say, how things have advanced in a few years!

I worked with a company down in Texas a few years ago which was supposed to have a million dollars behind it, but which was in fact started on a shoe string. My brother, sister and I were the only ones getting salary in the troupe. We had to get actors who would work for nothing to keep going, so you can imagine the pictures we turned out. Oh, but they were good! I have been with the Universal nearly three years and in that time have been with some of the cleverest people in the business and learned a great deal from them and got new ideas each day.

I have always made it a point to encourage cheerfulness and good fellowship on the set and help keep the company in good spirits and not let them get in a bad humor. This helps to suggest bright ideas and get some clever stuff in the director's mind instead of being temperamental and get him in a grouch.

I have made it a point never to be late at the studio, rain or shine, and am always made up and ready for the call.

If you do these things for your director and take a special interest in the firm you are working for, and not be always late and kicking, you will do yourself justice in your work and get better results in the making of better pictures.

Playing Pictures Difficult

By Thomas Santschi.

THE art of motion picture acting has certainly improved since I came into the profession seven years ago. At that time one stock company would enact any number of plays ranging from farce comedy to "Uncle Tom's Cabin." An actress or an actor in motion pictures six or seven years ago was obliged to play any number of roles, where today character men and women are often especially engaged for important parts.

To my mind the art of acting before the motion picture camera is as difficult, if not more so, than playing in the spoken drama. There one has the plaudits of the audience, the lights, and voice inflection to carry one along. In the motion pictures one has but the eye of the camera to work before and, believe me, that eye overlooks nothing. There are no lighted theaters, no audience to give encouragement, nothing but the studio and the commands of the director.

Tom Santschi.

Motion picture acting is a profession that requires constant study. To my mind one should continually advance or fall into the rear of the profession. Pantomime in itself is a difficult art. The movement of the feet, of the fingers, a shrug of the shoulders, all may be significant. Expression is of more importance in motion pictures than on the spoken stage. A twitching of the facial muscles, a covert glance, a movement of the eyebrows all may be utilized to convey some unusual meaning to the audience. And the film actor must be continually striving to excel, must not for a second permit his work to lag and all this without the stimulation that comes to the artist in spoken drama.

It has been said that time and the movies wait for no man. Time has created many changes in motion pictures within the past few years until today the acting is more artistic, the photography better, the atmosphere realistic, and the productions more elevating in every detail.

The Weekly News Reel

Beginning and Development of a Screen Feature

THE weekly news reel has undoubtedly educated more persons to a respect and a fondness for motion pictures than any other medium. In the days when the word "movies" was generally used in contempt, many persons of taste and discrimination were attending the picture theaters for the sole purpose of seeing one reel only of the advertised program—the news reel. Such persons eventually became steady patrons and found enjoyment in the dramas, comedies, and educationals making up the rest of the program. The debt of the motion picture business to the news weekly is enormous nor is it sufficiently appreciated.

Charles Pathe.

The first news weekly ever devised and the first ever to take concrete form and be placed upon the market was the Pathe Journal in France, the idea for which was Charles Pathe's own. The Pathe Journal was first put upon the screen in 1910.

In 1911 J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Freres in the United States, became convinced that the news weekly idea was one that should prove to be especially valuable in the United States. At the time the Pathe Journal had not yet demonstrated that the new idea was profitable, but Mr. Berst saw that in it were great possibilities. In 1911 Pathe was one of the group of ten licensed manufacturers making up the General Film Company. Mr. Berst proposed to the other licensed manufacturers that they should each furnish negative material for a news reel, these negatives to be printed, edited, titled and assembled at the Pathe offices in Jersey City, the finished product to be released through the General Film Company, and each manufacturer to be paid from the receipts according to the amount of negative received from him and incorporated into the weekly.

This plan was favored by practically all the other licensed manufacturers. The Vitagraph Company, however, chose to reserve independence of action and at once, upon learning of Mr. Berst's plan, began to plan a monthly magazine of current events. This individual action, of course, ended the hope of accomplishing anything in common in the matter, and Mr. Berst's negotiations were at once broken off.

Mr. Berst, however, was not satisfied to let the matter drop. With characteristic promptitude he immediately began the manufacture of a Pathe News Reel, to be called the Pathe Weekly. It is said that no sooner had he left the meeting of the licensed manufacturers at which he learned that his original plan would not go through than he telephoned the Pathe offices in Jersey City, giving orders that the assembling of suitable news pictures be begun at once. Certain it is that the next issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD dated July 29, 1911, contained a full page advertisement announcing the birth of Pathe's Weekly, "an illustrated magazine on a film," "the news of the world in pictures," to be issued every Tuesday On Tuesday, August 1, the first number was released.

J. A. Berst.

The Moving Picture World in an editorial in its issue of July 29, 1911, says: "Beginning on the first of next month the moving picture theaters of this country will go into active and, we believe, successful competition with the illustrated periodicals and magazines, for they will be able to show the important news of the world, not in cold type or in still pictures, but in actual moving reproduction. The exhibitors will give their patrons no descriptions or photographs, but the things themselves, 'just as they moved and had their being.' This novel idea, which will revolutionize pictorial journalism the world over is called 'The Weekly Journal,' is edited by the Pathe Freres, and will appear on the screens of the moving picture houses every Tuesday. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD was privileged to see a European edition of this marvelous picture sheet, and after seeing it we readily believed the statement of a Pathe representative to the effect that the demand in Europe for this film of the world's events far exceeds the demand for ordinary films, and that the exhibitors have gained a new and steady clientele. The reel opens with the title page, 'The World's Events of Last Week,' gives the name and address of the editor, with the telephone number, and then begins its 'articles' with a regulation headline or two. The first 'page' showed a fine moving picture of the flower carnival at Nizza, with views of the aviation meeting held in connection with the festival; the second 'page' transports us into Russia, where at St. Petersburg we witness among the masses of snow the strange obsequies of a Corean prince, who had committed suicide there; the third 'article' took us into Spain, where we had a fine view of King Alfonso laying a cornerstone, and afterwards assisting at some naval manoeuvres; then followed a reproduction of the meeting of the Kings of Italy and Montenegro, a great event in Switzerland, showing the cleverness of the Swiss men on snowshoes; next a big fire in an English town, then the ravages of a furious storm on the Sicilian coast and other events of contemporaneous importance and interest.

"The American edition will of course show more American events, but will give equally good pictures of the more sensational happenings in Europe.

Just Like a Newspaper.

"How is it done? We answer: How does the newspaper gather its news from every quarter of the globe? Simply by organization. The reporter with the pen will be superseded by the reporter with the camera. Camera correspondents will be on the alert in every part of the civilized world, regular correspondents and free lance correspondents, just the same as the members of the staff of a newspaper. The world will be treated to that rarest of rare things—a reporter who does not, in fact, who cannot lie. The events will come to us not as the policy of the paper would want to color them, but as they actually occurred. That is true reporting. The elder Bennett remarked years ago that the secret of success in journalism lay in being close to the place 'where hell is going to break loose next.' Nothing will escape the cameraman."

Some weeks later the Vitagraph Company issued a monthly news film called "Current Events." Competition with the Pathe Weekly, which had already become well established and was making rapid strides, proving unprofitable, it was discontinued, leaving the Pathe Weekly in sole possession of the field for a considerable time.

H. C. Hoagland was the first editor of the Weekly, thus combining two positions in one, as he was also doing the advertising and publicity work of Pathe. The Weekly grew so fast that it was necessary to have a man devote his entire time to the editing of it and L. E. Franconi, who already had been for some years with Pathe, was placed in charge. During the first year of the Weekly's existence, the number of prints released attained the high figure of 95 copies.

Mr. Berst continually added to his staff of cameramen so that from the first instead of being dependent upon France for the bulk of its material the subjects shown were 60 per cent. American.

Issued as a Daily.

In the Spring of 1914 the Weekly, at that time being issued twice a week, was put upon a daily basis, several hundred feet being issued each day, printed upon Pathe non-inflammable stock, and sent by mail direct to the exhibitors. The name was changed from the time honored "Pathe Weekly" to "Pathe Daily News," and William Helms, a New York newspaper man, was made editor. The innovation was successful, but the outbreak of war made the receipt of the "non-flam" raw stock very uncertain, and as the success of the daily release idea depended to a large extent upon this stock it was decided to put the "News" back upon the old twice a week basis. The word "daily" in the title was dropped and "Pathe News" became the title.

In the summer of 1914 Mr. Helms resigned the editorship and L. E. Franconi again took charge. Mr. Franconi was assigned to other work in 1915 and was succeeded by P. D. Hugon, former editor of the Pathe Gazette in London. In 1916 Mr. Hugon resigned and was succeeded by Eric Mayell, also previously connected with the Pathe Gazette. After a few months Mr. Mayell resigned and was succeeded by Emanuel Cohen, his former assistant, who has been editor ever since.

Hearst Becomes Interested.

Late in 1913 William Randolph Hearst allied himself with the Selig Polyscope Co. in getting out a new news reel called the "Hearst-Selig Weekly." A year later this arrangement was discontinued, and a new alliance made by Mr. Hearst with the Vitagraph and the Hearst-Vitagraph Weekly started. With the formation of the International Film Corporation, Mr. Hearst's own film organization, the Hearst-Vitagraph Weekly was discontinued, and the International Weekly became the successor. On January 1, 1917, when, by terms of a contract entered into by Mr. Berst of Pathe and E. A. McManus of the International, all International productions were released through the Pathe Exchanges, the Pathe News and International Weekly were consolidated under the title of the Hearst-Pathe News and the first combined issue released January 10.

Emanuel Cohen.
Present Editor of the Hearst-Pathe News.

With the amalgamation the Hearst newspapers in the various large cities of the country began to carry advertising on the Hearst-Pathe News on a scale hitherto unknown. Many half and quarter page Ads are being published and the effect upon booking and theater attendance has been marked.

Under the present arrangement the pictures are secured by the many cameramen of the Hearst organization, located in all the chief centers of the United States and in many foreign cities as well. The negatives are selected, edited, titled, printed and assembled in the Pathe offices of the News in Jersey City. Mr. Cohen is in charge of this work.

The Hearst-Pathe News is today living up to the high traditions of its past. For six years it has been adding to the reputation for timeliness, quality and interest, which it acquired at its birth back in 1911. Always a hobby of Mr. Berst his plans for its future contemplate an even greater efficiency and an even wider distribution, and proud of the many "scoops" that the News has made in the past, it is his desire that they may be increased in the future.

Filming a News Event for the Screen

By Capt. Bob Reynolds

AMATEURS, There Is Money in Topical Films!" Thus runs an advertisement in a recent issue of a trade journal. The writer does not propose to dispute the truth of this statement, but only to remark that too frequently the money is the amateur's. He sees the event as the biggest thing that ever happened in his town and "grinds his head off"; whereas the professional imagines it only as part of a news weekly and wisely refuses to think further than one hundred feet of stock. Our experience has shown that the average amateur (and this includes the most of the so-called "professionals"), uses a great deal too much stock on one event.

For an actual illustration of the proper way to handle a news event I will take the launching of the submarine L-8, filmed at Portsmouth Navy Yard by L. C. de Rochemont, Jr., of Boston.

The light was rather poor, so the cameraspondent wisely avoided the events inside the construction shed. This cost him a scene showing the actual christening of the boat, but by forgetting the inside scene he was able to set up outside and get a fine picture of the bow of the submarine plunging into the water He turned in 82 feet of film, as follows:

1. Submarine slides down the ways and plunges into the water, being followed by camera until mooring ropes bring it to a stop—25 feet.
2. Change of location, and scene showing tugs towing submarine back to shed—25 feet.
3. View of boat and crew, panoraming over boat—20 feet.
4. Close-up of Miss Nancy Gill, sponsor—10 or 12 feet.

All four scenes were accepted; there was hardly any cutting on them; and he received a check for 80 feet at our "scoop" rates.

There is a practical illustration of how to handle a news event. It is obvious that Mr. de Rochemont could have taken only the actual launching of the submarine, but he had sufficient sense of news values to round out the story by proper attention to the most interesting angles of it—but without padding.

Now for the wrong way to handle an event. Without going into details, let me say merely that we recently received a "story" of an event which included a parade. The parade was not the only side of the event, nor was it the most important part.

The camera man set up his machine on a housetop about six stories above the street and took one "shot"—all of the parade, and over 200 feet long. Not content to let it go at that, he had another man grinding away at the same thing, and for the same length, down on the street. The event was really news, and we would have liked to play it up big. As it was, only 25 feet could be used.

To sum up: The best way is to take short scenes, from 20 to 30 feet, of the most interesting sides of an event. Negative is judged by: news interest, action, human interest and photographic excellence. Novelty is the real acid test—avoid the hackneyed and every-day. This goes for parades, recruiting, drilling and everything else that has been done to death.

Footage will be sold in direct proportion to the amount of effort and brains a cameraspondent puts into his handling of the story. Don't think you are selling the event itself; remember, you are selling a photographic report of the event. If you count on selling only events that are big enough in themselves to swing the sale, no matter how poorly reported, you will find it a long, long time between checks. You must depend o nthe average run of the news in your vicinity, and it is safe to say that more of it will "get by" with proper handling than with indifference.

Watch the composition of your picture; try to improve your photography every time; watch your light, focus and frame; and use your head. Try to see an event through the eyes of an editor. Don't be a crank turner; be a star reporter.

Not an Imagination

By Earl R. Hewitt.

FOREBODINGS of past years notwithstanding, I believe the present-day photoplay story outlook more promising than ever. Four years' direct connection with the work of passing upon manuscripts submitted for screen production has witnessed innumerable new developments and changes for the better, without exception.

One by one our foremost writers of fiction have heard and responded to the call of the screen, bringing with them mature ideas of construction and drama, and thus offering a rich field from which the screen story may draw the virility needed to survive. Many of the old time literary lights of the screen drama faded, giving place to the brighter and more versatile luminaries of the present.

But not alone to the established fiction writer belongs the honor. Many of our most successful screen writers never even attempted a short story or novel, but in the school of experience developed that practical, balanced visualizing faculty which characterizes the true photoplaywright

Imagination is not all there is to successful photoplay composition. The mind's eye must clearly perceive the actual visual values of the various situations to be presented, at the same time clearly and logically balancing the development of the plot to meet the peculiar requirements of screen construction. The mind must pin itself down to cold-blooded plausibility and probability in order to pass muster with our average hypercritical audience of today. In this respect many of our most gifted fiction writers have signally failed with screen work, relying too strongly upon enchanting, forceful and pulsating word painting for effect and forgetting that the screen regards nothing as paramount unless it be clear and concisely directed action of the necessary characters of the story. Side lanes and blind alleys leading to no really definite conclusion must be avoided as the plague and only that which logically and necessarily leads up to or down from the climacteric situation retained.

The most successful screen story is that whose plot development follows the lines of the inevitable. The most satisfactory photoplay is that which simply must happen as it does and which at the same time pleases or directs the observer's innate sense of proportion.

A narrative of the various interesting and curious incidents and experiences of the writer in connection with his daily work would fill quite a bulky volume, with a laugh, a thrill or a sob in every line, but such material would hardly find place in one short article, suffice to say it is indeed gratifying to witness the upward, ever upward, trend toward better, cleaner and more forceful stories, and, after all, "the story's the thing," the living, pulsing heart of this thoroughly great and humanity-serving industry.

Some Men and Women Who Direct

MAKING pictures to supply exhibitors with entertainment for their patrons requires the services of a host divided into several divisions—actors, authors, directors, cameramen, editors and cutters, exchange-men and sales agents; did you ever stop to think how much the production of fifty-two pictures a year means to the welfare of the nation?

JOSEPH DE GRASSE
directing
ELMER CLIFTON
Director
Cameraman - KING GRAY
JACK CONWAY directing cameraman EDWARD KULL

Reference to the man who supplies the money is omitted—this is not the time or place to sing praises to the man or men who really mean most to the picture proposition. Neither can the salesman, the scenario writer or the scores of other workers in the field be encompassed in what is here to be said—for this is all about directors, and something about their cameramen.

Snapshots have been made of Ida May Park, the one woman who turns out Bluebirds; of her husband, Joseph De Grasse; of Jack Conway, and Elmer Slifton.

Before Ida May Park undertook the direction of Dorothy Phillips, she occupied her time in turning out and tuning up scenarios for her husband, Joseph De Grasse. The demand for Miss Phillips' services to the Bluebird program developed so insistently that Miss Park was called from her station as general assistant to Mr. De Grasse early this spring.

That Miss Phillips might maintain her average of one appearance a month on the program both Mr. and Mrs. De Grasse bent their efforts and skill to the work of keeping up with their energetic star. "The Flashlight" was Miss Park's first Bluebird and from that production she has alternated and will alternate with Mr. De Grasse in directing Bluebird's most energetic star. King Gray is the cameraman for Miss Park.

Not to have his sails blanketed in Miss Phillips' breeze of energy, Mr. De Grasse jumps into a part every now and then—for he is an actor of the old school who has played every character that grease paint can apply to. He introduced Louise Lovely to Bluebirds, away up in the small numbers of the series, and last December presented Miss Phillips in "The Price of Silence." July is the eighth month to pass since then, and Miss Phillips has been seen on the Bluebird program eight times with plans laid for her monthly appearance as long as Mr. De Grasse and Miss Park can keep pace with her.

Jack Conway has displayed a fine sense of the artistic in his direction of Ella Hall. He has made her the distinctive "child type" of the program, and it would not be hard to find many people (even outside of Bluebird's publicity department) who will declare that Miss Hall makes about the best, most natural and humanly expressive "little girl" the screen affords. Be that as it may—Edward Kull grinds the crank at Mr. Conway's command.

Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, after a year under their original director, have now passed to the supervision of Elmer Clifton, and the first result of Mr. Clifton's direction will soon be forthcoming.

Thrills In Serial Making

By PEARL WHITE

FOR many, many moons the most thrilling day in the week to me was Saturday. And this day was the most thrilling, not because we had to do exceptionally dangerous stunts or because I was called upon to perform at the risk of my life, but because that was the day the gentle kindly treasurer of the company approached me with a winning smile and placed in my hand the weekly stipend I receive for doing stunts for the screen.

But those blase days are done. I never know any longer what day of the week will be the most thrilling. It used to be bad enough when I had to perform from the ideas evolved by the fertile brain of George Brackett Seitz. However, I got used to his stunts and the thrill of the Saturday pay day, outdistanced that of any other work day during the week. I thought I was settling down for a more or less humdrum existence, when I was told that the name of the next serial in which I would appear would be "The Fatal Ring."

Pearl White.

"Nice cheerful sort of a name," I remarked, "but what will I do with it when I get it?"

I found out soon enough. I discovered that the Pathe scenario committee decided they could co-operate with George Brackett Seitz and Fred Jackson, the authors of "The Fatal Ring," and could design stunts for me to do that the two-hundred horse power brain of G. B. S. never could think of.

Work took on a new interest with me. I thought I had tried out all the stunts that could be worked in the motion pictures. I had gone down in submarines, made trips in balloons and airships, skidded gleefully over the edge of a precipice in an automobile, had fallen down cliffs, had been thrown down fire-escapes, had jumped out of the window on the fourth floor of a burning building, and had done such gentle joyful things that thrilled the audiences, but "The Fatal Ring" put me into new situations.

From a very early age I have had a positive fondness for doing reckless things and the more danger there has been connected with them, the more pleasure I have taken in them. However, the scenario department and Mr. Seitz received my blessings—I don't think—when they decided I should satisfy my craving for excitement by trying to land in the slip that rightfully belonged to a ferryboat and into which the said ferryboat was steaming at full speed. I did the stunt all right, but there was the thrill of a year of Saturdays bottled up in about an hour or less than an hour's work that day.

In the first place, I had been swept out into the river through an underground channel after a fight with the villain. The ferry slip was the handiest and also the most dangerous place to land. I am the heroine in "The Fatal Ring" and naturally I couldn't exercise the good judgment that I would have exercised as Pearl White and grabbed a log to float down the river until I was picked up. I had to swim into the slip. It was too expensive to hire a ferry boat for this stunt, in addition to which the director decided he could get better atmosphere if the passengers on the boat were real passengers and not motion picture extras.

The director had planted on all boats going into the slip, for about a half an hour, some of his cameramen together with men who would keep on the lookout for me and notify the captain of the ferryboat that some poor nut was usurping the landing place that belonged to his craft. I asked the director to pick out scouts who had good eyesight, but I feel certain that the one on the boat coming into the slip when I was occupying it, could never pass the army test for good eyesight.

Thinking it was all fixed and that the captain of the ferryboat would certainly slow down in plenty of time to let me get out of the water of the river, I swam along with one eye on that monstrous ferryboat and the other eye open for the hero, who is supposed to rescue me. They loomed up about the same time, but our scout on the ferryboat didn't tip the word to the captain that we were in the briny until it was too late for him to stop and make the rescue as per the schedule of the director and as it was written in the scenario. The wash of the tide, together with the headway of the boat, brought it into the slip.

The scout on the boat woke up, notified the captain that we were in danger and the engines were reversed. The backwash, started by the paddles, and the undertow in the slip, made it almost impossible for us to swim in close to the pier.

When, after hard work, we did get close enough for one of the pier hands or longshoremen to throw us a rope, the ferryboat was almost on top of us. The faint I was supposed to simulate became almost a real one. The hero was the only one supposed to grab for the rope thrown us, but, believe me, I forgot for the time being that I was the heroine and was expected to be real ladylike and allow the hero to save me in the proper fashion and I grabbed for that rope too.

At that, my grabbing almost crabbed the game. Henry Gsell, who plays the part of the hero, and I, had decided on our course of action. I was supposed to let him do all the rescue stunt, but when I grabbed the rope it threw him out of his plan. The only thing that I know was that I was thankful that the longshoremen were two husky ones and were used to handling the ferryboat. They yanked us out of the water in rapid fashion, but at that not any too rapid to suit us, or to dodge the ferryboat.

The captain of the ferryboat came down on the pier to look me over when his boat was properly docked. His looks put me in mind of a happening in my life when I was a child of five or six. I had received repeated warnings from my father and mother to keep away from a certain part of our yard, because rattlesnakes had re-entered it and made it their own. This rattlesnake den attracted me and I used to delight in going to it and teasing the reptiles until they made jumps at me. I liked to hear them rattle their warning before they struck. My father caught me at this amusement one day after he had told me to stay away from that section of the ground and decided that radical action was required. I will never forget the punishment I got, but after that I left rattlesnakes alone. The ferryboat captain looked as though he would like to duplicate the punishment my father awarded me, so as to teach me to let ferryboat slips alone after that.

One of the things I have learned thoroughly in the motion picture game is to have implicit confidence in my director. When I am given some particularly risky thing to do I am serenely confident that the director is looking after me, and I always figure out that in case my slip does occur, it will happen because it is my time to go. A person to do "movie" stunts properly has to be a fatalist. I know that I am, and each stunt that I do I am absolutely confident that I am going through it successfully. This feeling is absolutely essential. Without it, I know that I would have perished long ago.

Getting Close to the Public

By Harold Lockwood

Star Follows Popular Trend Through Criticisms in Letters—Value of Studying Honest Criticisms of Each Picture by Letters from Fans

THAT the photoplay star should make a thorough and continual study of the viewpoint of the individual motion picture fan as well as considering the verdict of the professional reviewer of the pictures has come to be my belief since I have developed a system of checking up the criticism of my pictures which come from individual fans throughout the United States and other countries where Metro pictures are shown. With this idea in mind, I have made a careful study of the results of my work as it appears to the average patron of the theater, thousands of whom write to the actors, in many cases giving honest criticisms as well as merely expressing their general admiration or asking for photographs.

Harold Lockwood.

By looking over the daily correspondence of a motion picture actor, the interesting fact develops that not all of the letters by a jugful come from silly young girls, but that hundreds come in weekly which contain serious statements concerning the impression which certain pictures made on them. Many of these letters are not from "movie struck" youngsters, but from people of education and refinement, who write intelligently and frankly their impressions of the pictures.

Many of these fans write to say that they did not like certain pictures as well as others. Some write honest criticisms of the action, the direction, the photography, and other matters concerning the picture. And all these are valued criticisms because they come straight from the public, which is the ultimate consumer in picture making. The actor or his secretary soon discovers by reading the regular "fan mail" that there are certain correspondents in different parts of the country who write almost as soon as they have seen each picture. Perhaps they did not like "The Promise" as well as "Big Tremaine." When they tell why ,and say so honestly and frankly, as they usually do, their words are appreciated and very helpful to the star, who wishes to follow his audience closely and follow their dictates. The letters are in a certain sense the same as applause on the speaking stage. Were it not for the daily mail, the film star would be considerably at sea except for the reviews and the box office returns.

The star can tell where his pictures have been shown for the first time by the sudden influx of mail which comes periodically from certain quarters. For instance, one of our pictures was some months ago shown in a town of Porto Rico. A few weeks later came a deluge of mail from that island, in which the Porto Ricans told us what they thought of us. Since the pictures which are shown in the United States go on in England and Australia about one month later, similar letters come from these places in due sequence about thirty days after the returns have begun to come in from the fans in this country.

To get down to the heart of the public should be the earnest desire of every photoplay actor who takes his work seriously. The professional reviewers are necessary and extremely valuable because they judge the pictures from a technical standpoint. They judge them through the eyes of practised care, but no matter how thorough their work, can say at best, "Perhaps this picture will get over. If the public likes it, it will be because, etc." The critic predicts the success or mediocrity of the picture. When the letters come from the fans, however, after the showing of the picture, the producers and star know how the picture actually did or did not get over. It is obvious, therefore, that both the professional reviewer and the amateur critics are of great service to the actor. One is just as valuable as the other, and the results of the observations of both are extremely helpful.

One kind of letter which the photoplay star would appreciate receiving in greater numbers is that from the exhibitor. Many of these, having stood outside their houses as the crowds went out after seeing a picture, have observed some of the remarks and passed them on to the actor whose work was commented upon. These random tips, direct from the persons most concerned, are the kind which give the actor the best guide for future work. Letters of this kind from exhibitors are also of great value to the producer of the pictures, for they put him very close to the heart of the public.

Greater Opportunities in Pictures

By WILLIAM FARNUM

IT MAY be rank heresy on my part, but it does appear that the opportunities are greater in pictures. In no whit is an actor's talent lessened when he enters the silent world of expression. Rather, it seems to me like there must be a broader bent.

One can feel himself grow in a master story of the screen, such as "A Tale of Two Cities," in which adaptation I developed a dual role—a seemingly impossible requirement were I called upon to enact similar roles in the actual speaking play. In the feature picture, "When A Man Sees Red," soon to have an appearance, I have opportunities that never could come to one on the stage. This forthcoming production is an adaptation of Larry Evan's famous story of "The Painted Lady," which ran in the Saturday Evening Post. The sailorman, Luther Smith, is a lovable, strong man, who is grievously wronged, and he develops another side – the strong, red-blooded fighting man, whose fighting instincts come to the fore in the most remarkable fighting climax ever witnessed, either on the stage or in pictures. I do not believe that it is possible to reproduce the gripping scenes of this picture on the more prosaic stage.

William Farnum.

The rugged, red-blooded type of man is displacing the merely pretty man. Because a man is pretty to look at, because he is big and athletic does not mean so much these days. Might and muscle mean nothing, unless there is strength of mind, the subtle power which makes a man realize that, though his opponent may be stronger, more powerful physically, yet it means nothing compared to the superior knowledge—knowledge of right—and the will that engenders it. All of which the picture camera lends itself for a more effective portrayal, it seems to me, than in viva voca expression.

It is also my opinion that actors and actresses will be required to speak their lines in motion pictures, the same as on the legitimate stage. It seems to me that the growth of the newer part will be along these lines.

Action will always be the paramount note in pictures. The public demand action and realistic effects. It is also undoubtedly true that great advances will be made to secure new and better photographic effects, but, after all, the foundation of all good pictures is based on the scenario. And in the higher grade scenario there are always scenes in which the only action is the good old-fashioned word of mouth kind—with the appropriate gestures.

Motion picture making has long since passed the point when mere arm-waving and finger-pointing is sufficient Pantomime is now out of the question. The actor must say something, or the scene falls flat, and the stronger he says it, the better the result. Why not, therefore, make the scene perfect by requiring a definite intelligent speaking part? Animated photography has made such a wonderful success largely because it can and does give the required impression of realism—a far more perfect realism—than even the stage.

In the primary stage of motion pictures—in the stage of one-reelers—most of the actors' dialogue consisted of raillery and "joshing" at one another's expense. Man, ever ready to fit the necessity to the occasion, saw ahead of the scenario requirements and the director, and invented little talks or soliloquies of his own, and so it soon became apparent that this was best so.

Public Adept at Lip Reading.

Spoken parts, especially for the stellar roles, seem to me to be inevitable, if one is to give his best to the production. Most of the public, too, are becoming adept in the art of lip-reading, and can carry the story in their minds from the words that are uttered, as well as from the film.

The motion picture made many near-experts in the art of lip-reading. This means that the day when the player could, and did, say anything has gone. It will never return.

Anyone who attends a motion picture show can recognize at once such expressions as "Curse you!" from the villain, or "I love you" from the hero. Here the obviousness of the situation has helped to explain the words. Speaking parts would make the reverse equally true. The use of words would help explain the situation.

Lip-reading certainly must be considered in the development of the film. Perhaps you will recall the incident a short time since, when the inmates of a deaf and dumb asylum saw a well known picture and then returned home, protesting against the language used on the screen. It is just such occurrences that will in all probability take the term "Silent Drama" out of the motion picture dictionary.

A humorous incident in "The Doctor," my latest play, an adaptation of Ralph Connor's beautiful love story, caused one deviation from my usually set rule. Some of the scenes in the story were taken near my home at Sag Harbor. An old neighbor, one of the characters of the village, had been requisitioned for the scene where I am joyfully showing a letter bringing the news that a favorite brother is coming home. He is a droll old chap, and when I have said "See, Tom, Dick is coming home," the old fellow looked up with the most natural expression and says, "Shure, that's fine; I'm glad to hear it." The line wasn't in the scenario. The old fellow just naturally spoke that which came to him. And he nearly broke up the scene when he finished with "By gorrah, Bill, we're a couple of dandies." My deviation came when I replied "Yes, Tom, it takes us fellows of the old school!" I don't think Tom quite understood the line, and I am wondering if it will fit in the picture, especially if some of our lip-reading experts see it.

Alice Brady Talks About Dress and Make-Up

By Margaret I. MacDonald

Star of the World Film Gives a Few Pointers on Preparing for the Screen

ALICE BRADY had just moved into her Lexington Avenue home, "but if you don't care I don't care," had been her cheery assertion over the 'phone. And so at her suggestion that our interview be made a thing of the past, that very evening I meandered downtown on a slow old Lexington Avenue car that came along just when it felt like it.

At the ring of the bell, Miss Brady opened the door herself, peeping smilingly and apologetically from behind it, for she was delightfully in negligee, and it was unmistakably evident that she had "just moved in." A divan set before a hearth on which the embers had lately died, served as a charming and comfortable spot in which to thresh out the question of the picture game; and this only when Toots, her little black and white dog, had decided, after being threatened with the kitchen and the dark, to allow me to occupy one end of the couch alone.

Alice Brady.

While Miss Brady is an indefatigable worker, turning out a picture every four weeks, still she is not yet enamoured of the screen. "On the spoken stage," said she, "the sound of your own voice and the sound of those speaking to you adds stimulus to your work. You are working up to something—you are working toward a climax. In the pictures you don't get a chance to work up to a climax, you just jump in anywhere; you have a certain bag of tricks that you draw from continually, and now and then you scratch your head and try to think just what you did in portraying this or that emotion."

"Of course," I said, "there are some players who do the same old tricks over and over again——"

"Yes, we all do it," she interrupted, emphatically. "We all have our little bag of tricks.

"And another thing about the spoken stage," she continued, "every night you have something new. For instance, if your audience likes comedy, then you must pound out the comedy points; and you never play to two audiences in the same manner, because each audience you play to is of a different temperament."

Miss Brady's keenest loss in the silent drama seems to be not alone the stimulus gained in the sound of the human voice in the working up to dramatic climaxes, but also the response of an audience. "Sometimes," said she, "I sing or do other little things around here and there, and really getting back to something where I can hear my own voice and feel the response of those around me so intoxicates me that you would actually think I had taken some dope or something of the sort."

Then we discussed briefly the matter of illumination in pictures, when she asserted her belief that there must be a field in the moving picture business for the artist photographer, the man who understands, for instance, the subduing of backgrounds and the artistic outlining of faces and forms. "I consider," she said, "that I could more easily do without my director than the best services of my camera man, for I know that my camera man can make or break me.

"In the making of a picture," she continued, "too great an effort to develop background is apt to destroy the effect of the faces. In trying to bring out every little detail in the background, faces are frequently burned out and consequently have a white, chalky appearance."

I was anxious, too, to get her idea of dressing for a picture, and discovered that it consisted mainly of lines. "I try to pay attention to the lines of my gowns," she said. "For instance, I am inclined to be a large woman, so therefore I avoid wearing loose garments. I try to maintain slender lines, and usually wear gowns that cut me off a bit, for I believe that picture audiences like small women rather than large women."

"But you have also to be careful about the design in the fabric of your gown, have you not?" I asked.

"No, that does not matter so much," she replied, "as long as the design does not run to extremes. Ordinarily anything that is becoming on the street is becoming in a picture unless, of course, the gown happens to be one that is largely dependent on color for its beauty.

"Of course, in dressing for a picture," she continued, "I pay particular attention to the characterization and try to wear the kind of clothes that the character I am playing would be liable to wear.

"I notice," she said, "that a number of the women in pictures wear the same clothes over and over again for different characters, and I fancy they get the kind of things they want to wear themselves, regardless oftentimes of what the character they are going to interpret really calls for. I try to buy the clothes that fit the part I am playing; consequently very often I go around looking like that character because I don't want to throw the clothes away."

How to Treat the Face.

I was curious also to know why so many players treated their faces, and particularly their eyes, to an unnecessary and ugly daubing of make-up for the taking of close-ups. The reason why, of course, was not explained; but I learned that Miss Brady's method of making up her eyes for picture work consisted in a touch of brown rubbed with the thumb across the lid of each eye to emphasize the shadow where it really ought to be, a slight beading of the eyelashes and a delicate line at the outer corner of each eye, leaving the under lid untouched.

As I rose to go I felt that there was considerable of interest still left undiscussed; but I had arrived late, and had learned, moreover, that Miss Brady, who had also come in late and out of pity for her tired maids had partaken of a delicatessen dinner, was due for work at the early hour of 8.30 o'clock next morning.

Casting for Pictures

By Samuel F. Kingston

ONE of the five floors occupied by the William Fox Film Corporation in the Leavitt Building on West Forty-sixth street, only one is thrown open to the general public, the floor occupied by the booking and casting department. At any hour any day the visitor will find from ten to five hundred persons of varied and, in many cases, peculiar aspect, seated on the benches in the big reception room or standing in a compact mass that overflows into the adjoining hallways.

Whether the waiting assemblage as composed of bearded Russians from the Ghetto or bronzed, Stetson-hatted men of the plains one may be certain they are all there to see one personage, the urbane and soft spoken Samuel F. Kingston, casting director of all the Fox productions made in the East and general superintendent of studio activities.

Samuel F. Kingston.

Mr. Kingston has a big job and he goes at it in a big way. In the years that he has been casting pictures for Mr. Fox he has developed a system of listing and indexing screen players that is uncanny in the speed and infallibility with which it works, but even this system is not as remarkable as Mr. Kingston's private and individual "memory file"—a faculty that enables him to call to mind the names and in many cases even the addresses and phone numbers of thousands of players.

Mr. Kingston was asked by the MOVING PICTURE WORLD to give a glimpse of the operation of his department for this special issue. His contribution follows:

"When a play has been selected for production and the director and scenario writer have prepared it to their satisfaction my work begins. I am called into consultation and the various types of characters in the story are explained to me. I then put in operation every facility of my office to secure the players who most nearly represent, without the art of make-up, the characters desired—with all due consideration, of course, to their individual abilities.

"The magnitude of this labor may be imagined when I say that I have fifteen regular directors and companies to cast for and that my work makes it necessary for me to interview or at least give a glance to at least 15,000 players and extra people a year.

"Each of the fifteen directors in our Eastern studios has what we call a 'traveling company' with him. He has his assistant director, his camera man, an assistant camera man, a general utility boy, a carpenter, a property man and a treasurer. This forms the permanent nucleus of his organization, with, of course, the star assigned to his direction.

"The 'stock company' idea is not followed by Mr. Fox. You will seldom see the same supporting players with the same star in any of our productions. In the case of players retained by us for more than one picture in succession we transfer them from star to star, so that the public will not see the same faces in any one star's successive productions.

"We go even further than this with extra people. We try not to give the same director extra people he has used before, and this brings to mind the fact that New York is, for our purpose, infinitely superior to California. One may find in New York an infinite variety of types—and not only a few of each kind, but thousands of them.

"It is always a cause of great astonishment on the part of any of our directors transferred from the West Coast studios to Fort Lee to find such a wonderful assortment of extra people at his command. For instance, recently Director Frank Lloyd wanted forty men of a certain type and I told him they would be waiting at our office. When we arrived there were 400 instead of forty, and he could have used the entire lot had he wished, so perfectly did they correspond with the types he had in mind.

"The extra people are all card indexed and their photographs filed under general-type headings. The players of more important roles are listed separately, but the system is such that should I be unable to think off hand of a player suitable to a certain part I can lay my hand at a moment's notice on the photos of from a dozen to a hundred actors or actresses of the type desired.

"We also have a complete file system of locations. A director merely has to ask us to tell him where he can find an abandoned stone mill, a Colonial farmhouse or a mountain cave—and we tell him in two minutes.

"In our filing system for players it is not even necessary for us to remember the name of the player wanted. For instance, Mr. Fox came in one day and asked me to find him a little Russian dancer who had appeared in a small bit in one of Miss Theda Bara's pictures. He could not remember the name, nor could I. But before he had time to leave the room I had glanced over the file and found it, simply because we keep a record, picture by picture, of every one appearing in the production, even those not mentioned in the program cast."

How I Happened

By MARY MACLAREN.

OF COURSE, everyone who has become at all prominent in the moving picture business has been asked, "How did you happen to get into it?" And then again, one hears and reads many amusing and sometimes rather disagreeable versions of the manner in which they were introduced into the "game."

As I read not long ago, a well written but purely imaginative story detailing my early "struggles," in which I played the role of the typical "poor, but ambitious" ingenue, I have been most anxious to clear up the matter, although, in so doing, I may lose some of the "sympathy" of my audiences.

I do not deny being ambitious, nor do I claim to have had immensely wealthy parents, but I did have a most comfortable home and I was not forced to earn my own living; also, I wish it to be understood that I have no desire to be classed as an ingenue. I went on the stage because I wanted to and did so against the earnest opposition of my family. However, when my mother discovered that I had fully set my heart upon a stage career, she not only withdrew all of her objections, but agreed to accom-

Facts and Comments

THE Moving Picture World comes to its many friends and readers this week in a new dress. We were loth to change from the old design, which has become so well known throughout the trade in all parts of the world. The new cover is from the art rooms of the well known New York firm of commercial illustrators, the Ethridge Company. The design is artistic, distinctive and appropriate and we hope and believe it will please our readers even more than our former front cover. It seems fitting that the new cover should make its appearance with this issue, which is devoted particularly to the many artistic angles of moving picture production. This is one of several contemplated changes we hope to make from time to time in order to make this paper even more helpful, interesting and indispensable to everyone connected in any way with the industry.

IT HAS been rightly claimed that the moving picture is more of an art than most people realize and it is often referred to as the "New Art." This special convention number is devoted to improvements in the art of present day moving picture production from many different viewpoints. As in all our previous special numbers, we have gathered a fund of information from the leading authorities on each of the subjects treated that makes this issue of the Moving Picture World a most valuable and instructive compendium for the student of better pictures. The thanks and appreciation of the publishers and staff is extended to all who have contributed so many able and thoughtful articles.

THE seventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will have begun its sessions before our next issue goes to press. The delegates from the various state branches will find one of their most important duties to be the selection of officers for the National League. Surely the exhibitors of the country should be represented by an executive staff that will zealously guard and adequately represent this very important and by far the largest branch of the business. At least some of the candidates for these officers are known for their loyalty and devotion to the exhibitors' end of the business, for their freedom from outside entangling connections and for their levelheaded grasp of present conditions. If the convention is not dominated by inside politics and the wire pulling of special interests, we believe the delegates will make a wise choice of officers for the coming year.

THE motion picture theater is a big asset to society these days as a resting place and a place of wholesome relaxation. We can't all get out to the golf links. Our days are filled with excitement and nearly everybody is working harder than they were at this time last year. It is only the sturdy people of steel nerves who don't feel a bit worn out now and then. We enter a picture show to get a rest from it all for an hour and there we find that the big offering is a picture dealing in the most exciting way with one of the big problems of the minute. It is, perhaps, ably handled and we approve of it; but— And if we feel a bit tired tomorrow, the picture show isn't half so attractive as it was yesterday.

IN certain sections of the country some fortunate exhibitors will soon have a chance to do their bit of service in providing picture entertainment for thousands of the finest boys that Uncle Sam can find—the boys in the big military camps that are to be formed. It will be most profitable, and the best that the exhibitor can do is going to be done. These exhibitors are three times fortunate. They will be in close contact with the boys and will enjoy their spirit; they will be happy in the value of the services they do, and lastly, the service will not be unappreciated.

"THE Exhibitor's Trade Review announces the candidacy of the more prominent exhibitors who aspire to the office of national president. The Exhibitor's Trade Review has no choice and does not in any way try to dictate to the delegates at Chicago as to whom they should favor with their suffrages. This we trust is in refreshing contrast to the old school journals which have been selecting and recommending their various candidates to the M. P. E. L. of A."—W. S. B., in The Review.

Same old brand of bushwah!

Public, Fxhibitor and Star

By Louis Reeves Harrison

I HAPPENED to be first to notice in the critical columns of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the following stars: Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart.

The editorial writer who knows his business, however, keeps as far away as possible from any comment having a flavor of publicity matter, and these names are only given as necessary to some impersonal reasoning.

Little Mary had no debut as a star. She was not of first magnitude when she appeared in the brilliant company gathered by Griffith in the old Biograph days, but, even in the minor roles, she represented something intrinsically her own, a characteristic we all highly value in women and children; "sweetness" describes it as nearly as any one word. She was not imitative; she was not in a hurry to shine; she had patience and dependability; she did what was required of her for many long years, simply and sincerely, not fretted in the least about the ultimate result.

Miss Pickford is a true screen star.

I speak without personal bias.

The performers are personally of no more consequence to me than I am to them.

We don't know each other as individuals.

So far as character is concerned, the face does not always run true to form, but the screen impression is largely physical.

A homely little girl may be far sweeter than she seems, but it would be difficult to convey that in a first screen effect.

Little Mary had the health and physique adequately to resent the charming human quality of sweetness.

The men above named represent, each in his own way and quite as sincerely, some quality effective with the audience.

Chaplin is really an acrobat, so tireless in the hard work he is called upon to perform that there is an absence of visible effort in all he does, but he has sounded one steady note. He has fully grasped the idea that nothing is so amusing to the average audience as human stupidity

Each one of us has a habit of regarding the tiny portion of mass effort we perform as important.

Chaplin is continually showing us how ridiculous we are by the solemn manner in which he attempts the trivial

He has a consistent policy.

So had the company in which he first succeeded

That consistent policy preserved the company after he left it to join forces with another organization.

Therein lies an answer to the star problem.

We now have a large number of true screen stars, those who have proven their case in screen portrayals—what we have lacked is a more definite policy of production

Fairbanks brought to his work a large amount of physical enthusiasm, but this was not all. To it he added the steady light of a well-established ideal. He radiates the glow one may feel at rare moments, an after-dinner glow, that of hale second youth, or even that of Browning's "Pippa,"

> The year's at the spring,
> And day's at the morn;
> Morning's at seven:
> The hill-side's dew-pearled;
> The lark's on the wing:
> The snail's on the thorn:
> God's in His heaven—
> All's right in the world!

Such in a general way is the Fairbank's ideal.

Fairbanks sought to represent something.

He had an ideal.

By the same slow and painstaking process that has brought others into prominence, Hart made his way to public favor.

Less well-defined in his ideal, he evolved it gradually by steady application and steady enforcement.

Man is by nature brutal, but subject through the wondrous power of sex influence to womanly refinement.

These ideals may have been more or less unconscious with the actors themselves, in some cases predetermined, in others a matter of temperament alone. The effect is that of the dropping water which wears away the hard stone of public indifference. It has taken time to prepare the mental soil, that of public receptivity, before transplanting the consistent idea itself.

So far as my personal observation is concerned, not a half dozen producers have grasped the necessity of a well-fixed and thoroughly consistent policy of production—there is a lack of true mental conception of what is most desirable in plays.

There may be a thousand true conceptions each differing from the others, thus affording the audience of millions an almost infinite variety of performance.

The necessity is not for all to aim at one character of presentation, but to fix on something clearly defined in the way of object and purpose.

We are not confined to any one aspect of life, but it gives character to a product to strive after a certain definite beauty, or a certain definite truth, or a certain clearly-defined justice.

An established policy lets an audience know what to expect and it thus establishes a brand.

What is expected in an article like this one?

The critical writer must have well-established ideals of his own, formulated with judgment and enforced through the difficult medium of printed words in order to set aglow the torches of other minds—why not the producer with his superior medium?

This means a certain breadth of sentiment.

Even a critic has his feelings, and they bring him mental resource. Think of giving first notices to such a list as Lois Weber, once a screen actress, now a talented producer; Clara Kimball Young, Max Linder, Pearl White, Carlyle Blackwell, Fatty Arbuckle, Mabel Normand, Norma Talmadge, Louise Glaum, Enid Bennett, Bessie Barriscale, besides nearly all of a long list of fine performers who received their early training in the Biograph, Vitagraph, Edison and Pathe companies. The critic is associated through sentiment with a large family of bright interpreters, and gather from their work, a little at a time, recognition of what makes for success.

Stars succeed through faithful and consistent performance.

On this account the public and the exhibitor come to depend upon the star for high-class and consistent screen performance, rather than upon the producer.

What is the natural inference?

Only the questions are mine—the inference yours.

Can valuable good-will in production be established and maintained by defined policy and consistent performance?

Without these elements is there really any good-will whatever in either production or exhibition?

Is the star to be the whole thing or just a valuable and highly valued part of the game?

Sir Herbert Tree and the Screen

By Edward Weitzel

THE death of the English actor, Sir Herbert Tree, in London, July 2, removes a picturesque figure from the stage and deprives the motion picture play of a man of international reputation who had been the leading player in two ambitious screen productions and whose natural gifts and artistic training made him a valuable acquisition. The claims put forth by admirers of Sir Herbert that he should be classed among the great actors of his time, especially in tragic Shakespearian roles, are quite without foundation. The English actor-manager was at his best on the spoken stage in character parts of the Svengali and Falstaff types, and was a producer and stage director of originality and sound method.

Sir Herbert lacked, however, one of the most important requirements for tragic acting—a voice of flexibility and power. His reading of such parts as Shylock and of Cardinal Wolsey in "Henry VIII" was but little above mediocrity as far as volume, music and the deeper significance of the poet's verse are concerned. His natural generosity and business acumen prompted him to surround himself with an excellent company which he directed with skill, and this enabled him to hold his place in the front rank of the English histrionic world, a position gained by unceasing and intelligent labor.

Sir Herbert appeared as an American Senator in a picture entitled "The Old Folks at Home," but his most noted achievement before the camera was in the title role of Macbeth. The production was an ambitious and, in many respects, a worthy one. Great care was taken in securing historical accuracy in costumes and settings, and the English actor's performance of the Thane of Cawdor was proficient in make-up, conception and, for the most part, in execution. He was at his best in the scene just previous to the murder of Duncan, but fell off considerably in the banquet scene when his guilty soul conjured up the ghost of the murdered Banquo. The frenzied horror of this moment was partially lost by the slowness of the action and the absence of vocal expression in the "Avaunt! and quit my sight!" speech.

The silent Macbeth also labored against certain innovations in the screen version of the tragedy that made it extremely difficult to maintain the intensity and onward sweep of the original. The Bard of Avon knew his business and, as a consequence, visualized none of the several murders in Macbeth. Only the preparations for Duncan's taking off are shown and the scene of confusion and dread that follows. The murders of Banquo and the wife and children of Macduff are commented upon briefly, and the one death scene enacted before the eyes of the spectator is at the finish, when the soul of the ruthless murderer himself is sent to its account by the sword of Macduff. This is the masterly way of building up a mimic tragedy. Familiarity, even with human slaughter, breeds contempt. and the reproduction in detail on the screen of all the murders in Macbeth turned the poet's work into crude melodrama that lost in impressiveness with each repetition of violent death.

The placing of Shakespeare on the screen will be accomplished eventually by a director whose grasp of the matter will enable him to come much nearer success than have any efforts in the past. We will then be spared another such woeful spectacle as the one presented by Sir Johnstone Forbes-Robertson in the screen version of Hamlet made in England. To recall the sorry figure the English actor presented picking his way gingerly over the real stones on the seashore while following his father's ghost is to be reminded that realism can defeat its own purpose—when the Prince of Denmark's shoes are for the stage only and the soles within them have not been toughened by frequent contact with irregular and unfriendly bits of the solid earth.

If

By Sam Spedon.

"IF my aunt was a man instead of a woman she'd be my uncle." That's good sense, we must admit.

If every one grasped facts we would advance no theories. If everyone accepted the inevitable we wouldn't cultivate imaginary trouble and we would be better fitted to cope with real ones.

If competition is the life of trade the motion picture industry has aplenty. It is just as keen among exhibitors as among the producers. First let us look at the exhibitors. Each and every one of them wants the first runs and the best pictures. They lie awake nights figuring out how they can get them before their competitors and only close their eyes when they cannot afford to outbid their opposition or cannot offer sufficient inducement to get them. A number of exhibitors combine with some progressive exhibitor so that in each section or territory of the combination, by reason of their number, demand a preference from the producer for his program to the exclusion of all the other exhibitors outside the combine. Of course, the biggest fellow in the combine gets first choice and so on all down the line. This is what is called strong organization and co-operation.

Just as soon as a smaller exhibitor gets big enough he demands a bigger consideration than his smaller associates and so on ad infinitum. Same old story, survival of the fittest. This is business competition and there will never be an end to it.

Now let us look at the producers. One has a high class of pictures, he wants trade and makes a bid for one of the big combination of exhibitors or one of the owners of a big chain of houses. He secures it. Immediately another producer comes along with what is considered a stronger and better line of pictures and he starts to outbid or circumvent his competitors and make a play for public favor. Where will this end? There is no end. It will never end. The struggle for supremacy in pictures will go on forever just as it has in every other line of endeavor. Just as the exhibitors combine so do a number of producers, directors and stars combine, and that organization predominates above its less popular or weaker competitors.

It costs money to do big things, engage big stars and make big productions. It costs money to run big theaters, it costs money to run big pictures and it costs more money to attend big theaters, to see big productions. The smaller exhibitor must abide his time and turn to get his proportionate share of patronage, whether it be little or much. The smaller producer must do the same.

When is this competition going to stop? We don't know. We don't believe anybody does. It will keep right on going. That's business.

Present business conditions will continue just as long as the public falls for the stars and demands them; just as long as one star differs in glory from another star. The competition of both exhibitors and producers creates the condition, so what's the use of asking ourselves foolish questions against the facts that confronts us?

Chaplin to Strive for Quality

In Executing His Contract With the Exhibitors' Circuit Comedian Will Aim to Fortify His Hold on Public.

CHARLES CHAPLIN is to be more than a producer of pictures for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Both the comedian and his brother Sid, always his confidant and now his personal representative, are to be looked to by the stockholders of the distributing corporation for advice and suggestions in matters vitally affecting their mutual interests. While it is true that this phase of the relations between Chaplin and the Circuit is not formally set forth in legal verbiage and attested before a notary it is also true that such is the understanding between the two parties. The "near partnership" is revelatory of the complete harmony existing between Chaplin and his new associates.

A film man in the confidence of Chaplin and the heads of the Circuit pointed out last week that the comedian, in looking over the field preparatory to executing a new contract, was not entirely concerned as to the size of the monetary consideration that should enter into the papers. He was looking beyond that. Chaplin, as every one easily may understand, is "fixed" more than comfortably. He is unconcerned about any wolf at the door. What perhaps is a new twist in a motion picture player way, he is concerned about the quality of the pictures with which his name is to be associated. He is ambitious. He is anxious to maintain his grip on the regard of picturegoers, to advance along with the most progressive of producers.

It is in furtherance of this aim that Chaplin has agreed in the event a subject proves to be sub-standard that it shall be destroyed and entirely refilmed. And it is in the furtherance of it that the Circuit has agreed that it will accept a picture that runs 1,600 feet or one that runs 2,300 feet. In other words, the comedian in his new contract has a margin of 700 feet, where in his former there was but 200. For the 1,600 feet the Circuit will pay the same amount as it will for 2,300. In case Chaplin decides that the strength of the script requires between 2,300 and 3,000 feet fully to develop the story the Circuit will pay a proportionate increase.

The Moving Picture World last week told the story of Chaplin's signing up with the Circuit, which is representative of twenty-five exhibitors having exclusive territorial franchises in the United States and Canada; how the comedian was to make eight subjects within a period of sixteen months, the first to be ready on October 1 next, and at a salary approximating double that under which he has been working the past year. A World man last week sought out J. D. Williams, general manager of the Circuit.

"Just what is the psychology of Chaplin's hold on the world?" asked the reporter. "Why is it he is as strong in one country as in another, English-speaking or otherwise?"

"Because he never uses slang in his sub-titles," answered Mr. Williams promptly. "That means there are no opportunities for mistranslations, that the few descriptive aids Chaplin employs in his pictures are as intelligible in one country as in the next."

It was Mr. Williams' first word to a trade paper in regard to the signing of the Chaplin contract. He explained the Circuit had been under absolute obligation to Charles and Sid Chaplin to say nothing publicly until the final ratification of all papers.

"I'd like to show you the stack of clippings I have from English newspapers showing the regard in which Chaplin is held in his own country," continued Mr. Williams. "There is genuine recognition over there of the value of the comedian to his fellow-countrymen who are fighting. The regard extends from the humblest private or man-o'-wars' man to the King and Queen.

"Chaplin's signing up with the Circuit had for him a sentimental side. He realizes that much of his success is due to the exhibitor, and he welcomes the opportunity of dealing with exhibitors. Naturally he is anxious to have his pictures go into the fine new photoplay theaters that are springing up all over the country and he is ambitious to make subjects worthy of these houses and of himself. We are confident that is just what he will do. He had offers in excess of that of ours, several hundred thousand dollars, in fact, but he liked the idea of being 'unaccompanied,' insuring an open field.

"The whole idea of the contract is to do away with quantity and substitute quality. Chaplin has pledged himself to establish a reputation for perfect pictures. He fully realizes that the production of unsatisfactory comedies at this time would cost him anywhere from a quarter of a million to a half million dollars on his next contract. Therefore, any picture that is found to be below the high-water mark will be destroyed and work on it commenced all over again. With this determination the First National Chaplin pictures should exceed in quality and in interest anything Chaplin has previously produced.

"The First National Exhibitors naturally are elated with the prospect of the amount of money they know after investigation it is possible to make with these pictures. While it is true that the First National is paying the comedian twice as much as he has ever before received on any contract the pictures will cost the members a very reasonable sum and proves what an organization of this kind dealing direct from producer to consumer can accomplish.

"It is the intention of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to adopt the same methods regarding production with any other stars with whom it may contract to produce pictures, insuring quality by paying the same for four-reel features as would be paid for eight reels, every star thus being put strictly on his merits."

It is interesting to note that Mr. Williams set out from Los Angeles only on February 1 last determined to make concrete the idea long dormant in his brain of forming a circuit of exhibitors. By May 1 he had accomplished a tour of the country and signed up all the present stockholders of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and by July 1 the concern was a proved success and had signed up the big thing in motion picture actors, Charles Chaplin.

Leo Heads Fox Scenario Department

Jack G. Leo.

THE appointment this week of Jack G. Leo as head of the Fox Film Corporation scenario department comes as a welcome announcement to the trade. Mr. Leo is well known in the industry, and holds a wide reputation as magazine writer and editor prior to taking up motion picture work. He brings to his new duties a thorough training in the technical side of motion picture production, having been for the past year and a half in charge of the Fox laboratories.

In his new position Mr. Leo will give every scenario submitted careful scrutiny, and independent scenario writers may be assured that their manuscripts will receive conscientious consideration and prompt attention.

Mr. Leo will make his headquarters in the fourth floor offices of the Fox Film Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York. Productions staged at the Fox studios in Los Angeles will also be handled under Mr. Leo's direction.

GOLDWYN'S OFFER TO SOLDIERS ACCEPTED.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's offer to supply without cost one copy of all Goldwyn productions for the exclusive use of the United States Army in France has received the enthusiastic indorsement of Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War.

Goldwyn, in addition to offering one print of each of its productions to our soldiers, also offered to furnish a projection unit of equipment as a gift to the government.

"I want to say this personal word of gratitude and appreciation for the offer which you make and for the spirit which animates it," said Secretary Baker in concluding his letter.

JAMES AUBREY SIGNS THREE YEAR CONTRACT.

Senate Gets General Revenue Bill

Finance Committee Reports on Measure Totally Unlike That Sent Over by the House.

AFTER weeks of delay Senator Simmons of North Carolina on July 3 reported to the Senate on behalf of the Finance Committee the long looked for general revenue bill. As it now stands the measure may be said to be totally unlike the form in which it passed the House of Representatives. Needless to say, it is far more acceptable in this shape than it was at the time the Finance Committee held its hearings in Washington, which were attended by the leaders in all branches of the film industry, who went to the Capitol to protest against provisions that would have driven them out of business.

There are many new provisions in this bill as it comes to the Senate, many of them having a direct bearing upon the motion picture industry. Of course, of prime importance is "Title VII.—War Tax on Admissions" and paragraph 700 will read as follows:

> That from and after the first day of ...., nineteen hundred and seventeen, there shall be levied, assessed, collected and paid (a) a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person making such payment: Provided, That the tax on admission of children where an admission charge for such children is made shall in every case be 1 cent; and (b) a tax of 5 cents for each admission of each person (except in the case of a bona fide employee and children under twelve years of age and municipal officers on official business) admitted free to any place for admission to which a charge is made, to be paid by the person so admitted; and (c) a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof paid for admission to any public performance for profit at any cabaret or other similar entertainment to which the charge for admission is wholly or in part in the price paid for refreshment, service, or merchandise; the amount paid for such admission to be computed under rules prescribed by the Commisioner of Internal Revenues, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, such tax to be paid by the person paying for such refreshment, service or merchandise. * * *
> These taxes shall not be imposed in the case of a place the maximum charge of admission to which is 5 cents, or in the case of moving picture shows the maximum charge for admission to which is 25 cents.
> The term "admission" as used in this title includes seats and tables, reserved or otherwise, and other similar accommodations, and the charges made therefor.

In the bill as it went to the Senate, no doubt was specified as to when the admission tax should go into effect.

Section 701 provides for the administration of the bill and reads as follows:

> That every person, corporation, partnership, or association (a) receiving any payments for such admission shall collect the amount of the tax imposed by section seven hundred from the person making such payments, or (b) admitting any person free to any place for admission to which a charge is made shall collect the amount of the tax imposed by section seven hundred from the person so admitted, and (c) in either case shall make returns and payments of the amounts so collected at the same time and in the same manner as provided in section five hundred and three of this Act.
> Every person, corporation, partnership, or association, liable to the tax imposed by subdivision (d) or (e) of section seven hundred, shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the tax imposed by such subdivisions to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, by regulation, prescribe.

Among the "small" taxes of interest to the motion picture business which are contained in this bill, are the following:

A three per cent tax on all freight shipments, whether by rail, water or automobile.

A tax of one cent for each 25 cents or fraction thereof on all express or parcel post shipments.

Five per cent on all passenger transportation fares and accommodations. This tax applies also to mileage books already in the possession of the passenger.

There is a five cent tax on all telephone and telegraph messages where the charge for transmission is 15 cents or more.

A one cent tax is provided for all checks drawn on any bank or banking institution when the value of the check is in excess of $5.

EDWARD EARLE GOES TO VITAGRAPH.

In addition to the engagement of Miss Miriam Fouche as leading woman for Harry Morey, Greater Vitagraph announces the acquisition of several other players to its forces.

Edward Earle, formerly with Metro, Frohman, Famous Players, Pathe and Edison productions, has been selected to head the company with Betty Howe, and Arthur Donaldson has been selected as their chief support. This company is under the direction of Wesley Ruggles.

Another combination announced by Vitagraph is that of Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald.

Picture Men Going to Washington

William A. Brady Names Committee to Co-operate With President Wilson in War Work.

Brady, president of the National Association, requesting the co-operation of the motion picture industry in the affairs of the government relative to the different war committees met with ready response. Miss Young Makes Answer to Selznick

Asks That Her Contract With Him Be Considered Null and That the Selznick Corporation Be Enjoined.

WHILE modestly dismissing the contention that her ability as a screen actress is of such a unique character that the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation is absolutely unable to fill her place, Clara Kimball Young asserts positively that the receipts derived by the corporation from the release of the first four photoplays in which she appeared under the management of Lewis J. Selznick amounted to nearly a million dollars.

Moreover with the exception of her weekly salary of $1,000 the actress complains that she did not receive a single penny out of the earnings of the film company which bore her name despite the fact that she was a large stockholder and had a contract with the company providing that she was to share the profits with Mr. Selznick.

Miss Young makes these and many other allegations derogatory to the film company's treatment of her rights in her answer to the suit filed by the corporation in the United States District Court seeking to compel her to carry out the terms of her contract to appear exclusively in the film releases of the corporation until September, 1920, and enjoin her from appearing in films produced by any other company.

The basis of the controversy between the corporation and herself was due to the action of Selznick in forming a corporation under the style of Lewis J. Selznick's Enterprises, Inc., which acted as the distributing agency of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation's releases, she alleges. The actress charges that she was deprived of her just share of the profits.

Miss Young asks that the court grant her a decree declaring the contract which she entered into with the corporation be considered null and void and that the corporation be perpetually enjoined from bringing any action against her under the contract.

NEW PICKFORD FILM A SENSATION.

Never in the history of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation has a more sensational success been evidenced by one of its releases than was scored last week with the initial presentation of Mary Pickford's spectacular production, staged under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, "The Little American." Released at a most opportune time, this patriotic subject is proclaimed the greatest achievement of not only Mary Pickford, but Cecil B. De Mille as well.

At the Artcraft headquarters in New York President Walter E. Green has been flooded with congratulatory letters and telegrams from exhibitors all over the country who have already presented the new Pickford offering. Similar messages have been received by "Little Mary" and Director De Mille in California and it is felt that never before has such a large number of complimentary communications on a release been received by a star as has been experienced by Miss Pickford since the first public showing of her latest Artcraft picture.

Fox Men Hold Convention

One Hundred of Them Look Upon New Productions and Decide Upon Important Change in Policy.

THE Third Annual Convention of the Fox Film Corporation was held at the Hotel Biltmore last week, with nearly one hundred men representing the executive and branch offices of the company in attendance. From a business point of view the conference was the most important in the history of the organization, resulting in the adoption of a marked change of policy soon to be announced.

The convention opened on Monday morning, July 2, being called to order by General Manager W. R. Sheehan. William Fox was presented, and after a brief speech of welcome the delegates plunged into the business at hand. Mr. Fox explained that whereas at two previous conferences the branch managers had gathered to be instructed as to their course of action during the coming seasons this time they had been called to report on the suggestions of the exhibitors in their districts as to a new policy of releasing Fox films. The reports were made, a new policy was outlined and a general discussion held, but a final vote was deferred until the delegates should have the chance to see a number of the company's new productions that are now ready for presentation early in the autumn.

In accordance with this plan, after Monday's all-day session, the delegates were taken to Wurlitzer Hall and given a private showing of the first of William Farnum's new productions, "When a Man Sees Red," an adaptation of Larry Evan's startling short story, "The Painted Lady."

As an additional surprise the Fox managers were shown the first of the new series of Fox comedies, produced by Henry Lehrman, "A Milk-Fed Vamp" and "His Smashing Career."

On Tuesday a full day's session was held, and in the evening the delegates witnessed the screenings of the first of the widely heralded Fox Kiddie Features, "Jack and the Beanstalk," and another of the comedies, entitled, "Damaged—No Goods."

On Wednesday morning the delegates were shown two more of the new pictures, an R. A. Walsh production, entitled "The Innocent Sinner," and a Dustin Farnum picture, "Durand of the Bad Lands."

The conference was then called at the Biltmore, at which there was a general expression of opinion on the character and quality of the new pictures.

The delegates then boarded three big sight-seeing buses, and were taken to the ball game at the Polo Grounds. In the evening the delegates were entertained at the performance of Raymond Hitchcock, in "Hitchy Koo," during which the famous comedian made an amusing speech mainly directed at the film men present and the motion picture business in general.

Instead of a formal banquet the delegates were feasted after the performance at one of the midnight cabarets, and the following morning they again assembled at Wurlitzer Hall to witness the showing of William Farnum in "The Conqueror," and "Babes in the Woods," the second Kiddie Feature.

On Thursday afternoon the final conference was held at the Biltmore, and in the evening the delegates attended the Ziegfeld Follies and the Midnight Frolic on the roof.

Two more features were shown them on Friday morning, after which the convention terminated with a visit to the Fox Studios and Laboratory at Fort Lee, N. J.

During the closing session of the convention a final speech was made by Mr. Fox. His address aroused his hearers to enthusiasm, and they departed, proclaiming the belief that the coming season will unquestionably be the greatest in the history of the Fox Film Corporation.

"THE LITTLE AMERICAN" AS PROPAGANDA.

At the request of Edward Harding, chairman of the Executive Board of the National Committee of Patriotic and Defense Societies, the new Mary Pickford-Artcraft spectacle, "The Little American," was shown at the Speakers' Training Camp last week at Chautauqua, N. Y. At this camp from July 2 to 7 well known speakers from all over the country gathered to receive instructions and training to help them in their tour of the nation to inspire patriotism and acquaint the public with the needs of the war. Many well known college professors and other notables at the training camp viewed Miss Pickford's new film showing conditions across the ocean on the French front. Those scenes have been pronounced correct by experts and afford the members of the speakers' camp splendid opportunity for inspiration in their forthcoming talks.

Screen Club Will Hold First Reel

Members Will Gather at Century Theater on July 29 for an Evening of Rare Entertainment.

SCREEN CLUB members are making extensive preparations for the "First Reel," which is the name given to the first annual Screen Club entertainment to be held at the Casino theater, New York, on Sunday night, July 29. Edward C. White, the well known theatrical manager, is in full charge of the arrangements, working in conjunction with the Board of Governors and the entertainment committee. Mr. White started active work several weeks ago, with the Screen Club, 117 West Forty-fifth street, as headquarters.

An elaborate program, which includes the personal appearance of the most celebrated stars in the screen world, is rapidly nearing completion and promises to be the most unique and interesting performance of its kind ever seen upon the stage. The Screen Club is fully alive to the wonderful possibilities the motion picture art offers for an entertainment of unusual quality and is preparing to make its annual "Reel" an affair that will attract wide attention each season.

The Casino theater was selected for the first reel because of the large number of well arranged boxes it contains, and its large seating capacity. The price of the boxes are $50 each, and the rapidity with which they are being spoken for by the heads of large motion picture corporations promises a representative audience of men prominent in the industry. All reserved seats will sell at $2.50.

Special committees in charge of talent, music, programs, etc., have been appointed and are hard at work. An elaborate program edited and managed by Harold Z. Levine will contain a complete history of motion pictures from their inception to the present day and promises to set a new pace for souvenir programs.

The entertainment will be followed by a reception, cabaret and dance tendered by the Screen Club to the large number of artists, patrons and patronesses at the clubhouse. President Billy Quirk will soon make a definite announcement of the program, which will include the names of many of the most popular stars in the art.

The Roll of Honor

HECTOR TURNBULL, former head of the Famous Players-Lasky scenario department, who recently resigned to take up freelance work, has enlisted as a private in Battery F, First Field Artillery, New York National Guard. Mr. Turnbull, who saw service in the regular army prior to his becoming the dramatic critic of the New York Tribune, chose the First Field Artillery because of the assurance that that organization would be among the first of the National Guard units to see service abroad. Because of his previous experience in the army Mr. Turnbull would have had little difficulty in receiving an appointment in an officers' reserve training camp, but Mr. Turnbull preferred to take his chances on promotion from the ranks of the National Guard rather than to go into training in the next Plattsburg contingent

Rothapfel Talks to Screeners

Theater Man Tells Them Why They Must Have Ideals And Adhere to Them.

LACK of time last week prevented the publication of Samuel L. Rothapfel's talk at the Screen Club dinner on Saturday evening, June 30. We feel it is deserving of special notice and take this occasion to present it.

Mr. Rothapfel gave a good common sense talk that struck at some vital points concerning the motion picture industry and made a deep impression on his hearers. He related some of his personal experiences and drew deductions from his viewpoint. Among other things he said: "You have just witnessed a drama made by the Biograph Company seven years ago, presenting Mary Pickford in the lead, called 'The Italian Barber,' and you saw as a contrast a drama recently produced, entitled 'The Poor Little Rich Girl,' presenting the same star. When I saw that single reel of 'The Italian Barber' on the screen tonight a lump came in my throat. That picture is associated with my early life, the third subject I ever ran, when I was working in my father-in-law's tavern in a small town in Pennsylvania, about seven years ago. There's where I started.

"I say to you tonight, you actors, authors and directors—have an ideal. Make better pictures. Don't stop. Don't be satisfied with what you are doing today. You are artists and you must not be satisfied with anything short of perfection. I predict that four years from today the contrast between those pictures of today and those produced then will be just as great as the difference between 'The Italian Barber' and 'The Poor Little Rich Girl' you saw tonight.

"Speaking for myself, I am not satisfied with what I have done. I have been complimented and my efforts are appreciated, I know, but I am not going to stop. I am going to build another theater on Broadway, which I hope will be completed next spring. I am going to New Orleans, where I hope to build. I have an ideal. I hope to live to see the day when I shall have a theater that will make the Rialto look like 'The Italian Barber' as compared with 'The Poor Little Rich Girl,' when I will present pictures at an admission of one dollar minimum price.

"Make better pictures. Don't let people tell you it can't be done. Do it. Don't let commercialism creep into your art; that will take care of itself. Have an ideal. You must feel your art, from the head and the heart, not from the pocket. Never in my career have I thought of how much money I would make. I just went on doing things and the money came. The first year of the Rialto showed a profit of $200,000, and it will be 50 per cent. greater the second year. When I started the Rialto, with uniformed, saluting ushers, a forty-piece orchestra and all that, some people gave me four months to last, and now the poor boobs are trying to keep up with me. The motion picture industry is in a terribly chaotic condition today. You don't know what you want because the public don't know what it wants and doesn't tell you. Pictures must be founded upon merit and it's up to you to establish it. Make better pictures. Features today are a misnomer; they must be better in the future. Help me build up and maintain them in the establishment of our ideals.

"If you expect to succeed, do things different from others. If a man makes a protest or anything in a picture standing up, make him do it sitting down. Do something different. Be different in your pictures. I have always tried to be different. For instance, one of my ushers tries to learn the names of the regular patrons of the Rialto. He went up to a man and said: 'Why, I am glad to see you again. You haven't been here for over a week.' The man said: 'How did you know it. I didn't know you knew me?' The usher replied: 'I didn't, but I just took a chance.' He took a chance. Do things differently from the other fellow.

"Another thing. Let your art give the audience a chance to exercise its imagination. Let it suggest and the audience will supply what is wanting. Let it do something. Grief can often be better expressed by the bowed head instead of the heaving bosom and the fake tears. By being too literal you can destroy the effect and make it ridiculous instead of dignified and sincere.

"I am going to join the Screen Club. I have put in my application tonight and I am going to extend an invitation to it at a near date to attend the Rialto in a body and watch me score musically a picture. Then afterward I am going to ask you all to have a cold lunch with me. At any time I can help you, in any way, I will be glad to do it. Try me and see. I am so full of thought tonight I can't say all I want to. I have just returned from Chicago, where I signed the million-dollar contract of Charley Chaplin with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and in a day or two I leave for New Orleans. I appreciate the honor bestowed on me tonight and thank you."

Edwardes Davis, the prompter of the Green Room Club, was the next speaker. His theme was the responsibility of the motion picture director. He said the director is alone responsible for the picture and his judgment in its production should be absolute. He should have the power to accept or reject a scenario as to its fitness to the players and its possibilities.

Tom Wise, the well-known actor, spoke in a general way and brought a delightful evening to a happy ending.

Rembusch Indorsed for League Chief

Indiana Exhibitors Instruct Delegates to Support Him—Candidate Pays Respects to Ochs.

By Indiana Trade News Service.

FRANK J. REMBUSCH, of Shelbyville, Ind., president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Indiana, will be Indiana's choice for president of the National League to succeed Lee A. Ochs, at the national convention at Chicago. This was definitely decided at an enthusiastic meeting of the Indiana exhibitors at the Severin Hotel in Indianapolis. The main purpose of the meeting was for selecting the delegates to the national convention, but most of the time was taken up in discussing Mr. Rembusch's candidacy. About 100 exhibitors from all parts of the state were present.

Mr. Rembusch, who was one of the originators and organizers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has attained national prominence throughout the motion picture industry as a result of his fights on all occasions for high ideals in the motion picture trade.

Mr. Rembusch did not intend to become a candidate for the national presidency and at first declined to accept, but finally consented to the wishes of the Indiana organization. Lee A. Ochs, national president, was present at the meeting but efforts of the Indiana exhibitors to get him to say whether or not he would again be a candidate for national president failed. In fact every time they asked him he evaded the question entirely.

Mr. Ochs made a brief address, touching on the various questions that confront the industry and especially with reference to the National Convention at Chicago.

Hugh O'Donnell, of Washington, introduced a motion asking that Vice-President John Victor, of Indianapolis, take the gavel. Mr. O'Donnell then, in a strong and enthusiastic speech, gave an eloquent history of the work of the Indiana League and of the great success it had had under the leadership of Mr. Rembusch. He concluded by introducing a resolution instructing the delegates to work for the election of Mr. Rembusch as national president.

Mr. O'Donnell, in moving that the resolutions which he submitted be passed unanimously, stated that the Indiana league believes Mr. Rembusch is particularly well-fitted for the national office, and further believes that he has the necessary qualifications to make the presidency of the national league a credit to the organization and a power and good for the industry. They were passed.

The members voted to authorize Mr. Rembusch to appoint all delegates to the convention and to instruct the delegates to vote for him for president. Following is a list of the delegates and alternates named by Mr. Rembusch:

Frank J. Rembusch, Shelbyville; Hugh O'Donnell, Washington; Charles C. Pettijohn, Indianapolis; Ray Andrews, of Muncie; Harry Kornblum, Evansville; Ike Beitman, Indianapolis; J. T. Keating, Terre Haute; H. H. Johnson, Lafayette; V. W. Young, Gary; D. Hines, South Bend; B. V. Barton, Indianapolis; A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis; J. M. Rhoades, Indianapolis; W. C. Warneford, Lawrenceburg; A. Cook, Greencastle; John Victor, Indianapolis; Ira Howard, Winnamac; F. J. Mack, Indianapolis; J. M. Vesey, Fort Wayne; R. H. Harris, Bloomington; M. J. Wehl, Gary; O. G. Murray, Richmond; E. R. Wickser, Indianapolis; Ben D. Crose, Indianapolis; Harry Kock, Indianapolis; Frank Wright, Linton; George H. Dunn, Greensburgh; William Lipps, Alexandria.

A campaign committee, composed of Charles C. Pettijohn, of Indianapolis, chairman; C. R. Andrews, of Muncie; and Hugh O'Donnell, of Washington, was appointed to further Mr. Rembusch's campaign. This committee was instructed to open headquarters at the Morrison Hotel at Chicago and to exert all its efforts to place Mr. Rembusch at the head of the national organization. A fund of $500 will be raised, $355 of the amount being subscribed at the Indiana meeting

Members of the Indiana league also passed resolutions opposing the advance deposit system, and decided to consider the organization of a mutual insurance company, which would insure all motion picture theaters and equipment The company would also be made to act as a bonding company to guarantee payment for film rentals. More definte action along this line will be taken at the next state meeting

The resolutions opposing the advance deposit system are as follows:

During the progress of the meeting, National President Ochs called attention to the fact that there was a lack of loyalty on the part of some exhibitors to the National League. He also pointed to the lack of funds to carry on the work in proper form. He said the motion picture machine operators union at times gives out orders and every operator in the union at once obeys, and he added that if the exhibitors would do the same in regard to the national organization, such abuses as the advance deposit system would disappear over night.

At this point President Rembusch rose to his feet and made a few remarks that brought a round of applause from the other exhibitors.

"No man can question my loyalty to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America during the past year or any other year," said Mr. Rembusch. "You will remember, Mr. Ochs, that I left the Chicago convention last year and journeyed that same week to North Carolina and had that organization come into the League. I do not deny that I have disagreed with some of the policies that have been introduced into the League in late years.

"My membership in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League dates from its inception and birth. I am one of the few exhibitors who met in Cleveland, O., years ago and helped organize this League. Since that day my work in this state and other states speaks for itself and I want no praise for it. Neither do I apologize because what I have done has been dictated by my conscience.

"But let me say here that the National League was not organized to benefit any one exhibitor or set of exhibitors, but first to protect the exhibitors everywhere in all things. We would do well to return to those principles on which this League was founded. The idea of establishing the League was to look after the interests of the exhibitors first and always. We expected to support the League by dues, subscripitions and donations by the members and it never was the idea of the fathers of the organization that we were to give a lot of trade shows and other money-making propositions. I must say that it is these trade shows and other money-making schemes that invariably cause trouble. Look at the conditions at Chicago today—it a divided organization.

"At that first meeting in Cleveland we were pledged to work for each other in all things against the common enemy. We agreed that no one who had any connection with the manufacture, exchange or sale of films should be a member of the League and that proposition is a good one for us to follow today. Our interests are not in the same direction. But this would not prevent us from working together on questions that effect the whole industry. As one of the founders and fathers of the National League I still hope to see the day when this organization will stand for those ideals and principles of which it was conceived and born.

"My state organization desires that I shall be president of the National League because the Indiana exhibitors believe that the same good can be accomplished for the nation that has been accomplished in this state. We can do it if we reorganize in Chicago in a stronger and more equitable sense to do those things for the benefit of the exhibitor that can be done by consciencious and fair effort. Mr. Ochs, even though a member of the executive committee, asked me to resign because I dared oppose the use of the National League for what I believed to be a purely mercenary purpose. I remained because I believe that very soon the exhibitors of these United States will see the great benefit of a reorganization and are going to stand by me."

President Remubsch announced that during the past month he and C. R. Andrews, secretary of the Indiana organization, had originated a new plan to increase the membership of the organization and had found the new plan very successful. They engaged I. D. Howard, as state solicitor, and plan to have him call on every exhibitor in the state and ask each to pledge $1 a month to the state organization. The result was that over 100 new members were added within the last thirty days, over $1,200 was subscribed and $500 in cash turned over to the state treasurer. Indiana now has over 300 new members and expects to raise approximately $6,000 to carry on the organization work throughout the year on the dollar-a-month plan.

A report of the financial condition and standing was given by Ray Andrews, secretary, thus giving the members of the organization an opportunity to see the new system of accounts and new set of permanent books that have been printed especially for the Indiana League. The plan of having each member pay one dollar a month made it necessary to provide a new set of books and each member will receive monthly statements of his standing in the organization.

The Indiana members rejoiced at the fact that they have no form of censorship in the state and also took pride in pointing out to National President Ochs that they placed the first constructive legislation through the Indiana legislature—the bill legalizing the showing of motion picture shows on Sunday.

Further discussion brought out the fact that censorship bills were brought up in thirty-one states during the last year and each state won its case in all but three exceptions without any help from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The Indiana members took this as an indication that it is up to the exhibitors of the country to save their business without any help from the balance of the trade.

No Action this Year on Daylight Saving

While Calder Measure Has Passed Senate the House Committee Has Postponed Action on Borland Bill.

THE motion picture interests of the United States will have an extended opportunity to defeat the so-called daylight saving legislation now pending in Congress. As previously noted in these columns, the Calder bill providing for a change in the clocks was passed by the Senate some time ago. By adjourning for the session for the present special session of Congress, the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has definitely postponed any further action on the Borland bill, which provides for legislation the same as the Calder bill, until the regular session, which will begin the first Monday in December. At that time the agitation for the daylight saving will be revived, and it is declared that with the cooperation of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and other business organizations this bill will be placed upon the statute books in time to go into operation next summer.

In a previous issue of the Moving Picture World, the effects of the working of this bill were outlined. It is suggested that the exhibitors and exchange managers and all others interested in the motion picture business start a campaign of publicity now to acquaint the members of the House of Representatives with the hardships that will be worked upon them if the Borland bill is enacted into law. At the same time the moving picture men should not lose sight of the fact that Mr. Borland also has another bill providing in substance the same as his original measure which has been referred to the House Committee on the Judiciary, and the House Committee on the Judiciary has not adjourned for the summer.

It will be only by constant and intensive work on the part of all concerned that this bill will be defeated. Unless it is defeated the trade as a whole stands to have its business cut down to anywhere from 25 to 50 per cent. during the summer months, the time when it can least afford to lose anything and it will find that its business in the winter will be disorganized by reason of the changing of the clocks during the preceding summer.

Commissioner Bell Visits Brooklyn

Head of New York City's License Bureau Makes Plea for Enlistments.

THE effective value of the motion picture theater as a public forum in properly placing a question of national importance before the public was clearly demonstrated last week when George H. Bell, License Commissioner of New York City, during the official recruiting week made a flying trip through Brooklyn in order to help the Mayor's Defense Committee stimulate recruiting for the army. The Commissioner, who is a forceful speaker, addressed large audiences in every theater he visited. After the conclusion of the Commissioner's speech, each theater orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" while patriotic slides were flashed upon the screen.

The Commissioner himself was heartily applauded many times in the course of his speeches. Accompanying his was his deputy, E. Kaufman, and his chief of the motion picture division, E. Cullitan. Representing the exhibitors of Brooklyn was William Brandt, their president, who introduced the speaker, and Louis L. Levine, the proprietor of the Regent. It is estimated that in all over 50,000 people heard the Commissioner.

TRIGGER FAVORS WESTERNER OR SOUTHERNER.

Editor Moving Picture World: I have received numerous letters inquiring as to my position on the presidential election at the coming convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. I can only reiterate my statement made in the trade journals two months ago: "For president of this organization we must have a clean-cut man who is not involved in any petty league politics." He must remember that the organization is permanent, and that it does not exist solely for the good of the individual. He must have qualities for leadership, have strength and stability, and be a man of vision, one that can lead by the confidence of being right. This is a time when great things are to be done and we want a man to do them. There are several such exhibitors who will be at the convention in Chicago. I would advise for the betterment of the league, to consider the candidates carefully and when voting, cast the vote for the man with the above qualifications.

At the present time we are suffering from too much regulation. Those that are in the field for presidency are Fred

Herrington, Pittsburgh; H. B. Varner, North Carolina; Lee A. Ochs, New York; Rogers, Minnesota; Frank J. Rembusch, Indiana, and one or two others.

Fellow-exhibitors, kindly choose the man that is vigorous, generous in instincts, one that can get his heels in the ground and march forward to a solid position at the head of a bigger and better organization; and I ask the young exhibitors to help, and by self-sacrifice to take up the management of the local, state and national leagues, for under no other condition will our organization survive.

My personal opinion is that if we can secure a man from the west or south to fill the responsible office of president it would be most advisable to do so, as I believe the present incumbent has proved himself to be anything but the man required to make the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America the power for usefulness to the exhibitors of the country that it should be.

SAMUEL H. TRIGGER.

VIRGINIA EXHIBITORS TO MEET IN AUGUST.

Chesley Toney, secretary of the Virginia League, announces the date of the coming state convention as August 27, 28 and 29 and the place Ocean View, which, as its name indicates, is on the seashore. He promises that there will be opportunities to combine a bit of pleasure in the course of business. Secretary Toney may be addressed at his office in Richmond.

The delegates of Virginia to the National Convention are E. T. Crall, Olympic, Newport News; Harry Bernstein, Colonial, Richmond; Otto Wells, Strand, Norfolk; R. D. Craver, Broadway, Lynchburg; J. W. Hamilton, Hamilton, Martinsville. The alternates are J. F. Lacey, Princess, South Boston; J. Henkel Henry, Empire, Winchester; W. F. Crall, Palace, Petersburg; R. A. Steele, Surprise, Alexandria; C. E. Geoghegan, Cosy, Chase City.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS ELECT.

The Cleveland branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at its meeting the last week in June, elected the following officers, to serve the term beginning July 1: President, W. J. Slimm (re-elected); vice-president, J. H. Simpson; recording secretary, Walter Horsey; financial secretary, Sam F. Deutsch; treasurer, Adolph Mahrer.

The organization also arranged for delegates to attend the Chicago convention.

SHOW NAVY PICTURES IN UNION SQUARE.

To materially aid in recruiting for the navy, motion pictures are being shown nightly in Union Square, New York, where the land ship Recruit is rapidly becoming one of the principal sights of Manhattan. Through J. J. McCarthy, his general manager, D. W. Griffith has supplied the Recruiting Service with projecting machines and complete equipment. The entire plant, screen, etc., which has been placed alongside the ship, was all placed in position by Mr. Griffith's mechanical staff. The free exhibition is given every night and attended by thousands of people.

The pictures shown are the official films of the Navy Publicity Bureau and give views of training quarters, life at sea, and other subjects to interest the prospective recruit. The Union Square battleship is a perfect replica of an up-to-date dreadnaught and is manned with officers and crew. It was built by the Mayor's Committee of Defense on the original suggestion of Blaine Ewing, and was turned over to the Navy Department by Mayor Mitchell. Band concerts, speaking and patriotic demonstrations take place aboard ship and in the park every evening.

CHANGES IN VITAGRAPH ORGANIZATION.

Don Bartlett, formerly advertising manager for the Triangle Distributing Corporation, has joined the publicity department of Greater Vitagraph, taking the place of Gordon Lawrence, who has been transferred to the sales promotion department.

H. J. Bayley, manager of the Omaha Exchange, has been transferred to take charge of the Minneapolis branch. L. A. Betzler has been appointed manager of the Omaha branch.

George Balsdon, Jr., manager of the St. Louis exchange, has been transferred to New York as assistant manager of the New York exchange to assist his father. He is succeeded at St. Louis by D. E. Boswell.

H. C. McLaughlin has been appointed manager of the Cincinnati exchange.

Mack Sennett Off for Pacific Coast

Director to Begin Staging of Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies at Edendale Studios at Once.

MACK SENNETT, who has just signed a contract to produce two-reel comedies exclusively for release by Paramount, has departed for the coast. Immediately upon his arrival in Edendale, where his studio is situated, Mr. Sennett will begin work upon the production of the first of his two-reel comedies to be released under the new agreement. These will be called Paramount-Mack Sennett productions, and there will be one released every two weeks through Paramount.

Mr. Sennett will continue the production of the type of comedies which has made his name known all over the world. As he swung aboard the train Mr. Sennett declared that he was delighted at the prospect of going into harness again.

"I have just been talking over plans for our future productions with Mr. Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky, and Mr. Abrams, president of Paramount, and they sound good to me. With an organization like that behind me I am going to be able to put over the best stuff that I have ever done in my life. The field of comedy has only been scratched so far and there are a whole lot of new things up my sleeve that are going to provide startling innovations when we begin work at Edendale.

"My organization out there is intact and I know that the boys will jump into the work of producing these new comedies with unlimited enthusiasm. I can faithfully promise that these new comedies will be the best that I have ever done."

Leonhardt Now With Goldwyn

HARRY LEONHARDT, who since the formation of the Fox Film Corporation has been one of the powerful and able executives of that company, has joined Goldwyn Distributing Corporation as General Western Manager and next week assumes jurisdiction over all of the Goldwyn branches and business in the West, beginning with Denver and including the Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles [illegible]

In signing Mr. Leonhardt Goldwyn brings into its organization one of the strongest personalities identified with motion picture salesmanship in the industry. He leaves the position of general western representative for Fox to take up larger duties with this newer organization and starts at once on a tour of inspection of the territories under his direction. Goldwyn's branches in the four zones of the Western division are: Denver, W. S. Rand; Los Angeles, G. C. Parsons; San Francisco, C. M. Simmons; Seattle, C. F. Hill.

Harry Leonhardt.

In four years Harry Leonhardt has become one of the best known men in the sales side of motion pictures. For twenty-five years he has been identified with the most progressive phases of amusements and has covered the entire range of managerial effort from Shakespearean drama to tableaux vivants and modern vaudeville with both the Keith and Proctor interests. His only motion picture connection until now has been with the Fox organization. His first stop on his trip through his territory will be in Denver.

"I have entered the splendid organization that Goldwyn is building," says Mr. Leonhardt, "because Goldwyn represents a new era or a new cycle in motion picture production. I looked at all of the pictures completed to date and they eclipse anything I have ever seen. I feel—and I would not have come with Goldwyn if I hadn't felt—that the producers and authors who comprise the Goldwyn organization are reaching way ahead of anything now being achieved in films and I am returning to the West carrying to exhibitors the news of a new and great advance in motion picture making."

Manager Ludwig Schindler Urgently Requests Photoplayers Who Have Not Yet Contributed Articles to Red Cross Booth to Send Them in

THE official program of the Seventh National Exposition has been arranged as follows: Saturday, July 14—Opening day. Governor Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, will declare the Exposition opened at 11 o'clock A. M. Thereafter the Exposition will run daily, until its close, from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M. Saturday will be Goldwyn Day and the night will be Mae Marsh Night, in honor of that popular artist. Other Goldwyn stars have also been promised.

Sunday, July 15—This has been set apart as Pathe Day, when Mrs. Vernon Castle, Pearl White and Florence Reed will be in the Pathe booth.

Monday, July 16—This will be Selznick and Exhibitors' Day, and Lillian Walker, Clara Kimball Young, Anita King, Constance Talmadge and Norma Talmadge will grace the Selznick booth.

Tuesday, July 17—Butterfly Day, with Violet Mersereau and other Universal stars.

Wednesday, July 18—World Pictures, Brady-Made Day, with Alice Brady, Ethel Clayton, Evelyn Greeley, Madge Evans, Carlyle Blackwell and Montagu Love as the featured stars.

Thursday, July 19—K-E-S-E Day, with Bryant Washburn, Mary McAlister, Lew Fields, Hazel Daly, Taylor Holmes, Marguerite Clayton, Shirley Mason, Ernest Maupain, Bob McKee and Ellen Paule as the stars.

Friday, July 20—Art Dramas Day, with Alma Hanlon, Jean Sothern and other stars present.

Saturday, July 21—Mutual Day, with Charlie Chaplin, Mary Miles Minter, Helen Holmes and James P. McGowan in the galaxy.

Sunday, July 22—Metro Day, with Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Edith Storey, Viola Dana, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and Emily Stevens in the Metro booth.

Every day during the Exposition visitors can see how moving pictures are made by visiting the studio in the Coliseum Annex, or they can be otherwise diverted by special entertainment given at the north end of the Coliseum.

The Red Cross Booth.

One of the features that is bound to create great interest and enthusiasm at the Exposition is the Red Cross booth. The names of the Chicago women who have been appointed as the committee in charge of this booth are Mrs. George A. McKinlock, chairman, and Mesdames Charles G. King, William P. Nelson, Fletcher Dobyns, Joseph M. Cudahy, William P. Martin, Orville Babcock, George McLaughlin and Edwin Ryerson.

Quite a number of dainty, useful and attractive articles already have been sent in by well known stars to Ludwig Schindler, manager of the Exposition, for the purpose of having them raffled off by some prominent player present at the Red Cross booth, the entire proceeds to be applied to the Red Cross fund. Manager Schindler, however, wants more articles and he makes another appeal to the prominent and well known stars in the business. Many of them have not yet been heard from, and he makes a hurry-up appeal to every one of them. It is not the cost of the article so much as its associations that counts in this case.

The Seventh National Convention Program.

The Seventh National Convention will be convened at 10 o'clock, Monday morning, July 16. All delegates are requested to report at convention headquarters, Morrison Hotel, before that hour, to receive their official badges. As at present outlined, the Convention will be opened at the same hour daily, until its adjournment.

On Wednesday evening at 11 o'clock prompt, a banquet will be given in the Morrison Hotel, and on Saturday evening, July 21, a grand ball will be given by the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, at the same hostelry, in its new ballroom, which will be opened for the first time. One dollar admission will be charged each person, and the attendance will be limited to 2,000. It is expected that the grand march will be led by Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Diversified entertainment will also be furnished, in which the players from the Terrace Gardens, in the hotel, will participate.

Rose Tapley, well known photoplayer and lecturer, will serve as official hostess of the Exposition. A better choice could not have been made, as Miss Tapley's amiability, delightful personality and resourcefulness as a "mixer" are ideal for the position.

Other Temporary Conventions.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will hold the first session of its annual meeting on Wednesday, July 18, at 11 o'clock, in the Princess Theater. Important matters will be discussed, including the increase of the Board of Directors from thirty to forty-two. Also there will be an election of officers. The headquarters of the organization will be at the Congress Hotel.

The Society of Moving Picture Engineers' Convention will be held July 16, 17 and 18, with the Hotel Sherman as headquarters.

The F. I. L. M. Club convention will be held in the Chicago club's headquarters, 207 S. Wabash avenue, Friday, July 13.

WESTINGHOUSE RED CROSS DIVIDEND.

At the regular meeting of the board of directors of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company held in New York on Wednesday, June 20, an extra dividend of one-half of 1 per cent. on both common and preferred stock was declared for the benefit of the Red Cross fund. This dividend, which will amount to approximately $375,000, is an addition to the regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent on both common and preferred stock, which was also declared.

At this meeting the annual election of officers of the company was held, with this result: Chairman of the board, Guy E. Tripp; president, E. M. Herr; vice presidents, L. A. Osborne, Charles A. Terry and H. P. Davis; acting vice president, T. P. Gaylord; comptroller and secretary, James C. Bennett.

GIVES WEEK'S SALARY TO RED CROSS.

Valeska Suratt has "come across" nobly in aid of the Red Cross war fund. She has given an entire week's salary to the cause, and only the star, William Fox and the Red Cross authorities know what that sum is.

Mrs. August Belmont, leader of one of the Red Cross war fund campaign teams, has the honor of getting Miss Suratt's contribution. She called the player on the telephone and asked her if she wouldn't do something for the cause.

"Certainly," Miss Suratt replied. "I'll send you a check on Monday." The check was the salary check.

CHANGES IN PHOTOPLAY'S STAFF.

Alfred A. Cohen of Los Angeles has been appointed western managing editor of Photoplay Magazine. Frederick James Smith of New York has been appointed eastern managing editor, and James R. Quirk, publisher, will assume the duties of editor.

Goldwyn Signs Up Big Exhibitors

Jones, Linick & Schaefer of Chicago and John H. Kunsky of Detroit Contract for First Runs.

JONES, Linick & Schaefer, owners of a Chicago chain of theaters, including the largest screen houses within the downtown "Loop" district, have signed for all of the Goldwyn productions which will be exhibited first at the Colonial theater in the very heart of that city.

Besides the theaters under their ownership, Jones, Linick & Schaefer are affiliated with Ascher Brothers and other film magnates controlling half a hundred important houses in the second largest American city.

Another important contract signed by Goldwyn this week is with John H. Kunsky for the first run rights for Goldwyn productions in Detroit. Mr. Kunsky will play Goldwyn Pictures at the finest of his houses, the Madison theater, and later they will also be seen at his nine other theaters in Michigan's great industrial centre.

W. J. & J. W. Dusenbury, owners of the Grand theater, Columbus, Ohio, one of the largest and best known houses in the state, have signed for all twenty-six Goldwyn Pictures for the next year.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Program for the Week of July 8 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Parentage" at the Rialto.

HOBART HENLEY'S study of the American home, "Parentage," was the leading feature at the Rialto for the week of July 8. It is a sincere, human story about the youngsters and grown folks of a place which everyone will recognize as his own home town. Back of all the laughter, the amusing character types, and the absorbing story there lies a lesson, the value of which no one will question. Mr. Henley and Martin G. Chandler, the co-authors, have made their picture primarily a capital piece of entertainment.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "Lest We Forget," pictures taken in Alaska and the Animated Magazine were also on the program.

"The Love That Lives" at the Strand.

Pauline Frederick in "The Love That Lives," written by Scudder Middleton and produced by The Famous Players, under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, was the principal picture at the Strand. As Molly, the office drudge, she portrays a character that is lovable and charming. There is an abundance of tense situations and thrilling scenes cleverly counteracted by humorous incidents. Miss Frederick is supported by John Sainpolis, Pat O'Mally, Joseph Carroll, Violet Palmer, Frank Evans, and Eldeen Stewart "The Love Philtre of Ikey Schoenstein," by O. Henry; a new "Study in Character Analysis" by Paul H. Terry, scenic and educational views, and The Strand Topical Review were also shown.

Micha Violin, Nadine Legot, Arthur Depew and Ralph H Brigham were the soloists.

"The Lone Wolf" at the Broadway.

The Herbert Brenon production of Louis Joseph Vance's thrilling novel of criminal life, "The Lone Wolf," featuring Bert Lytell and Hazel Dawn, has made an emphatic hit at the Broadway Theater and will continue its run for several weeks.

Eighty-First Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-First Street Theater for the entire week Douglas Fairbanks was seen in his latest surefire hit, "Wild and Woolly."

RUSSIAN ACTOR JOINS AVIATION CORPS.

Word has just been received in New York that Mozukin, described as Russia's greatest living actor, has joined the Moscow division of the Russian aviation corps. After an unsuccessful attempt at enlisting in the army and going so far as to disguise himself and enroll in an outpost of Moscow soldiery, Mozukin has at last persuaded the government to let him become one of the aviation corps.

The first screen appearance of Mozukin in America was made in Washington on the occasion of the reception of the National Press Club to the Special Russian Commission here last week at the Willard, in the unusual screen version of Pushkin's "The Queen of Spades," under the direction of N. S. Kaplan and the Russian Art Film Corporation.

Gretchen Lederer

GRETCHEN LEDERER is advanced by Bluebird as proof that musical comedy has not cornered all the pretty girls in the show business, despite the impression that may have been created by the ravings of "girl show" promoters. Miss Lederer has been a member of the Bluebird stock forces since the establishment of the program, filling the niche usually assigned to "second woman" in permanent dramatic organizations. In this capacity she has played stately dames and conniving matrons, vengeful females in many differactresses and neutral ent surroundings. But in every instance her work has borne the stamp of sincerity and she has always "registered" the points her directors anticipated.

Gretchen Lederer.

She began her Bluebird experiences in support of Louise Lovely, playing in "Bobby of the Ballet" and "The Grasp of Greed," a brace of spiteful females that helped the heroine to considerable sympathy. In "Little Eve Edgarton," "Polly Redhead" and "The Little Orphan" she supported Ella Hall; she played a "villainess" in "A Kentucky Cinderella," with Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford, and in "The Greater Law," soon to be released, she plays an admirable part. But her real chance to appear to the best possible advantage will come to her in support of Dorothy Phillips when "The Rescue" is released July 23.

Miss Lederer in this feature will be one of five society belles who radiate good looks and parade fine gowns through a problem play. When Ida May Park was casting "The Rescue" she picked the women in Miss Phillips' support, with an eye single to pulchritude—the Misses Aster, Malone and Du Bray completing with Miss Lederer the quartet of loveliness that has set Bluebird's press department digging for adjectives that denote nature's gifts of beauty to womanhood.

PAUL KIMBERLEY HONORED.

Paul Kimberley, an English film man favorably known in the United States, has been awarded the rank of captain in recognition of the splendid work he has done in furthering the interests of many war activities. Much of this has had to do with disabled soldiers and sailors. Captain Kimberley has been appointed technical adviser to the Ministry of Labor in the matter of the employment of soldiers and sailors.

At the annual meeting of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, held at Birmingham, the lord mayor associated with his toast the name of Captain Kimberley. In his response the captain said members of the trade had done much to help wounded men. In London a training center had been established where over thirty men, twenty of whom had lost a leg, were being educated as cinema operators. Some of these already were at work. The center had been given government recognition, and the men had received a measure of maintenance while learning. Similar centers had been established in other cities.

PATRIOTIC WORK OF CALGARY'S ALLEN THEATE

Lieutenant W. M. Brooks, commanding Ogden Section Military Hospitals Commission Command, has sent a letter to the manager of the Allen theater, Calgary, Alberta, thanking him and his associates for their aid in furthering the work of his organization. The theater, the musicians and the entire staff had given their services for a series of Sunday concerts, at which collections were taken and applied toward the prisoners of war fund and other patriotic purposes, including the purchase of a phonograph and records.

Thanhouser Will Continue Trade Showing

Veteran Manufacturer a Firm Believer in Giving Exhibitor Earliest Information Possible

WHEN I stated some weeks ago there had been some quiet agitation for the abolition of special critics advance showing, some Moving Picture World readers, who do not believe that revolutionary changes occur overnight, scoffed at the idea of any such change taking place. Since I originally spoke, five companies have stopped these showings.

Beyond a doubt, a picture shows to better advantage in a theater, but also beyond a doubt a professional picture critic can appraise a film as well at an advance showing in a projection room as in the theater. To say that such is not the case is to say that the feature reviewing of the past three years—and it is this reviewing that has made the trade paper a force in the industry—has been without result.

The fact that trade paper criticisms are the chief booking aid to the bigger exhibitors proves they have not been without result. I warn against the abolishment of critics' showings good-naturedly, for I know better today than ever that the exhibitors are not keen for the change, and I am deliberally trying to steer them away from a policy that may prove unpopular.

I say I know this "better today than ever" because I have been flooded with exhibitors' comments since the publication of my original statements. Knowing the general tone of these comments, I might easily do my colleagues hurt by allowing them blithely to adopt a policy that I privately knew exhibitors had gone on record against.

But these records are open to every producer in the business who is considering this change. Let him digest these comments carefully and let him make inquiry among exhibitors on his own hook. At any rate, here are the exhibitors' expressions my statement elicited:

George B. Guthrie, of the Oregon Theater, Salem, Oregon, writes:

I agree heartily with you that these showings ought not to be discontinued. Many of the small-town exhibitors have no other guide. In my case (I live in Portland) I usually see nearly all the features used in our theater in advance, but at the same time I take a great deal of interest in seeing the criticisms as published, and I would be entirely unwilling to forego the guidance of them as they affect me. That is, when I find that a picture is adversely criticised by several critics, I am not thereafter interested in it, and would not bother to view it if the opportunity presented itself.

In my humble opinion, I should much prefer to have more and better criticisms than to see them discontinued. We realize, of course, that professional critics take somewhat different angles than do our patrons most of the time, but common sense and a desire to be frank and outspoken will usually tell an attractive offering from an undesirable one, and refined points of criticisms made by several judges will not materially affect the choice one makes if that be true. It is my view that the industry must get rid of morbid and smutty productions at the earliest opportunity or it will be subjected to increasingly drastic regulation. Rigid criticism will aid greatly in doing this and will protect many exhibitors from showing many of the very undesired productions.

Permit me to say that I would like to know how I am to judge pictures if not from the trade paper criticisms; and how are the trade papers going to get me this information in time, unless manufacturers show them the films in advance? It is certain that I cannot screen nor attend the showings of all features before I decide whether to book them.

William Brandt, of the New Albany Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes in the same vein:

The manufacturers are making a great mistake in giving up the advance showings. I am willing to believe that the critics are not infallible, but experience in the work makes them fairly expert in judging the class of a picture; anyway, they shouldn't be handicapped in getting their reviews to us as quickly as they can, if we are to make use of them.

Ezra Rhodes, of the La Salle Theater, South Bend, Indiana, writes:

We do believe that trade paper reviews are of value, and we don't think of booking a picture until we can get the criticisms on it. It would be a calamity if the companies gave up the advance showings. However, I would like to suggest that most of the reviews are not suited to the very busy exhibitor. They are often quite too long, and I think would be more effective if boiled down so as to give the gist of the trade paper's opinion.

George Hyler, of the Rex Theater, Three Rivers, Mich., writes:

I think trade paper criticism is a good thing for the exhibitor, as it gives him a chance to line up good subjects for his house—the class of subjects that the public demands. I trust the critics' showings, therefore, will not be discontinued.

Cordial commendation is the keynote of a letter from Jack Matthews, of the Jewel Theater, Detroit. He says:

Permit me to send you my thanks for your good work. I am with you, and so is every other exhibitor hereabouts. If anything, the reviews do not come out as far in advance now as we would like. To delay their publication still further would be a real catastrophe. I hope the manufacturers will think twice about it.

M. A. Fleischman, of the United States Theater, Bronx, New York City, has strong views:

In the one reel days we did not trouble much about trade paper criticisms, and it didn't matter whether we read them in advance or not. But who wants to go back to the old one reel days? This is the day of big productions and we want all the advance information we can get. I am surprised that any manufacturers have abandoned the advance showings for the trade press, and I think had they consulted the exhibitors they would have never dared inaugurate such a policy.

Not as vigorous, but indicating the same general trend of thought is the communication of Guy L. Wonders, of the Wilson Theater, Baltimore, Md., which says:

I do not believe the advance showings to the press should be abandoned. Personally, I do not allow the majority of the present day critics to create my final judgment, but their criticisms make me able to compare opinions and are valuable for that reason.

B. L. Feinblatt, of the Westchester Theater, Mount Vernon, N. Y., writes:

I am glad you have brought the attention of the exhibitors to this [illegible]ce. I consider it one of the most serious the industry has even been confronted with—to take away from the exhibitor the information that permits him to select the pictures that bring him his [illegible]. The thing is that the manufacturers often forget that, unless the exhibitor is doing business, the industry itself suffers. The success of everybody in this industry is founded on the exhibitors' success, and when you take from him the chance to get advance critical information from trade papers you are taking from him the chance to do better [illegible]

Triangle to Distribute Paralta Plays

Affiliation Does Not Extend to Kerrigan and Barriscale Companies, Which Continue Independent.

Paralta Plays, Inc., is to market its productions through the Triangle Distributing Corporation. The negotiations were completed the past week by S. A. Lynch, president of the latter company, and Carl Anderson, head of the former organization. Through this association of forces Paralta avoids the outlay attendant upon the opening up of its own exchanges.

Under the contract Paralta Plays, Inc., and the J. Warren Kerrigan and the Bessie Barriscale Feature Corporations in no way lose their identity, and they are in no way amalgamated, absorbed or taken over by the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

The Triangle Distributing company's relations with the Paralta corporations are simply and solely that of distributor of their productions on a special defined policy of distribution, which, it is claimed, will prove advantageous to exhibitors.

No changes will be made in Paralta's production plans. Eight big photodramas a year will be produced by both Mr. Kerrigan and Miss Barriscale, making sixteen a year.

Speaking of the affiliation of the Triangle distributing interests with Paralta, a prominent Triangle official said: "We are much pleased over the establishment of our relations with Paralta. This organization is made up of business men who take picture production seriously. Their work is based on an idea which might be called reformative of some conditions prevailing in distribution and exhibition."

Mr. Anderson said that the aim of Triangle and Paralta would be to give the exhibitor the greatest attractions, show him how to develop their exhibiting possibilities to the utmost and aid him in every way to cut down costs.

NEW MANAGER FOR MUTUAL AT BUTTE.

W. A. Coughlin, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's sub-branch at Butte, Mont., has resigned, owing to ill health, and Wilbur G. Seib, booker at the Salt Lake City branch, has been appointed manager at Butte, effective July 9.

"Smiling Jimmy" Kelly Goes A-Fishing

Southern Exchangeman, Visiting in New York, Reports Marked Increase in Demand for Short Films.

JAMES B. KELLY, known to film men in the South as "Smiling Jimmy," is visiting his mother at his old home in New York City. Mr. Kelly has been connected with the Consolidated Film & Supply Company ever since it "was." His first work was with the New Orleans office, then for five years he was in Dallas, and following a successful handling of the super-feature department in Florida he was installed as manager of the Atlanta office, where he has been for two months.

Mr. Kelly reports high expectations among film men over the impetus to be given the picture business in the South owing to the concentration of soldiers in training camps in that territory. It is estimated that it will not be long before there are a quarter of a million men in that part of the country who will be seeking screen entertainment. He points out steps already are being taken to provide it. This large influx of men from all over the country is only one of the factors indicating better business conditions in the South. The cotton and steel demands were never greater, and there is a good cotton crop. The exchangeman notes a strong demand for short films. In fact, he will name for you many towns in which the exhibitor who shows four reels for a nickel is the man who is making the most money.

Just before Mr. Kelly came north he dropped down to Jacksonville for a fishing trip. That there might be no questioning on the part of the cynical he had a photograph made of the result. One of the local newspapers thought enough of the catch to describe it on the first page. There were six sharks in the "pile," the larger one weighing 250 pounds, as well as nearly 150 pounds of trout and bluefish. Mr. Kelly's companion on the trip was E. J. Sparks, general manager of the Lynch Enterprises, and himself an exhibitor. Mr. Sparks is shown at the extreme left of the pole, alongside of Mr. Kelly. At the right is Jesse Clark, manager of the Arcade theater.

JULY 17 IS BLUEBIRD DAY AT CONVENTION.

Tuesday, July 17, will be "Bluebird Day" at the Chicago Convention, with Violet Mesereau in personal attendance. Miss Mersereau is the only Bluebird star in the East. Miss Mersereau, at the Bluebird booth, will distribute souvenirs she has herself designed for the occasion and she will also be represented by a doll she has dressed for the Red Cross booth.

Dorothy Phillips, Ella Hall, Brownie Vernon and Ida May Park, of the Bluebird forces in California, have also prepared mementos for the Red Cross booth and will be represented by their own handiwork in various forms and designs. Bluebird expects to set an example to exhibitors at the Convention by demonstrating, in some measure, how "Bluebird Day" may become a feature event.

GENERAL FILM PROMOTES HOLLAND.

Theodore F. Holland has just been announced by General Film as branch manager at Indianapolis. Mr. Holland has been for some time a salesman at the same branch. He is comparatively a new man in the film business, having formerly been a salesman for a large flour concern, but his success as a salesman of film was noted by General Film headquarters and when the opportunity came promotion was made.

Goldwyn Names Initial Productions

Mae Marsh Will Be Seen First, on September 9, in "Polly of the Circus"—Madge Kennedy Follows on September 23 in Her Comedy, "Baby Mine."

GOLDWYN will inaugurate its releases throughout the world on September 9 with its most widely exploited star, Mae Marsh, in "Polly of the Circus," Margaret Mayo's celebrated play.

The second Goldwyn Picture will present Madge Kennedy, famous comedienne of the stage, in her first screen production, "Baby Mine," also by Margaret Mayo, and one of her most successful stage farce comedies. This production will be released on September 23.

Maxine Elliott, world-famed beauty and dramatic favorite on two continents, makes her first appearance on any screen in Goldwyn's third release, "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb This will be released October 7.

Jane Cowl, famous emotional star, is the heroine in "The Spreading Dawn," the fourth Goldwyn release, which will be seen on October 21.

Already, in addition to these four productions, Goldwyn has completed four other pictures and by September 1 will have twelve or more completed pictures ready in every detail. This will mean that Goldwyn will always be working six months in advance on its productions, giving its directors, stars and technical staffs ample time to make beautiful pictures slowly and carefully.

Incidentally, in announcing its first releases, an officer of Goldwyn comments upon the smoothness with which a new organization was formed and got under way in production. From the start Goldwyn has followed a fixed routine and system and has not been obliged to deviate from it in any respect. Only one or two minor delays occurred during the first six months of the company's history and time lost on these was quickly made up under a system of efficient management.

L. L. Hiller

THE growth of the motion picture business in the last few years has paved the way for the addition to the field of a new generation of executive factors; among these men is L. L. Hiller, treasurer of the King Bee Films Corporation. The stability and the progress of this young company, due in no small measure to Mr. Hiller's wise administration, mark him out for great possibilities of success.

L. L. Hiller.

Mr. Hiller's rise has been rapid but meritorious, as well as laborious. Prior to 1914 he had been identified with commercial and banking pursuits in Pittsburg; but in that year he succumbed to the "picture lure" and startled the world by engineering a simultaneous three theater motion picture show at the Grand Central Palace. His success in this venture whetted his appetite. With John Wilk he next founded The Authors Associated Agency, for handling motion picture scenarios. The growth of this enterprise led to an expansion of his activities and the formation of Hiller & Wilk, Inc., as state right brokers.

Next, on the foundation of the King Bee Films Corporation, Mr. Hiller was chosen by his associates in that enterprise to fill the office of treasurer—never a sinecure in a film company, but in this instance a job demanding sound business principles in its occupant.

Mr. Hiller, being in the early thirties, has the better part of his career in front of him. He is liked by all those in daily association with him and popular in the industry, two important factors in motion picture success.

Richardson On the Homestretch

He Passes Through Kansas City, St. Joseph, Lincoln and Omaha and Tells What He Saw.

Kansas City.

THE city of the Kaw, Kansas City, has about the worst projection proposition, viewed as a whole, of any found in 16,000 miles of travel, if the eight theaters visited may be taken as a sample, and I believe, though I could not make the assertion positively, that they are really above the general average. In every case but one, the Regent, the auditorium lighting was literally atrocious, from the point of view of injury to projection. In one high class theater the screen was very, very badly light struck every time the door opened to admit a patron (matinee); also on either side of the screen were open doors, poorly concealed by curtains. In this house there was no surrounding picture border of black. The work of the operator in this theater was fairly good, though very far from high grade, but such result as he was getting was being literally butchered by lack of ordinary intelligence in auditorium lighting, and shading of the doors.

At one time two ushers (I suppose they were ushers—they had official-looking caps on), held the door to the left of the screen wide open, with the curtains pulled apart, for fully two minutes, to the everlasting murder of that particular scene in this photoplay. The Regent was the only house of those visited where any degrees of even ordinary intelligence had been used in auditorium lighting, and the Regent could be improved by shading the screen light and massing the lights on the balcony ceiling in a row directly over the back row of seats, and then, twelve inches in front of them, dropping down an opaque shade, so as to cut all the light off the balcony ceiling. You would then get just as much light without the present annoyance to those in the rear three rows of seats.

But by comparison with the others the Regent is splendid. Also the work of the Regent operator was good—in fact fairly high grade, considering difficulty of location and that the operator's room is flooded with daylight. In the Regent operating room the ports are not covered with glass and the lens ports are too large, allowing the halo of light surrounding the picture light to escape into the auditorium, which is, of course, detrimental to projection. The speed of projection was approximately correct, and the screen surrounded by a very wide, dark border.

In all the other houses the picture was more or less unsteady. In several the picture light was very unevenly distributed, evidence of improper matching up of lens system. In one there was a terrific flicker and in one there was travel ghost, not due to worn machine parts. In fact, only the Regent displayed work even faintly approaching high-grade, though the Royal was, as friend Canadian would say, "not so bad." The light was brilliant and very well handled, but the work of the operator was literally being assassinated by the awful auditorium lighting conditions. In the other theaters the operators' work was distinctly mediocre, and in one case decidedly punk, nor was it due to poor equipment.

My judgment, from what I saw, is that Kansas City stands in very urgent need of a lot of fixing, both from the manager's and operator's end of things. I have seen no town or city in all my travels which stood in greater or more urgent need of that which I have to deliver than does the City by the Kaw, but the operator's union refused to make the necessary arrangements for the address, and, through a misunderstanding on my part, no attempt was made to get the managers to take it up. So nothing was done. Well, the seventy-six cities which have already heard me on this trip alone, will all agree that Kansas City is the loser.

To me it makes no manner of difference, except that I regret losing the opportunity to do that which sadly needs doing in that particular place. The very fact that operators turn down a thing of this kind is pretty conclusive proof that they need it, because progressive, wideawake men never let slip any opportunity to learn, and I venture the assertion that the operators' unions in at least seventy-three out of the seventy-six cities in which I have spoken will agree that good has been accomplished for both operator and manager. The other two unions, Memphis and Cincinnati, which stand with Kansas City, are 3 against 73 (thus far) on this trip, and 3 against about 125 all told. I could still have arranged for the lecture after my arrival in Kansas City, but was told by a member of the union that the operators would not attend, even if the lecture was given, so I did not bother, but got a night of undisturbed rest; which heaven knows I needed. The Kansas City Union simply demonstrated its unprogressiveness and lack of interest in the welfare of the moving picture industry, and by its action announced the fact that it is not interested in anything except a main strength and awkwardness policy. The screens of the city or such as I saw of them, speak eloquently of the effects of this attitude.

St. Joseph, Mo.

St. Joseph, Missouri, is a very wealthy city; also it is one of those slow-going ultra-conservative burgs, in which only a tornado could disturb the peaceful calm. Its hotels are, by comparison, simply awful. Its station officials stare at you in round-eyed amazement when you ask a question, as though astounded that you would presume to disturb their restful repose.

But after all one can but like the city, for it is a pretty one, and its people are both courteous and kind.

The operators' union of St. Joseph has urgent need for a good shaking up. It contains a few live wires, and other good brothers who probably would be live wires if the switch on their circuit wire pushed shut; which kindly act I did my best to perform, for the good of all concerned. Among the live ones with whom I came into contact were Brothers Bert Newkirk, W. M. Leucht and J. K. Lang. These men were energetic, progressive, and anxious to advance themselves and the profession of operating.

It was entirely due to the energetic action of Fred Cosman, manager Electric theater, and these three operators, that a successful meeting was held in St. Joseph. But even so, while these four men did all they could do, there were several absentees, and the affair was not one which did credit to the city.

Conditions in St. Joseph, as exemplified by the Orpheum, Royal, Empress, Electric, Colonial and Star theaters, are just fair. In the Orpheum, M. Remke, manager, there are two simplex and a motiograph (Enterprise Optical Company) dissolver, in charge of E. C. Nicklen and Bert Newkirk. The ports are covered with glass, the walls are black. There are a big vent flue and a sixteen-inch exhaust fan, all of which are excellent. The screen result so far as concerns the operator's work, is good, but projection is sadly marred by many bright green globes about the auditorium, in a mistaken effort to produce a pleasing effect. And it is pretty, too, but it is very hard on the eyes, and detracts immensely from excellence of screen results. I had a pleasant chat with friend manager, who admitted that my criticism of the lights was well founded, and said he "thought he would cut them out." Well, Neighbor Remke, for the sake both of your picture and the eyes of your audience, do it, and "do it now."

Group of St. Joseph Operators.

At the Royal, W. P. Cuffings, manager, I found eleven very bright sidelights, a clock literally plastered with light, ceiling illumination which is poorly handled, and decorations which are lighter than they ought to be, from the projection viewpoint, in a plain auditorium of that kind. In the operating room I found A. D. Sellars and Frank Murphy, the latter chief operator. The observation ports are of goodly size, but are unprotected by glass. Simplex machines are used, with their lamphouses piped to the vent flue. There was an open window and the motor rewind was doing its work too fast. As a whole, from the projection viewpoint, the Royal operating room is just average, and the auditorium lighting decidedly in need of attention.

At the Star I only glanced in. The operating room ceiling was, at a guess, about five feet eight inches from its close friend, the floor. I could not nearly stand up straight. The only thing which saved the situation was the fact that the negro operator, who I was told was also jaintor and general all-round factotum at $12 per week, was about five feet five or six inches long. I just took one look (sidewise, for I could not hold my knees and my head straight at the same time) and backed OUT.

The Empress, Dr. W. W. Wertenberger, manager, has two Motiographs, 1916 models, and a Wagner converter. The lamphouses are piped to the vent, and there is an exhaust fan. The operating room lights were out. The picture light was just fair, but poorly handled, there being frequently recurring discolorations at the bottom of the picture; R. L. Clark is operator. With the equipment provided results on the screen should have been high class.

At the Electric, Fred Cosman, manager, seating 1,552, the picture was correct as to size and brilliant as to illumination; also the auditorium illumination was very good. Two Power's 6A are used. Roy Lansing is operator.

At the Colonial, Ben Young operator, I found two Power's 6A in a light-flooded operating room, same emanating mostly from unprotected rectifier tubes; exhaust fan, but no fresh air intake ducts.

From the foregoing you will observe that while St. Joseph is by no means the worst, still she could and should improve very materially.

At 11.30 p. m. several managers and most of the members of Local Union No. 438 gathered in the Electric theater, and we did our best to arouse them to a realization of the necessity for better work in the reproduction of the photoplay on the screen, as well as less unnecessary waste in the projection of the picture and handling of the films.

Lincoln, Nebraska.

On my arrival from St. Joseph, Missouri, a whole flock of hands grabbed my grips, and from their badge-bedecked owners came greetings sincere and warm. The Lincoln operators union was on the job, gasoline wagons and all. I was rather pleased that it was 5:40 p. m., and that those Indians were thus automatically prevented from making me loop the loop, in the entertainment way, for very long.

But when Brother Willan remarked: "Say, Rich, I told Mrs. Willan to put an extra potato in the pot for supper tonight," I placed my arms lovingly around his neck and nearly choked the dear man to death. And was it some supper? It was! But I played a joke on myself, concerning which I will speak later.

After supper and a long-range view of the wigwam of the orator of the Platte, yclept William J. Bryan, and a glance at the Nebraska state house, we inspected several theaters.

The Magnet theater, N. H. Cinberg, manager, was visited, but I seem to have not made any notes. L. Willan is operator.

L. M. Garman is manager of the Strand and is reputed to be the first man to have put in a two-projection machine installation; also the first man to install a mercury arc rectifier. This latter was done before these machines were made for projection purposes, and it was necessary to put a regulating reactance coil in the circuit in order to steady and maintain the arc. Garman stands high with the Lincoln operators. He is known to all and sundry as a "Friend of the Boys." Personally I can vouch for the fact that he is the kind of man one likes to meet; hail fellow well met, who displays the welcome mat prominently, and makes you feel that the welcome is sincere. A. Bradshaw is in charge of projection. He is using Bausch & Lomb lens, Series II, No. 5, photographic lenses, price $45. They give excellent results, but their one-inch aperture causes tremendous loss of light. Bausch & Lomb dispute this, but fact is fact, even though not admitted by such eminent people as the sages of Rochester. The E. F. of these lenses is 6½ inches; back focus at least probably 4½ inches. In order to utilize even nearly all the light, with a one-inch aperture at 4½ inches b. f., the condenser would have to be at least thirty inches from the aperture, and that would force the arc back and lose great quantities at the other end of the lens system. Nope, it is not a proposition I can very thoroughly approve of. You gain in definition, but it is too costly.

At the Wonderland, F. D. Eafer, manager, I found Operator R. A. Lindsay in charge, and he proudly displayed a very clever automatic rewinder tension equalizer, or release; a film scraper; a tool to scrape the emulsion off the tension shoes, and several other clever stunts, all of which will be fully set forth in the Projection Department in good time. Brother Lindsay is a clever man—a man of ideas and brains, and I might add that Lincoln operators, as a body, are distinctly progressive. Quite some contrast between them and the Kansas City and St. Joseph men, not to the credit of the latter. Incidentally, I might say that on all sides I hear uncomplimentary remarks concerning screen results in Kansas City. I have on many occasions been asked: "How did you like projection in Kansas City?" the questioner smiling expectantly as he waited the reply? Just why Kansas City exhibitors tolerate this sort of work I don't know, though it is quite true, as pointed out, that they are themselves far from guiltless on their own end—auditorium lighting conditions.

At midnight Local Union 151 gave a really fine banquet in the Savoy Hotel, at which were present W. S. Ridgell, state fire commissioner; N. T. Sommer, chief Lincoln Fire Department; George E. Norman, chief deputy commissioner of labor for Nebraska; Managers F. P. Zehring, R. M. Garman, Charles W. Russell and Leroy Cady and the following operators, stage men and electricians: C. F. Markle, R. Willan, M. D. Bryant, C. J. Keggs, Erne Huslund, J. F. Stephens, V. C. Thomas, C. Conklin, John Huff, T. M. Packwood, A. E. Bradshaw, Raymond W. Fisher, R. A. Lindsay, John Braum, Stage Manager Rynic theater, J. P. McCauley electrician. Incidentally, it was here for the first time, I had the lens question propounded in the course of the lecture, answered fully and correctly by Operator R. W. Lindsay of the Wonderland theater.

I finished talking at 2.30 a. m., rolled into the hay at 3, and out again at 8.30, to catch the 9.45 for Omaha.

Brother Willan came with his car and toted us to the station. Good-bye, Lincoln. You're all right. See you all again some day, I hope.

Omaha, Nebraska.

From Lincoln to Omaha is a comparatively short run, at the end of which the writer climbed out of Mr. Parlor Car to find the reception committee of Local Union 313 waiting on the platform, with smiles at least seven inches wide, and the glad-you're-here hands of welcome waving in the air. Omaha proved to be something in the nature of a surprise. In years gone by I had received many complaints of the punk condition of affairs in that city, in so far as pertained to projection. Omaha cheerfully admitted the charge, but immediately disclaimed any claim to present-day backwardness. The men of Omaha, both exhibitors and operators, have the right spirit. Whatever may have been their shortcomings in the past, they are now traveling the right road. They make no claims to perfection, and are willing to listen to and act upon advice.

Both operators and exhibitors told me several times during the course of the day: "Mr. Richardson, we want you to handle matters without gloves. We are willing to take whatever is coming to us. We want to learn, and realize that it is up to us to accept and profit by such just criticism as you may see fit to make of affairs in this city."

And I found that to be precisely the attitude of both operators and exhibitors. After the lecture, one exhibitor, who has a large house in Red Oak, a nearby town, came up, grabbed our hand and said: "Well, I guess you are going to cost me between five or six hundred dollars all right enough, but even so, I want to shake hands." A question or two discovered the fact that he had a terrific pitch in his projection, and I presume he intends to remedy that glaring fault in his theater.

The Omaha men were very good to yours truly. My worst difficulty was found in sidestepping the well intended efforts of the energetic entertainment committee. In this, however I was partly successful, and did manage to grab off a couple of pages of sleep during the evening, which, as it turned out, was exceedingly fortunate, because it was almost daylight when the feathers again claimed us for their own.

Omaha has some excellent theaters, and is going to have at least one, in the near future, which proposes to be right up to the minute. The architect, who was an interested listener throughout the lecture, is about starting on a tour of the Pacific coast to garner unto himself ideas, which will later be incorporated in the new house. I particularly advised him to onceover the curved inclines in the Liberty Theater, Seattle.

In the Strand Theater, H. M. Thomas manager, the operating room is opposite the screen. The room is small, but has an exhaust fan, which handles plenty of air, though I do not remember whether it is taken in from outside or from the auditorium. The machines are Power's 6A. The lens system stands, I think, in urgent need of attention. There are two Auto arc controllers, which are reported as giving satisfaction. The house is a pretty one, and the stage set when lighted up during intermission, is quite charming. The blaze of light from the orchestra pit is, however, extremely bad. Projection is in charge of August Herman, chief, and Paul Blackwood, assistant.

The Empress, W. Le Douix manager, has a large operating room situated immediately under the southwest prong of the north star. I think the operator hangs his coat on one of the other prongs when he goes to work. It is reached by an elevator which ascends until it gets out of breath, whereupon you get out, and there you are. Once you have arrived, the room is excellent, though looking at the screen is apt to make the operator dizzy until he becomes accustomed to looking down from high places. Take my advice, brother Le Douix, and put a cuppla skids under that room, and launch it down into the midst of the main floor. Raymond Connors, chief operator, and W. F. Werner, assistant, are in charge of two Simplex projectors. There is an exhaust fan, and the ports are of goodly size, though not protected by glass. The arcs are handled by Auto arc controllers. The room has light walls, and there were two incandescent lamps burning—bad.

The Sun Theater, Sam Goldberg manager, is, I am told, Omaha's latest and most up-to-date photoplay theater. And it is a really beautiful house. It seats 1,400, all on one floor, what might be termed the balcony merging into the orchestra floor by means of steps. The decoration of this house is quite tasteful. The screen is bordered with a heavy band of black, and the result thereon is excellent, due partly to the intelligence displayed in surrounding the screen with black, and the intelligence of auditorium lighting, and partly to the excellent work of Brother Otto Hansen, chief, and Glen W[illegible], assistant operator.

Strand Theater, Omaha, Neb.

The operating room is large, but has light walls and considerable daylight. The lamphouses are piped to the vent flue. The projectors are Simplex, supplied with current through two transverters. The fuse links controlling the port shutters are at the ceiling, about six feet away from any possible source of fire. I am told this is the condition in all Omaha operating rooms; also I am informed that some official, who evidently has absolutely no knowledge of proper operating room practice, insists upon placing the fuses there.

For his information let me say that this is about as unintelligent a piece of business as one could well conceive. I haven't the space to deal with the reasons for this statement in detail, but in so far as actual protection to the audience goes these fuse links might almost as well not exist. They ought to be right down over each machine aperture and the rewinder table attached to a mastercord, of course. I am also told that this particular specimen of bone-head officialdom objects to toilet conveniences for the operator, and did object to even a wash basin. It is a shame that operators and operating rooms should be at the mercy of such crass stupidity as this.

I also visited the Princess Theater, Sam Harding manager. This theater has an operating room 6 by 8 feet, in which are two Simplex projectors, a rewinder, a rewinder table, two Auto arc controllers, a cabinet for toilet articles, a rheostat, a Fort Wayne motor generator set controller and other things, including the operator. With the lamphouse 13 inches from the mechanism, there are 18 inches between the rear wall and the lamp controls, but back of the lamphouses are the toilet cabinet and the rewinder bench, so that if either Neal Ryan, chief operator, or Oscar Wicklund, assistant, should happen to consume an extra portion of corn beef or cabbage, they might have trouble getting into the operating space between the two machines. There is an exhaust fan, but no glass over the ports; also, friend exhaust fan lets in a blare of daylight, because it is situated in the front wall directly behind the machine, and is unprotected by a hood.

At 11:30 I was conducted to the banquet hall of the Rome Hotel, where, to my surprise, I found more than 100 managers, operators and exchange men gathered about the tables S. C. Shipley has travelled from Lusk, Wyoming, and I was assured he had come wholly and entirely to attend the lecture. Lusk, I am informed, is more than 500 miles from Omaha. Mr. Wallace, of the Wallace Golden Rule Road Shows, had, as he put it, flivvered in 132 miles in order to attend the lecture, and C. A. Hatt had traveled from Sacramento, Cal, though he did not come entirely to attend the lecture, but timed his visit so as to be in Omaha to attend it. Mr. Hatt is an operator, and there were other out of town men whose names I did not secure.

H. M. Thomas acted as toastmaster, and, of course, did the job up brown. My audience was thoroughly appreciative, and very attentive indeed. At various times they smiled broadly, laughed loudly, and closely resembled, in solemnity, tombstones. After the address, which lasted until after 3 A. M., many of the guests lingered and spoke flatteringly of my humble efforts. My hand hasn't recovered yet from the grasp of some of those upon whose cornfield I had just finished promenading. But, they're a bunch of good scouts in Omaha. They knew what I said was absolutely true, accepted their dose of castor oil and tempered the wry face with a smile. And that's the kind of men who will get ahead and accomplish things. My compliments to Omaha and her managers, operators and exchangemen. May their shadow never grow less.

Carl Rich

MASTER CARL RICH, the six-year-old "heavy," has just completed playing a leading part in a Prizmacolor picture that would have taxed the ability of any seasoned player. That he successfully "got away" with it bears out the press predictions that he will develop into one of the screen's notable juveniles. In the taking of the scenes for the new process all the actions of the players are gone through at a speed about twice as slow as before the regulation black and white cameras. This of necessity calls for extra care and ability, especially in registering emotions.

Carl Rich.

In one of the situations in the picture just completed Master Rich was called upon to express emotions from the height of childish glee to the depths of baby despair. This is probably one of the most difficult pieces of dramatic work, and when it has to be done twice as slowly as the transition would naturally take place it demands unusual talent.

Master Carl Rich is the son of Charles Giegerich, who has many friends among film men, and in the several pictures in which the little fellow appeared his work has attracted attention.

It is said by the directors for whom he has worked that his understanding of situations is remarkable and that he is one of the few child actors easily handled.

National Association Meets July 18

Candidates for Directors Already Have Been Named—Propose to Increase Board to Forty-two.

THE first meeting of the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is to be held at the Princess theater in Chicago, on Wednesday, July 18, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. The meeting will be presided over by President William A. Brady, who will present his report and call for the reports of the executive secretary, treasurer and the special committees which have been created since the formation of the association last August.

At this meeting the candidates which have been nominated by the various branches of the organization are to be elected as members of the Board of Directors to serve for the ensuing year.

During the past week the producers, distributors, supply and equipment concerns and the general division consisting of individuals and the trade publications, have held meetings and selected their candidates for directors. The producers have nominated William A. Brady, World Film; D. W. Griffith, Artcraft; William L. Sherrill, Frohman; Carl Laemmle, Universal, and Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky.

Distributors have nominated the following: J. A. Berst, Pathe; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky; Walter W. Irwin, Vitagraph, V-L-S-E; P. A. Powers, Universal, and Richard A. Rowland, Metro.

Supply and Equipment Branch—Donald J. Bell, Bell & Howell, Chicago; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; J. H. Hallberg, United Theatre Equipment; Walter J. Moore, H. C. Miner Lithographing Company, and J. F. Skerrett, Nicholas Power Company.

General Division.—Paul Gulick, Universal; Arthur James, Metro; William A. Johnston, Motion Picture News; Joseph F. Lee, States Rights Buyer, and Thomas G. Wiley.

There are thirty members on the Board of Directors of the National Association at the present time, one-third, or ten, of whom are nominated by the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. Each of the four other branches nominates five directors, and President Brady has announced that it is his purpose to apply through the regular channel for an increase in the number of directors from the exhibitors from ten to fourteen and from the other branches from five to seven.

This action is taken in view of the large growth in the membership of the National Association during the past eight months and with a view to bringing to the directorate the new men representing important interests who have been helpful in upbuilding the organization. It is assumed that the various increases in the directorate will be approved at the annual meeting, in which event the producers have recommended that Samuel Goldfish of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and William Fox should be nominated as the two additional producer directors.

The supply and equipment division has recommended H. C. Cotabish, National Carbon Company, Cleveland, and Joseph F. Coufal, Novelty Slide Company, as the two representatives from this division. Fred J. Beecroft of the Exhibitors Trade Review, and George Irving, motion picture director, have been recommended as the two additional representatives from the general division.

Many of the officers and directors of the organization are planning to leave for Chicago on Monday, July 16. The headquarters of the National Association in Chicago will be the Congress Hotel.

GERALD GRIFFIN GOES A-FISHING.

Gerald Griffin went into camp at Winthrop, Maine, a couple of weeks ago. He has two cottages on Lake Annabessecooke, and took up bachelor quarters in one of them, preferring the cool pines to the arcs and tubes of the Metro studio. A couple of days after the photoplayer got into his disreputable khaki trousers he decided to go out and catch a mess of fish, but his boat has been on the beach all winter and was feeling frisky. It slipped out from under his tread like a fly beating it from a swatter and after very nearly accomplishing a double somersault and a half he landed on his left shoulder, dislocating the left arm. It will be about two weeks before his arm gets better and four weeks before he goes fishing again unless his present opinions change.

"Water Sports in Beautiful Hawaii" (Paramount-Bray).

THE beautiful beach at Waikiki, Hawaii, furnishes the attractive scenes found in the subjected entitled "Water Sports in Beautiful Hawaii," contained in Pictograph No. 75. Among the more interesting sights are the exhibitions of surf-board riding, which is the common sport of the native Hawaiians. The picture shows also scenes during a contest held by foreigners who have learned the difficult but exhilarating sport of surf-board riding. Another form of sport which is as exciting as it is interesting is a race in a native outrigger canoe. These canoes are made from the hollowed out trunks of trees and are extremely narrow. The expert swimming of Hawaiian natives is another attractive sight.

"China and the Chinese No. 2" (Educational)

The second number of "China and the Chinese" treats principally of the people of China, showing many different types variously employed. We learn from the picture that in China human labor supplants both the horse and the machine. All kinds of hard labor being handled by Chinese workmen with marvelous alacrity is a sight to make one stop and think. Then there is the Chinese acrobat, an eight-year-old boy, who performs in the streets, and there is the child laborer who plies his work with apparently equal interest with the grown-up. There is also the Chinese lumber yard, and Chinese ships in the harbor, which present interesting sights

"Sweden's Waterways" (Pathe).

On the same reel with views demonstrating placer gold mining in California the Pathe Company has presented some exquisitely beautiful views of Sweden's waterways. Her rivers and canals and lakes, replete with Swedish atmosphere in every particular, will be found in this attractive reel.

"Naples, Italy" (Mutual-Gaumont).

"Tours Around the World," No. 34, contains some attractive views of Naples, Italy's largest city. We learn from the picture that her streets are paved with blocks of lava, hewn from the sides of Vesuvius, views of which we are given, showing the huge volcano smoking in the distance. The beautiful opera house of Naples, one of the most beautiful in the world, and the largest in Europe, is shown, and also the castle of St. Elmo, erected by Charles V in 1535, and Naples' busy harbor. Neopolitan types of interest are also shown.

"Buenos Aires" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Views of Buenos Aires, the capital of Argentina, are given in "Tours Around the World," No. 34. Buenos Aires is known as "The Paris of South America," and is an unusually beautiful city. In the picture we are shown San Martin Square, Twenty-fifth of May Square, Congress Square and the Third of February Park. The British clock tower and the new station of the Argentina Central Railway is also shown, along with views of the northern corner of the port, the Government house, the cathedral dating back to 1752, the national hippodrome, and a panorama of the city from the House of Congress.

"Millions Lost in Corn" (Universal).

In the Universal Screen Magazine, No. 25, will be found an instructive set of views, demonstrating how millions of bushels of corn are lost every year by farmers through failure to test seed properly. This study of grains of corn are exhibited by courtesy of the New York Agricultural College, and show how grains from two ears of corn of apparently equal fertility are placed in a shallow box of wet sawdust, which is then covered to prevent evaporation and left to germinate. Moisture from the sawdust and a regulated temperature cause the seeds to germinate rapidly. Only ears which show a strong and healthful germination should be selected for planting.

"Going to Sea in the Heart of New York" (Paramount-Bray)

In the seventy-fifth release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph we are introduced to what is going on in the stationary battleship which has been constructed in Union Square, New York City. Here we find that men recruiting for the navy are trained. Captain C. F. Pierce, who is in command, requires the same strict observance of rules which apply to ships at sea. The men are daily required to go through exercises which keep them in physical trim. They receive instructions in knotting and splicing ropes, handling guns large and small, as well as their side arms. There are also held classes in theoretical seamanship and technical training, signal work and all of the many other kinds of instruction which is necessary for a sailor of the modern navy to have. An interesting subject.

"Character as Revealed in the Eye" (A. Kay).

An especially interesting release of recent date is the second installment of the Terry Human Interest series, entitled "Character as Revealed in the Eye." In this we learn certain facts concerning physiognomy which are founded on the teachings of Jessie Fowler, well-known in the world of phrenology and physiognomy. The picture gives pen sketches of various kinds of eyes, large, small, very full, slant eyes, and also eyes of different colors. The truth of the statements contained therein are backed up by living examples found in President Wilson, General Pershing, William H. Taft, Abraham Lincoln and Billy Sunday.

"The Pygmy Circus" (Educational-Ditmars).

A delightful number of the Ditmars series is entitled "The Pygmy Circus," and draws attention to the different characteristics of some of the smaller animals, and distinctions in their methods of propelling themselves. For instance, the turtle moves slowly and deliberately, while the lizard makes a mad rush for the objective point. The African chamelion is an adept pole climber, and so also is the tree toad, who climbs a rope with remarkable skill. The Australian turtle uses his snake-like head and neck to frighten his enemies, and the Ceylonese walking leaf insect trembles like a wind-blown leaf to deceive those who would destroy him. A demonstration of the skill of mice in holding their balance is given when they are placed on a revolving wheel and whirled around at an alarming pace. This number is also carefully sub-titled.

"The Life of a Bee" (Mutual-Gaumont).

An interesting study of the honey bee will be found in "Reel Life," No. 61. In this picture there are many close-up studies which aid materially in teaching us how the bee lives and works. The queen bee and the drones are pointed out to us, and we are told in sub-titles exactly how these members of the bee household are treated. We are also allowed to study the formation of the honeycomb. The construction of a cell for the queen is interesting, and we learn that she lives from five to seven years while the worker lives only three summer months. The larvae of the bee at different stages is shown, and also the young bee hatching and emerging from the cell. And it may be truthfully stated that this is one of the most lucidly illustrated bee studies of recent film publication.

"Motherhood"

THE Minerva Motion Picture Company of San Francisco has made and assembled seven reels of film, portraying scientific facts in the care of babies, commencing with the pre-natal period when the care of the prospective mother is most necessary to the well-being of the child. An exhibition of this film at the Russell Sage Foundation Building on Tuesday afternoon, June 26, under the auspices of the Baby's Welfare Association, brought forth criticisms and favorable comments alike, which ended in a unanimous voicing of the fact that it is the best film of the kind that has thus far been made. Owing to the fact that the audience was composed largely of nurses and women versed in scientific baby lore, friendly criticism of nurses and doctors performing in the picture was a common element of the afternoon. Nevertheless, our opinion of the film is that the adoption of copies of it by state or local authorities for exhibition before prospective mothers would be a step in the right direction.

The picture was made in California and covers first the right and wrong methods in the care of the mother previous to the birth of the child. We are then shown the right and wrong methods of caring for the baby after its birth. "Baby's Outing" is presented rather humorously, showing proper and improper methods of clothing it for out-of-doors, the right and wrong kind of carriage, and the diverse methods adopted by careful and careless nursemaids. We see baby put to sleep in a window bed slung outside of the window, and nicely protected; and attention is drawn to the common evil of keeping baby up until the home-coming of its daddy, who plays with it, treats it to pickles at supper, and is obliged to call the doctor before morning.

An interesting part of the picture consists of scenes in a home for illegitimate babies. And while it seems a superfluous part of this particular picture, the section dealing with the feeble-minded is of intense interest. The neglected period of childhood, from two to six years of age, is also treated in an interesting and instructive manner, showing close-ups of illy-kept teeth, adenoids and tonsils both in place and after being removed. The advisability of vaccination is also taken up, showing a close-up of the operation, and also one of the body of a smallpox patient when the disease was at its height.

This picture is not suitable for use in theaters, but should be shown before selected audiences.

Howe Pictures Exhibited at Rialto

Splendid Exhibition of Surf Bathing on the Hawaiian Islands Shown in Lyman H. Howe Subjects.

THE first installment of the Lyman H. Howe Travel Pictures, which are being presented at the Rialto theater, are attractive in subject matter and photography. It is entitled "A Flying Trip Through the Hawaiian Islands," and considerable footage is given over to the exploiting of the joys of surf bathing as it exists in Hawaii. It is truly a wonderful sight to watch natives and others fortunate enough to have learned the art, standing erect on a board, ride toward us on the backs of the waves as they pile in to shore.

Much credit is due to the photographer in the case for his good judgment in taking his picture from the best angle, insuring wonderfully effective views. The picture is also toned in blue, giving the water a more realistic appearance.

In addition to the surf bathing, views are included which show the native boys diving for pennies. If the remainder of the series is of the same excellent quality as the first installment the patrons of the Rialto will surely have reason to be well pleased.

RAISING THE STANDARD.

WHEN a certain standard of perfection has been reached it is a wise thing not to be satisfied with having attained the recognized degree that standard involved, for, to seek to remain stationary at any height, means that at an early date a retrogressive movement may set in; the far better way is to raise the standard higher and seek again to attain its altitude. This is what the leading New York picture houses are doing—and doing it much to their honor and credit.

To the casual visitor there seemed no need of any great change, to the critic the exactions of variation had not come as a necessary part of the otherwise well supplied program; but this was not so with an ambitious management. The Rialto and the Strand have each remodeled the stage and surroundings, very largely increased the powers of their electrical effects, and, in a way almost unexplainable, are presenting programs with an added power and charm.

In the large cities friendly rivalry or good-natured competition may justly take hold of a large number of theaters, equally advantageous to themselves, to each other as with the public and the trade at large. What an honor to the moving picture business is the man who having reached an acknowledged standard, proceeds to set up another and higher one. The public mind is being trained by such men, the public taste is cultivated, proving that no one can reach greater heights himself without lifting others after him. Here again we see even the best of pictures greatly improved by their manner of service, their surroundings and musical accompaniment. The conditions under which pictures are to be seen in New York are really superb.

When any individual, company, or organization, is not satisfied with having attained certain acknowledged degrees of perfection, but proceeds by self initiative to raise the standard and to climb still higher, no words can sufficiently speak their praise. The action itself is full of eloquence and the conscientious satisfaction and public appreciation is their great and well deserved reward.

"CHURCH RECRUITING POWER" OF PICTURES.

THE power of the moving pictures as a recruiting agency for the Christian Church is set forth in an article submitted to us by August Vogt of Dallas, entitled "Recruiting for the Lord with Motion Pictures," which was read before the Presbyterian Assembly in that place recently.

Inspired by the military activities of the day the article justly contends that "as it is the duty of the soldier to fight for the rights and freedom of his country, so it is the bounden duty of the Christian—and his Church—to fight for the Truth of Christianity." As a preamble to the decision at which he arrives Mr. Vogt says: "Thousands, yes millions of recruits are awaiting the call of the ministers of the gospel, to deliver them from the spiritual darkness in which they are wandering, like so many physically blind men trying to find their way through a strange and crowded city without the help of a guide.

"This spiritual blindness, however, can be cured. All that is necessary is to bring them into that religious light until they can appreciate the glorious brilliancy radiating from the Word of God. This being the undeniable truth, what is the best available method—the best weapon for the recruiting soldier to use to bring them into the light of the Church and its influence?"

After further drawing attention to the fact that Christ used parables to draw people to his teachings, Mr. Vogt contends that the pictures may readily and worthily take the place of modern parables in that they impress people with their teachings and are more impressive and appreciative. The drawing power of the picture is described as "more forceful and successful than any other agency, also they never fail." That the Church must "adopt the enticements of the national recruiting officer" is a worthy argument, also that there is "no more room in the Church for sad or gloomy pictures than for gloomy or stale sermons." Suggestions for the method of sermonizing by aid of the pictures are made as follows: "Each picture in the Church should begin with a pictorial text with biblical and symbolic characters and appropriate scenery. This to be followed by a two-reel clean and modern picture of life, with an interesting and illustrating story fitting the text and interwoven with good leading, and subtitles to explain. Such a picture need not take more than thirty-five minutes and should be followed by a short sermon upon the same text."

While not entirely new the above suggestions are presented in a new light when the writer of them presents the idea of the recruiting agency of the moving-picture. Truly he says: "Lodges advertise for new members. Why, then, should not the Church, the greatest of them all, so advertise for a larger company of soldiers for their King and Lord? Verily this plan would largely increase the number of those who ought to belong to the army of the Church."

We are glad to publish any and all good plans which will increase the power of the relationship between the Church and the moving pictures. To those churches which seek to use the pictures it should be told that there is already a large list of most suitable pictures for their immediate use; others will be forthcoming as soon as their profitable use is assured, for it must be known that even religious pictures cannot be made without great cost and suitable profit. That they are not more widely used is to be regretted. The days are rapidly being filled with evidence of their growth, as are also the desires for their further use as here expressed by Mr. Vogt. Doubtless there are many like him in other parts of the country. May the time between the desire and demand be constantly shortened by the early fulfillment of them all and the moving picture become as constant an aid to the Church as it is destined to be to all educational purposes.

ENDEAVORING to "practice what he preaches" to exhibitors and others, the Rev. W. H. Jackson of the staff of the Moving Picture World has for some weeks been giving picture exhibitions in his parish for the twofold purpose of educating the public and making money for the benefit of the American Red Cross, of which one of the largest branches on Long Island is held in his parish-house.

While there has been frequent reference to the value of moving pictures in general Red Cross work, Mr. Jackson has perhaps more than anyone else put the matter to a most thorough test and is able to record his success as exceeding all anticipations. It is for this reason that he presents a report of his efforts so that others may feel that the help and profit of moving pictures as an aid to Red Cross work has been lifted out of the realm of theory into that of educational results and financial profit

In the community where these efforts have been made there is now a most effective and well equipped branch with classes of all kinds required by the governmental authorities, with doctors and nurses in daily attendance, and with large classes of pupils, many of whom have already graduated as effective aids if needed. To meet these efforts a large amount of money is of course needed. One-third of the total cost is now being raised by motion picture exhibitions, while at the same time by means of these pictures the people are kept informed (as perhaps few people are) by the constant use of the latest pictures from all the battle fronts. Other educational and entertaining pictures are also shown, so that all other purposes of moving picture endeavor are supplied at the same time. As stated in a previous article, the present time is one of supreme importance and value, and should be seized at once for the same good and effective results as are recorded in this report. Mr. Jackson has also to express his thanks to many friends in the moving picture business for suggestions and practical aid in these his efforts which he expects to continue as long as the war lasts.

"THE EFFORTS OF FRANCE AND HER ALLIES."

A SOCIETY with the above title is represented in the United States under authority of the French Government for the purpose of enlightening the public upon all questions relative to those objects for which France and her Allies are contending either upon the battlefield or by legitimate propaganda. The chief representative of this society is Marcel Knecht, now residing in New York. After having served his country in the trenches and being disabled from active service therein he is thus doing a larger work upon the platform. True to the latest and most proper methods of enlightenment, Mr Knecht uses moving pictures which graphically describe those scenes words would fail to describe. Speaking the English language fluently Mr. Knecht is doing a most effective work and no one can fail to be impressed with the justice of the French cause and the righteousness of their demands.

"The Sailors of France." This is a three reel series of pictures showing the French Navy in battle activities, thrilling, graphic and successful, if the destruction of a German submarine is to be a standard of its efficiency. Officers of the United States Navy who have seen these pictures speak highly of their usefulness. The subjects make a fine addition to any program of a nature to give the public a chance to see how the "efforts of France" are directed upon the water even as they have so often seen them upon land. Edmond Ratisbonne, delegate of the cinematographic and photographic division of the French Army at 220 West Forty-second street is ably representing his government, and these films may be secured from him when desired.

DIRECTOR GIBLYN HONORED BY FURNISHERS.

Director Charles Giblyn of Selznick Pictures has been made a member of the General Committee on National Organization of the Home Furnishing Industry. Behind this rather laborious title there lies a signal honor, Mr. Giblyn being the only representative of the moving picture industry in the organization.

In creating the scenes for "The Price She Paid" last winter Mr Giblyn made a determined effort to get away from the conventional "movie" interiors, and make the pictures of homes of cultured people meet the ideas of the latest designers. He consulted with many of the leading interior decorators, and adapted their ideas to the peculiar requirements of the studio.

The result so impressed various officers of the organization which is devoting its energies to the improvement of public taste in home furnishings that Mr. Giblyn was invited to become a member of the national committee.

ARTCRAFT ANNOUNCES AUGUST RELEASES.

At the New York headquarters of the Artcraft President Walter E. Greene last week announced his company's offerings for August, presenting Douglas Fairbanks and George M. Cohan.

"For early August release," said Mr. Greene, "we will present George M. Cohan in a screen adaptation of his sensational stage hit, 'Seven Keys to Baldpate.' This photoplay was finished last week and offers to the screen something absolutely novel in the way of a 'mystery farce.' It is staged by Hugh Ford, and discloses an exceptional supporting cast headed by Anna Q. Nilsson.

"Douglas Fairbanks will also give another big box-office attraction in 'The Optimist,' and extremely funny subject presented in his own particular style. The new Fairbanks picture is now rapidly nearing completion and not only does it present the popular Douglas as an actor but as an author as well.

HERBERT, Frances. Born in Richmond, Va., and may truthfully be said to be one of the First Families of Virginia, for she is a direct descentant of Princess Pocahontas Rolfe. She is five feet, seven inches tall, and weighs 142 pounds. Fair complexion, copper-colored hair and blue-grey eyes. Miss Herbert has had no stage experience and under previous studio connections merely mentions "foreign and eastern," which is far from enlightening. She was the model for Paul Bouligny's painting of "The Temptress" and it is only natural that she should feel that vampire roles are her best parts, but she has played "all over the lot," and does not insist upon specializing in vamp parts. She is with the Master Motion Picture Company, of Houston, Texas, and finds a new way to say that her fad is her work, for she writes "my work is my life," and doubtless she hopes it will be her life work

Frances Herbert

POLO, Eddy. Born in Los Angeles, Cal. His father was an Italian and his mother an Austrian. Is five feet, eight and one half inches tall, and weighs 175 pounds. Dark complexion, black hair and dark blue eyes. Mr. Polo writes he was "born in the business," which means that he comes of player stock, and they start to work as soon as they are able to walk. As an aerialist he has made the name of Polo familiar practically the world over, and is perhaps best known to Americans in connection with the "casting" act which bore his name. Now he is the chief villian for all the Universal serials. His debut was made in 1914 in Universal's The Campbells are Coming, but his literally terrific falls as Rolleoux in The Broken Coin first centered attention upon his work. The Polo fights were as startling as the predicaments in which Miss Cunard found herself. He did Pedro in Liberty and has played in many smaller features calling for strenuous villany.

Eddy Polo

ZUBER, Byrdine Annette. Born in Chicago, Ill. Her father was German and her mother Scotch. Is five feet, three and one-half inches tall and weighs 128 pounds. Light complexion, Titian red hair, grey eyes. Miss Zuber made her stage debut in 1907 and has appeared in many important musical comedy productions, including "The Modern Eve" and "The Candy Shop." Her picture debut was made in 1914 in the Lasky production of "The Squaw Man." She later played with the Oz Film Co. and is now with the Emerald, and has just finished the lead in "The Slacker;" a notably big production. She has had leads or important roles in "The Man on the Box," "Brewster's Millions" and "The Master Mind," and in several Oz pictures. Miss Zuber has a wide range of fads, from sewing to autos; she plays the piano as well as she does the sewing machine, and is fond of dancing of the society sort.

Byrdine Zuber

FARNUM, Franklyn. Born in Boston, Mass. His father was Irish and his mother Scotch. Is five feet, eleven inches tall and weighs 175 pounds; dark complexion, dark brown hair and eyes to match. Mr. Farnum began his stage career in 1903. He has played the leads in Charles Frohman's "Dollar Princess," Henry Savage's "Little Boy Blue," Joe Weber's "The Only Girl," Lederer's "Mme. Sherry," "In the Candy Shop" and "The Sunshine Girl." In 1916 he celebrated Decoration Day by making the picture plunge at Universal City, starting to work in "Love Never Dies," a Bluebird, and he has been with the Bluebirds ever since. Among those super-Universals he has been seen in "The Stranger from Somewhere," "The Devil's Pay Day," "The Man Who Took a Chance," "Bringing Father Home and the Clock." Coming productions are "The Clean Up" and "The Fourth Glove."

Franklyn Farnum

LYONS, Eddie. Born in Beardstown, Ill. Irish parentage. Is five and a half feet tall and weighs 141 pounds. Dark complexion, dark hair, blue eyes. Mr. Lyons started his career in stock work in Chicago and put in three years learning one part, playing another and trying to forget the last production. After this, a couple of years in vaudeville seemed to be easy and six years with road companies was restful in spite of the one-night stands. About this time he began to wonder how it would seem to have a regular home. To find out the answer seemed to be "pictures" so into pictures he went, and he played in Biograph comedies with Mabel Normand and Mack Sennett under the Sennett direction. About six years ago he switched to Imp and then became a Universal player. Since then he has been playing light comedy leads for the Nestor productions, but light comedy does not mean light work in those Nestors—No.

Advertising for Exhibitors

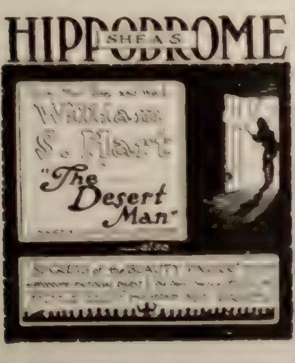
Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

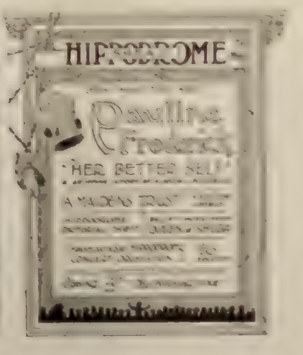
Intensify.

BECAUSE everything is presently going to cost more money and you cannot very well raise your admission prices materially, do not think to save money by cutting down expenses connecting with your film bill. If possible give them even better pictures, and do more and better advertising for them. Better pictures does not always mean high priced first runs. Often it may mean the rebooking of the known hits and doing more advertising for these. The first run is getting played out as an argument. It has saved hundreds of bad films from being worse losers than they were, but that is about the only good it has done. It has not really helped any exhibitor and it has hurt a great many. Get good pictures, play them up, and if they have been seen before you can bring that same crowd back and others with them. Advertise more generally and do better advertising. Strive more to make each point tell. Do away with "always a good show," "magnificent production," "most costly production ever made" and kindred stuff. Study the story of the film, pick out the best human interest feature and boom that. Some of the most costly productions ever made have been among the poorest, and picture patrons have come to realize that fact. They do not want to see the result of wasteful extravagance. They want to be entertained. They want light comedies and farces and dramas that do not require too much concentration. Now when they go to the theater they want to relax, to forget the troubles of income taxes and food panics. Don't be so foolish as to imagine that you are up to date if you dress your ushers as soldiers, drape your house with flags and play the national airs every half hour. Keep the flags for the front of the house and use them to advertise your patriotism and not your films. Be sensible and you'll be prosperous. Already people are getting sick of pseudo patriotism. They want to escape it, not to encounter it. Make your theater a haven of refuge from the hysteria, a place where a person can come and see a performance in quiet and comfort. Business may drop off for a time, owing to the excitement of events, but the next few months should be the most prosperous the right sort of exhibitors have had for many years, for economy will be the order of the day and the higher-priced shows will be the ones to suffer. The man who can no longer afford to pay four dollars for a pair of seats will turn to the pictures if they are the right sort of pictures, but he won't want to see a lot of junk. Show him stuff that he has not seen before and that others who have seen it will want to see again. Show him the best of the new stuff, but pick subjects as far removed from war and the suggestion of war as possible, and you'll land him for a regular when more prosperous times come back. You can do this with advertising and program selection. You cannot do it by running merely junk and reducing your advertising. Economize along other lines if you must, but make your house, your program and your advertising more comfortable and inviting than ever.

Good Newspaper Work.

H. B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y., sends in a few examples of his newspaper work that will interest Ralph Ruffner and a lot of others. He sends them in engraver's proof, getting the best possible copy for our own engraver, but we think that they came out as well in the papers, for there is nothing to mud up. In the Hart advertisement there is plenty of black, virtually serving as a frame of border and yet being a part of the illustration; a particularly happy effort. This is a two fives and yet it looks like sixes through the handling of the mass. The lines are strong and few. The second example is an ornamental frame. This seems shorter than the other when the pair are laid down a little distance apart. The overhang of the frame gives a white space on the sides that serves to set out the cut from the rest of the page. It suffers here by comparison with the other example because they are set so close together, and black in the mass always overcomes white in the mass. Sometimes this is true to the point where a black border kills its own display space, but here the black is all a part of the illustration. It is the interior of the barn. You cannot always have plays in which a character enters a barn and stands silhuotted against the light, but you always can make a similarly careful disposition of your blacks. The foot illustration of the orchestra seems to be regularly used and in time can form a part of the trade mark. Mr. Franklin also sends a one column display in which the cross hatching probably comes out better in the proof than it did in the paper. It is on the lines of Ruffner's Bill Hart cut, but the lines are lighter and will print better, though they will print well only with an air drying ink and not on one drying by absorption as is the case in newspaper work. A further exhibit is a calendar with a legible set of date sheets and a cut out, framed in gold, letting in a picture of the lobby of the handsome house. A press man for Mike Shea has to be a good one to hold his job, because Mr. Shea knows the game himself, but Mr. Franklin is better than merely good enough to qualify.





Real Press Work.

Press work, as it should be properly understood, has been used by H. A. Gillespie, of the Mercy Theatrical Enterprises, North Yakima, Wash., for Chaplin's "The Cure." Mr. Gillespie writes:

> North Yakima people have "taken" "THE CURE." Five times a day for three days they "took" it, in droves and flocks. Here is how it happened:
> About two weeks previous to our dates for playing Charles Chaplin in "THE CURE" a news item appeared in one of the lacal daily papers to the effect a night watchman was sure he saw the powerful lights of a flying machine. Now, I'll leave it to you if he didn't need the CURE. By the same token, so did the rest of the population of the city if they later also "saw" the "night prowler." Well, they "saw" it and then, as the inclosed newspaper clippings—many of which apeared on the front page—will testify.
> Now that they have "taken" "THE CURE" many of them are of the opinion the flying machine effect was secured by means of powerful searchlights on nearby hills; others believe small balloons were used; while some of the few who did not see "THE CURE" still believe they actually saw a flying machine—or the lights of one or two. At any rate, it is significant that now that North Yakima has "taken" "THE CURE" the "aeroplane" is no longer keeping people awake at night. I might also state the newspaper dropped the "story" immediately after the apearance of the two ads inclosed.
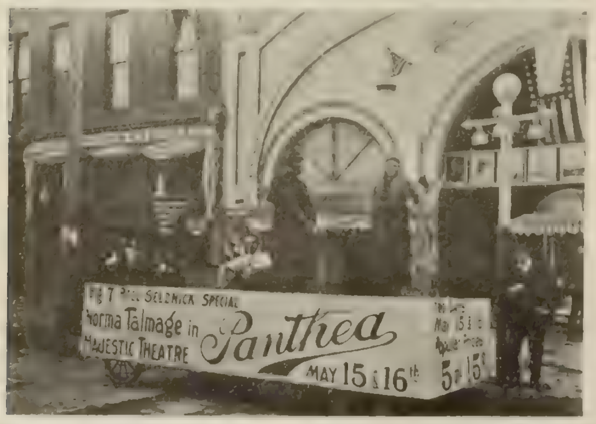
> Would also like to pass the idea exemplified by the inclosed card along to others who may find it of value. The card is self-explanatory. We keep a close watch on programs of theaters in other cities, and when a picture we have booked is run elsewhere a criticism is requested. There is a spirit of cooperation among at least the Western managers in this respect that is very gratifying.

Mr. Gillespie does not explain how he actually worked the stunt—which is selfish, but he offers a couple of suggestions. For that matter it is possible to get advertising zeps to send up in a pinch. Whatever was done, was well done, for the daily papers ran front page stories turning to an inside page some of them being almost two columns long. Not a word was said about the film. It was treated as straight news work, and indeed it is probable that after the story was launched there were many to actually "saw" the plane and told the papers about it. All of the stories use names and addresses, the first being a night watchman who saw the plane and also noted signals sent from one of the office buildings. Then a three tens did not explain the mystery, but apparently endeavored to take advantage of it. It is headed 'Aeroplanes and numerous other things that he saw in the night caused Charlie Chaplin to take 'The Cure,' and he sure needed it. Hundreds of Yakima people are in the same fix. They are seeing things and need to take 'The Cure.'"

The other enclosure to which Mr. Gillespie refers is a return postcard beginning "As reviews in the trade papers have been found to be unreliable, and I am trying in every way possible to keep things up and improve my program, I am endeavoring to secure a Manager to Manager criticism on each picture book." The request is made that the recipient fill in the other card. This merely asks "Is the plot good?" "Has the play plenty of action?" "Do you consider it a good box office attraction?" "Remarks." If Mr. Mercy will read the reviews in this paper and learn to adapt the criticisms to his own clientele he would get a better line than he will probably obtain from his brother managers, most of whom regard only the box office value of the picture from their own point of view. Criticism is merely the expressions of the opinions of the critic and criticism is of value only in proportion to the skill and experience of the critic. This paper goes to unusual pains to maintain a staff of men of mature judgment and ripe experience. They tell what they personally think of the picture as a film offering. They cannot say that this picture will prove a hit in North Yakima and that that other will not. They tell what they think of the pictures they see, and each local manager must apply that information to his own clientele. Criticism is written for the country and not for the locality, and locality may mean three different standards for as many houses in the same town. At least the critics are dispassionate and without prejudice. Exhibitors seldom possess the detached critical faculty. If the film made money for them it is a good film. If it didn't then the film is rotten, regardless of its merits as a production or it's suitability in some other houses. Some time back we used to read The Opera House Reporter. It was a treat to read the criticisms of the local managers. One man would call a company good and another say it was a poor company with a rotten production. And in another column the manager of the touring company might have a report of the week, and nine times out of ten you could tell from the local manager's report what the traveling manager's report would be, or vice versa. For example the road manager might say that the Gem in a certain town was a pretty house, but that the manager was a surly old customer who tried to make them pay three dollars extra for a man to hang their cloths, which they refused to pay so and played with house scenery. It was a safe bet that you could turn to the report of the Gem mangement and find that the troupe was poor and the special scenery they carried unfit to be shown in a regular theater. Another manager, with whom there had been no scrap would report the same scenery to be the best shown in house that season. Always the personal element will obtrude in house criticism. If the scheme works for Mr. Mercy it is a good scheme—for him, but we think he'll get stung going and coming. He will book in some poor films and he will refuse to book some good ones. Once we recommended to a New York manager an act we had seen in San Francisco. When we came back east he explained that he had asked several actors about the turn and they all said it was poor. Two years later he played the act for about three times the original salary asked and admitted that he was sorry he had not booked them in the first place. The head of the act was not a good mixer and the other players did not like him, so they did not like the act, and reported it bad. We didn't care what the man was off the stage so long as his act was good. We critisised the act, and only that. It is precisely the same way with films. If the comments on the films do not agree with your own estimates, learn to mark the difference. In time you can make the criticisms fit your particular house and they will run more evenly. We have no personal interest in the matter. We do not criticise films, but we do know that our reviewers show better judgment than any collection of managers possibly could, because they have been trained to the work. We would welcome something that would give the local manager some definite guide as to the value of a subject to his house, but Mr. Mercy's scheme will not likely work out well.

Another Decker.



Charles W. Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, sends in another example of his street work. This float represents a scene from "Panthea" in which the star is on her way to Siberia with a Russian police guard. The float is made to go on a seven seat automobile and probably is made demountable that it may be employed whenever occasion demands. The float, if made stiff enough, can be provided with rings in the four corners and be raised from the car or lowered to it by means of ropes and pulleys hung from the ceiling of the garage. The float is rather bare, the only setting being the tree trunk, and this was placed merely to give the woman something to hold on to, as she was right over the rear wheels, and got full benefit of any bumps. The driver might have been screened by a mass of green boughs, but it is not necessary to spend too much time or money on a float. The mere fact that it is a float and not a perambulating sign is sufficient to attract greater attention and get the announcement read. And it is not merely the reading of the announcement that counts. The float drives home any other announcement made through any medium. It crystallizes desire, and if not used too often, the float will convey the mental suggestion that the story must be better worth while than the average since more pains have been taken to announce it. Almost any tableau can be used for a float without great preparation, but we think that this example would have been more striking and have conveyed a more vivid impression had more of an effort been made to suggest a uniform. Yellow braid around the cuffs and chevrons on the sleeve would have been sufficient. And generally it will be found that a brief caption at the base of the tableau and above the sign will help a lot. Mr. Decker furnishes the basis of an idea that others will do well to copy. It is going to become more and more necessary, as time passes, to go out and get an audience instead of merely waiting for them to come, and the street advertisement in any form is good, and the float about the best of all. Even the bicycle sign mentioned in Picture Theater Advertising will pay for itself many times over. And right now is a good time to lay in a copy of P. T. A. if you have none. You are going to need that and all the other help you can get.

The Right Idea.

We cannot buy cocktails with letters as we can with what comes in our salary envelope, and we wouldn't want to be paid wholly in letters each week, but every little while we get a letter that is better pay to us than the specimens from Uncle Sam's print shop. Here is one from A. W. Ballenger, of York, Neb. It suggests that he is the son of the Mr. Ballenger who used to figure more prominently in this department in the old days. He writes:

> Enclosed in this same envelope are the displays from our local paper for the past three weeks. It is an evening edition, out about 4.30 P. M.
> I am paying more attention every day to the art of advertising. It is a real business in itself. I have a publicity desk, with file for advance press notices, a pigeon hole cabinet for newspaper cuts, with each companies stars and borders in its own compartments.
> On that desk is a drawing board, with drawing instruments and rules. It seems as if I cannot find time to devote as much as I would like to that end of the business.
> Another part of our equipment is a small 7 x 11 old style Gordon press. Our layout of types and borders is limited, but I am able to get out some fairly nifty work. Never worked in a print shop in my life. Bought the press and outfit last June and got to work learning it all alone. I often tell my father, with whom I work in the business, that it is not the kind of advertising so much, nor the cost of it, as it is the continually being at it that gets results.
> Advertising is just like our meals—we all get the habit of looking for it.
> Your department is being more of help to me than I am able to express. If exhibitors would study it, and try to work out the ideas which are given in it, and apply it to their own needs, they would get much better results.
> Most exhibitors are inclined to get careless about their advertising, figuring that the people know that there is a show anyway. That is true, but, the idea of advertising is not to reach the steady patron, but to get the new ones or the occasional one.
> We have a new theater in the course of construction which will be a beauty. Will send you in a picture of it later with a description. It will be early fall before it is ready.

We are not printing this because it is so flattering to the department, but because Mr. Ballenger has the right ideas and we don't want to cut out the kisses and spoil the flavor of the letter. We like best "if exhibitors would study it * * * and apply it to their own needs." That, in a few words, is what this department is intended to be. It gives the best work of the best minds in the business to be studied and adapted by each exhibitor to his own needs. When we reproduce samples of advertising we do not suppose that the reader can cut these out and use them for his own copy. They won't fit, but he can get ideas as to novel arrangements; the proper balancing of advertising and he can study them himself and make his printer study them. All we do is pick out the examples and comment upon them, but we've been doing amusement and advertising work for nearly twenty-six years now, and can select and comment better than the novice, perhaps, though Dave Udell, for example, does as good work with one-fifth the experience, though he is no novice, at that. Mr. Ballenger's special desk may sound faddish, but it is not. It is intelligent, just as his drafting set is intelligent. Get a cheap set of instruments and a fairly large drawing board and try framing your advertising on the board, using the T-square and angles for the rule work. In an early issue we are going to show some of Mr. Ballenger's work—and it is good work, but meantime, let that letter sink in. But not merely advertising counts, and we do not think that this is what Mr. Ballenger means. It must be good work and persistent, as well. Not all work is good. Right now the street cards are carrying the advertisement of a candy. The picture illustrates the phrase "On Everybody's tongue." It shows a little boy with one of the candy discs on his extended tongue and it looks more like a cancerous growth than a confection. Heaven knows it is persistent enough, for it has turned our stomach scores of times, but it is not good advertising. It must be strong and good and persistent if it is to have its full effect, but it must be persistent. We should like to see some of Mr. Ballenger's own press efforts. We have a 5 by 8 hand press that cost $18. It is too small for throwaways, but it is large enough for what we want and we have more than a hundred dollars' worth of type for that $18 affair. We could use more, but we picked out faces so carefully that we can get as much variety as many outfits with twice the weight of type picked up as fancy dictates. It is not hard to do your own printing if you don't try to work half tones, and you'll not only save money but you can get just what you want instead of what it pleases your printer to give you. We know one man in a city, who has a standing offer for all remnants from a stock house and two print shops. There may be a four-inch strip cut from a standard size for an odd-size job. He gets the paper for a fraction of the cost because the cost of the entire sheet has been added to the original job. He cuts the paper to suit and then makes his job fit the stock on hand just as Jay Emanuel buys his stuff by the carload lot.

What Tacky Means.

We asked lately what tacky meant, for A. P. Middleton, of the Queen, De Queen, Ark., advertised a "tacky party." He volunteers an explanation and adds a couple of good stunts for good measure. He writes:

> I see you are not familiar with the term 'tacky" as applied to parties.
> Well, in my town there are ten girls and ten boys about fourteen to eighteen years old who "run" together, have all their dances and parties together, etc.
> I arranged with them to appear at the Queen on a certain night dressed in the most comical manner possible, and agreed to furnish the music and floor for them to have a good dance after the show.
> They came, dressed in rural comedy style, red shirts and black ties, white pants and black dress coats, and every other way that would look odd. That's what we call "tacky" party.
> I engaged the services of three of the most popular young ladies in town to judge the contest.
> Result, the "tacky party" was the talk of the town for several days and people were caused to read the Herald for full information, and my box office showed an increase of about fifty per cent. over the usual for same night in week.
> In inclose card that it was funny to see them step off the sidewalk to pick up and read, and got me considerable extra money, I think, on account of the exciting of curiosity.
> I screened a picture this week entitled "The Man Behind the Curtain," a Vitagraph production, which was a good one.
> The title suggested the following, and I did it: I put up curtains across one corner of lobby and put a placard on reading, "See the Man Behind the Curtain." [illegible] board behind it with set of 11 x 14 and two 22 x 28 [illegible] it, and at the top a placard reading "It's Lilian Walker in the Man Behind the Curtain," arranged a 75-watt globe over it and kept it there a week.
> Result, a full house Friday night.

We fancy the box office result will run longer than the night of the dance; not the full fifty per cent. gain, but the house that does things to gain good will is always the house with the growing patronage. There is something more to running a house [illegible] than merely showing film plays on the screen. You must get and hold your crowd by being part of the town's activities. The card to which Mr. Middleton makes reference will not reproduce, so that the exact display cannot be shown. It is a [illegible]. On one side is printed, near the upper right hand corner, the Triangle trade mark. On the other side to [illegible] three and in two lines of twelve point "days legal" running into a letter-spaced 36-point "Warning" in gothic running almost across the page. This drops to a two-line twelve-point [illegible] and below two more lines reading [illegible] eyes." The back of the card is printed up with an advertisement for Peggy, but the essence of the card is the three days legal warning to appear in person. Care must be taken in distribution to see that the cards show this face and not the reverse if they are to have their full effect.

Stillman Programs.

There has been nothing [illegible] lately, for there was [illegible] to [illegible]. They were [illegible] apparently, by a woman press agent and they had no punch at all, and were reduced to four [illegible]. There seems to have been a change of editors, for J. N. Landfield now appears in that capacity and he gets out a [illegible] program and some house talk. It lacks the force C. L. Madden gave to his stuff, and which [illegible] of the bunch, but he writes [illegible] material might better be replaced by motion picture filler. We are glad to see the program [illegible] back. It [illegible] play, though [illegible] supporting. And once more [illegible] following. The [illegible] should be run longer than a week [illegible] knocks the "regular" audience [illegible] Stillman [illegible] covered before.

Has An Organ.

The Lyceum, Spring City, Utah, has started a house organ, a four-pager called the Lyceum News. Evidently it is a [illegible] monthly program is boxed on the middle pages with [illegible] around it. The first page carries all house stuff [illegible] of the plays to come on the other pages. It is [illegible] issue, with a type not too large, plenty of cuts and talk that sounds convincing, even if the manager does beat others to it by modestly announcing himself as a live wire. Evidently he is [illegible] mount in a small town. It would help a little to give times of showing and the prices somewhere in the program.

Victory.

It simply had to come, and it has come. The last program from Jay Emanuel, of the Park and Jefferson theaters, Philadelphia, carries dated days, every darned day. It has taken us two years and more to get Jay in line, but he is lined up at last, and a man can now tell just what Wednesday Jay is talking about. His program scheme, which we recently reproduced, is one of the most compact forms and ideal for a small or a double program, but he would not date his days, possibly because he liked to have us write him letters about it, but he is there now and he is made most welcome into the fold.

Neat.

The Palace theater, Morristown, N. J., issues a neat four page program with the effect of a drawn design through the intelligent use of rule work and ornaments. Any good printer can frame up a good front page design, but the trouble is that most of them get too much ornament on the page. Inside the days should be dated and there should be some space gained for an underline. We visited the house the other evening and noted that there are two brightly illuminated clock faces, one at either side of the auditorium. This would be bad enough, but there was a variance of seven minutes between the two clocks. They should be synchronized. A very bad feature is the use of illuminated advertisements on either side of the auditorium. These are trade announcements with transparent letters, and when the news film and other small features are running, there is a mass of light to fight the eye. The lights are cut out for the drama, but they should not be permitted at any time that a film of any sort is running on the [illegible].

Likes the Trouble Man.

The Lucas supply house, managed by Harry K. Lucas, at Atlanta, Ga., was written up by Brother Richardson when he visited the home that city, and Mr. Lucas liked the notice so well—and it was a notice to be proud of—that he immediately reproduced it (in a passionate purple ink) on a mailing card and sent it broadcast, and gave F. H. R. a write-up in the Lucas house organ. Now they are both happy.

Large Calendars.

Monthly calendars are a favorite form of advertisement with many exhibitors because they hold good for a month. Frank R. Powell, Jr., of the Mission, Ponca City, Okla., sends in some with this letter:

> While we have been using the Moving Picture World for several years, and have read with interest the Advertising Department, this is our first contribution in your direction. The calendar sheets enclosed herewith are samples of advertising recently used by us for our Mission theater. We would appreciate your valued criticisms of them and any suggestions you might have to offer.
> We use a large mailing list, including both city and rural patrons, and mail the calendars out about the first of each month. In addition to our mailing list we have about twenty nice frames in various places about town in which to display the sheets. The plan seems to be very successful. The population of our city is about 4,500.

The calendars are above the usual size, being 14 by 21 inches, printed across the greater dimension. The sheets are yellow, printed in black with bright red dates strong enough to fight through the black. Each day lists the attractions for that day and states the prices. These are large enough to be useful in stores and offices, and the frame scheme Mr. Powell's letter suggests might be enlarged. With a calendar that size it would pay to get them into the employees' entrances in large stores and in factories as well [illegible] small calendar is that the type is too small to read. Here eighteen and twenty-four point is employed for titles, which is better. We cannot suggest improvement.

Red Ink.

The war has brought red ink more than ever into favor, but for the love of Mike use red ink and not an orange, particularly if you are reproducing the flag. The national colors are red, white and blue and not orange, white and blue. It is hard to get a good red ink, but the red used in the three-color process is just the right shade. If you use red, use red and not something that looks like a St. Patrick's Day danger signal.

In Keeping.

Hamish McLaurin, publicity man for the Rialto, New York, sends in the souvenir he prepared for the anniversary of that house. It is a sixteen page booklet, deep cream stock printed in brown with descrip- [illegible] example of good work, and a fitting representative of what Mr. Rothapfel calls "The Temple of the Motion Picture and Shrine of Music and the Allies Arts."

Correcting an Error.

When you make a showing of the national colors out of respect to your country, have the decency to respect the flag. "Long may it wave" does not mean to tie the bunting to the staff and let it whip in the wind until only the halliards are left. We pass a number of picture houses on our way into town and we note that more than half of them have mere rags left of what were once perfectly good flags. Do a little repair work the moment a rip starts, and buy a new flag [illegible]

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

The Eternal Question.

PROBABLY no problem is more often presented in our correspondence than the one nicely put in the following lines:

> With such authors as Eugene Walter, Thomas Dixon and Mary Murillo writing for them, is it likely that the Fox and Selznick companies would pay any attention to the script or synopsis that I, unknown and inexperienced, may send to them?

There may be no use now in applying to those two companies, but what is there to prevent the correspondent from becoming both known and experienced? Eugene Walter was not born into the world seated at a typewriter and knocking out plays. By his own account he slept in the parks for lack of room rent while several managers were making up their minds to turn down The Easiest Way. Mr. Dixon, at one stage of his career, had no interest in life beyond his toes and the milk bottle. Miss Murillo, not so fearfully long ago, was in precisely the same position that our correspondent now occupies.

The trouble is that our correspondent, and thousands of men and women like her, can see only the immediate results. They want to write a story and get a check by return mail. They see the present, but do not look into the future. They cannot understand the value of working hard now that they may draw down the big checks five or ten years from now. They want to be paid every Saturday night, as it were, like a clerk or a bookkeeper, instead of looking ahead like the medical man who, once he has graduated, takes some of the best years of his life for extension work that he may become a specialist and do greater good while making more money.

One of our medical friends stands well at the top in his elected specialty. When we first knew him he had a small practice on the East Side. Right then he could have made more money uptown, but he got more experience where he was, and so he stuck, taking fifty-cent and dollar fees, and serving free in a local dispensary. Today he has no general practice and it costs at least five dollars to talk to him in office hours, and you do not get a very extended conversation at that price.

Had he hurried to get into general practice the moment he acquired his diploma he would still be getting one and two-dollar fees, but he spent several years in perfecting himself through practice.

It is the same way in story writing, in play writing and in writing photoplays. You do your practice work, you specialize, and then, and not until then, you collect. This does not mean that you should not try to make sales wherever you can. To the contrary, you should make every effort to get your work before the editors, for it is in this way you will become known, provided that you wait until you are certain that you can offer a reasonably good grade of work. Those authors were most fortunate who started in the one-reel days, because they could grow up with the business and progress as the business progressed, but there is not a single writer today who has not the chance if he or she is willing to work hard, long and faithfully, to become known through good work. Don't worry about the Dixons and Walters. Hustle your own progress along and you'll have no time to worry, and when you win through you can fix up and sell most of the stories which now seem to be drugs in the market. They will help you to get a reputation, even if they do not sell, and then you'll sell them on the strength of the reputation they made for you.

Photoplay writing, like all other special work, is not a sprint but a marathon. Be willing to go the distance.

The Little Things.

It is the little things which count. This morning we found a letter in our office which had no business there, for our office address is more or less of a secret because we use it as a workshop and not as a gathering place for the boobs, but this letter was addressed merely to our own name and "The Photoplaywright, New York City." The name of the paper, the street address or box number was missing. The post office had to make a search for the address. We knew at once that only some hopelessly incompetent fool could have addressed a letter in such a manner. But something else told us the same thing even more quickly, because it showed at a glance. The letter was pen written (of course) instead of being typed, and the writer had carefully shaded the letters, bearing down on the down strokes and being particularly careful to make the tops of the ascenders good and black. It might seem unfair to a writer to refuse to read a script because the letters on the envelope were shaded, but no intelligent editor would have opened such an envelope. He would have given it to the office boy to send back. No one with a message has time to fool with shaded letters. The editor knows that. He doesn't waste his time. Such a script is in the same class with the story with the hand paitned cover, and all the decoration on the outside. Make your stuff look businesslike. Leave it plain, and put all the effort into the script. It is the little things that count, for the big things will care for themselves.

Machine Made.

Do not merely grind out plays. Don't write plays merely because you feel you might swindle someone into taking one or two. Probably you won't because you cannot write a good play unless you have confidence in the idea yourself. Don't take the trouble to write out in full an idea that does not seem to you to be quite good enough but which might get through. Note the idea and then set it aside and let it grow. One man plants potatoes and takes out runty little tubers, and not many of those. Another man can plant the same quantity of seed and get four times the yield in large, mealy dreams of joy that are worth even the present prices. One man merely plants and harvests. The other man cultivates and fertilizes, in addition, and finds the harvest worth his while. Fertilize your plot with more idea, and then give it a chance to grow. It's the only way in which you'll ever find large checks at the roots of your plot ideas.

Hit the Eye.

The great charm of the motion picture is that its appeal is made to the eye and not to the ear. Read the words "two men" and the mind must picture two men and no two mental images will be precisely alike, no matter how minutely each of these two men may be described. Show two men on the screen and the eye immediately conveys to the brain the image that through the printed word may be evolved, and then only mistilly, after reading a page or more. Claude Melnotte takes a lot of words to tell about the Lake of Como. The camera can "pam" the entire lake in thirty seconds and give a better idea of the landscape than could be told in a million words. This is the charm of photoplay—its reason for being. This being so, do not write the story told largely through leaders merely supported by action. When we finally get real photoplays, you will be astonished at the few leaders used and will recall the days "back in '17" when there were often two hundred feet of leaders to the thousand foot reel. Someone, some day, will start to write real plays for the screen. It might be that you will arrive there first if you start soon enough.

Watch Essanay.

Watch carefully the results of the reopening of the Essanay studio at Niles. As we understand it, they are going to endeavor to resume the making of stories of a type familiar enough a few years ago, but which are missing now, red-blooded action without sex problems or involved psychology or what passes for such. We think that it will pay to watch for and study these early Essanays, for the probabilities are that these are the forerunners of the production of other companies of elemental but gripping dramas that will presently be demanded by a nation grown too weary of struggle and discouragement to find entertainment in the clinic and the social survey. No matter what the outcome of the war may be, the fact remains that increased taxation and a generally unsettled business condition will create a demand for plays stirring the emotions keenly while not requiring deep thought. These and smart comedies will, for the time at least, displace the heavy problem play and the morbid studies of crime.

Foundations.

"You cannot get much variety," pessimistically argues a correspondent, "since all stories are practically founded upon man's desire to possess a woman, or woman's desire to be possessed." We do not know what our correspondent has been reading lately, but his mental outlook is warped. Even if we granted that proposition to be absolutely true in the main, the possibilities are infinite. Sex doubtless is at the base of all desire for wealth, power or fame, but the manifestations of this desire and the means by which the object is attained are numberless. Don't take such statements too seriously. Reason them out.

Leaders.

Leaders often help a story, but if a story needs too many leaders it is beyond help.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Hasn't Forgotten.

Albert A. Estes, Orangeburg, South Carolina, sends in a scheme for change over as follows:

> It seems as if the punch marks were getting to be a very important matter. Don't you think that if the film exchange would have printed a form, or card, to be placed in the can with the subject, as follows: "Reel No. 1, Change Over at ——, the exchange inspector to fill in the scene or subtitle at which the change is to be made, the card to have as many spaces as there are reels in the longest subject, it would help a great deal? I am sure the operators would appreciate that sort of thing. The film inspectors at the exchange could fill in the blank with but little trouble, and thus the operator would have a change-over schedule, complete with each set of films. If the exchange won't do it, then operators could, at slight expense, have a thousand or so of them printed. We haven't forgotten your lecture, and let me tell you this was very thoroughly appreciated by the boys of Local 347, Columbia, S. C., to which union I belong.

Well, Brother Estes, I am not going to either condemn or commend your scheme. Such a cue sheet would, of course, help, but, as I have time and again pointed out, the change over sign should be incorporated in the negative, by the producer. I am very glad indeed that you boys appreciated my visit, and trust it has been productive of good in your city. And now let us all pull together to make our department better and more helpful than ever before.

Proposed Tension Equalizer.

L. Z. Nighswonger, St. Cloud, Florida, is the inventor of a take-up tension equalizer which he proposes to put on the market, and for which he has applied to the patent office for protection. As nearly as I can understand the matter from his rough drawing, the idea is to rest a roller against the film, between the lower sprocket and the fire trap of the lower magazine, which same is held against the film by the pressure of an adjustable weight. By means of an arm this roller operates two idler rollers which acts upon the take-up tension belt. The idea is that as the film tightens it will raise up the first named idler, and thus loosen the tension on the belt. I would have to see this invention in actual operation before I would feel competent to comment upon it intelligently.

Got Them Going.

Manual Nosti, Tampa, Fla., says:

> You certainly got the boys at Tampa going. Why, the day following your visit, they were working on geared-down motor re-winds and other things to beat the band. I can very plainly see where our investment in knowledge was for a most excellent purpose. I wish you every success and we hope to see you in Tampa again before very long.

All of which I think requires no comment, other than to say that it will indeed be a pleasure to visit Tampa again and any time opportunity may offer, though Isis and Osiris only knows when that time will be.

Vancouver, B. C., Operators.

Vancouver operators are live wires. There is no moss growing the soles of their shoes. Here is a group of "the boys" I met while in that city. I stood them up against the shrubbery at a point, where, if you stood as they are standing, you would be looking over the edge of a high bluff across the sound to the headlands beyond. From left to right they are Al. Hansen, secretary and treasurer Local Union 348; Ed. Hornby, one of the reception committee which made things pleasant for the editor; Robert Foster, president Local Union 348, and J. R. Muir, managing director Dominion Amusement Company for Vancouver, Victoria and Manaimo. In writing concerning another matter, after I had left Vancouver, Secretary Hansen says: "The boys are still talking about the lecture. They certainly appreciated it; also you opened the eyes of our managers to several points, all of which is good.

Group of Vancouver Operators.

Conditions in Australia.

From the island continent comes the following, indicted by Mick Langley, North Fitzroy, Melbourne, Victoria, Australia. Friend Mick says:

> Well, friend Richardson, I have collected all necessary materials to tell you of conditions over in this country, so here goes. First, as to machines, most of us are using Pathes, but lately there are a lot of Simplex coming on the market. The price for them, however, is high; they are selling at 146 Pounds (an English Pound is $4.84.—Ed.). I, myself, was at the Majestic, the only Triangle House in Victoria, and they put in a Powers' Six A. These machines only cost 96 pounds, including the stand, and I, personally, like them very well. Second, as to salaries, most of the operators are in the union. That is to say, we are combined with the theatrical people, which I don't like at all. While I am in the union, I would much rather there be an association of operators alone. What have we operators to do with heavy comedians and scene shifters, answer me that, Brother Richardson, if you can. (Nothing, friend Langley, except that in time of trouble a combination of operators and all other theater employees might carry considerable more weight than would the operators alone.—Ed.). Australian operators did have an association alone about four years ago, but it went bung. Salaries out here are from three to four pounds per week. A few get more, but not many. Third, most of the screens are just pure white canvas, while a few are showing on a brick wall. Fourth, the size of the picture is something you will laugh at. The largest is about 33 feet, which same is being shown at Hoyt's De Luxe theater. The throw is 150 feet, and they use 90 amperes (presumably D. C.—Ed). That is, of course, the extreme, but most of us have more than a twenty-foot picture. The Majestic is one house using 80 amperes at 65 volts with an 18 foot picture, and I say it can't be beat. It is the smallest picture in Victoria. Fifth, we all have motors and generators except in Melbourne. The motors take A. C. supply, and the generators deliver D. C. to the arc. Sixth, I don't believe there is a show in Victoria pulling less than 65 amperes, and some pull as high as 120. There are no mercury arc rectifiers in use, and I believe the Council won't allow the use of Hallberg's A. C. to D. C. set because it is designed for 220 volts, whereas our supply is mostly 200 volts.
> We are all using meniscus-bi-convex 4½ inch (diameter.—Ed.) condenser glasses, and I, myself, think they are the best. That optical dope with the Piano convex lenses seems to be getting all you folk's goat, but I am sure it will come to a head soon, and then you will be able to sleep in peace, as will also Brothers Martin and Griffiths. The writer is an American (United Statesan, you mean.—Ed.), and hailed from Philadelphia. But that was some time ago, for I have been in England for five years, and out here seven. I served under Harold Bond for six years, and I want to say that he is absolutely the best crank twister in Australia (I call him "crank twister," though he has a motor, which is more than I have. Rotten luck, but I have hopes). He was chief operator at the Majestic, but left there to go to the Palais-De-Danse, where he uses 120 amperes on a 160 foot throw, with a 25 foot picture. He gets the results too, believe me. Say Brudder, he is going to pay the Dollar Country a visit shortly, and I reckon will be right at your office, so show him any favors you can. He works for two Americans here, L. & H. Phillips, and they are live wires too, believe me. They get Famous, Paramount and Triangle features on each program, and first run at that, with Monday and Thursday change.
> Well, brother, I have told you about all the interesting things I know of, so far as concerns the State of Victoria. There are, however, four other states concerning which I know nothing at all, at least insofar as projection matters are concerned. When you answer this letter will you kindly tell us about the picture which was put on at Madison Square, as related in the World, December 16, 1916 issue. What amperage and voltage was used; also is Madison Square a picture show. The thing I refer to appeared in the Powers' advertisement on the back cover. In closing I want to wish to you, personally, good luck, also the Projection Department and Hand Book as well.

With regard to the big pictures, friend Langley, as you no doubt know, I most thoroughly and cordially disbelieve in them. With those huge pictures it would be necessary to have the front row of seats 50 feet from the screen, at a guess, in order to avoid excessive eye strain, fuzziness and a generally bad effect. And what do you gain by placing before the people a performance by huge giants instead of normal men and women. Answer: Nothing at all. You simply render it utterly impossible to secure the full benefit of the delicate shades in photography in our present magnificent photoplays. With regard to the picture in Madison Square Garden, I have forgotten, but believe they used two Powers' 48 ampere rheostats in multiple, cut down somewhat I think, and delivering between 80 and 90 amperes. That is merely my recollection of the matter. I am about 2,000 miles away from New York now, and can't get the exact data. Won't be back to the Great White Way until the latter part of July. Madison Square Garden is not a theater. It is an exposition hall, seating 24,000 people.

I thank you cordially for your interesting letter. I know it will be appreciated by operators in the United States and Canada. And now let us hear from some other of the Australian states, because data of this kind is interesting.

Voltage Drop.

> Enclosed find check for latest trouble-solving hand-book, and I ask you to kindly help me out of my present difficulty. We have been having endless trouble in getting good light, and I think it lies outside of my theater. The supply is A. C., and we use the best make of American made carbons. Have spent a couple of hundred dollars in economizers, and am now using a Lemon Arc Regulator. Have invested in the best and latest lamphouse and lamps for my Edison machine. Have torn out all my No. 6 wiring and replaced it with No. 4, but still I can't get the light we ought to have. The power company has a 2 K. W. Transformer about 150 feet from the theater, and a No. 6 or No. 8 wire leading to my meter. Besides a few families connected up, and pulling from this transformer perhaps 2 K. W., I pull about a 6½ K. W. load when the projection arc, fans and other lights are burning. Now is it possible that the transformer is too small, and that I am not getting the current. They carry from 110 to 112 at the power house. My neighbors kick about having dim lights as soon as I throw in the projection arc.

That settles it, Brother Eberwine, something is overloaded, and that something is very obvious, if your figures are correct. But they surely can't be correct, for you couldn't possibly pull a total load of approximately 9 kilowatts through a 2 K. W. transformer. The transformer must be considerably larger than you think it is. However, if the "neighbors kick" about dim light when you strike your projection arc that proves conclusively that there is overload, and it is up to the power company to find out where it is and eliminate it. It probably is in the transformer.

A Few Questions.

E. R. Havenar, Marquette, Michigan, expends a whole bottle of ink on the following:

> I wish to ask you the following questions: (A) How near to Marquette will you come on your present trip?—meaning by that, what is the nearest point at which you deliver a lecture. I would certainly like to see you, if only to say hello, good-luck, good-bye. I was talking to an operator from Detroit, who said he had heard you, but that it was too deep for him—away over his head. Why not put the lecture in print and sell it to those who, like myself, do not have the opportunity to hear you. I have studied the Projection Department; also I have the latest edition of your Handbook and the question booklets; also a set of Hawkins. I was talking to an operator who works for the same company I do, who said he did not need books to study, but secured all his knowledge through practical experience. Not long ago I had to line up his lens system for him. Comment is, I think, unnecessary. I will be setting up another theater in the near future for the same company. This other operator has six and one-half years' experience, as against my own two and one-half years, yet I am getting the most money. Query: which pays best, study or lack of it? My theory is: spend a little more money for knowledge, and a little less for ice cream, and perhaps things more injurious. But to get back to the questions. (B) A short while since I went to the prison at Marquette to give a show. They had an old Kinedrome machine and a Bell & Howell transformer. Everything was set up and ready for me. I ran the first reel at 60 amperes, but the light was not very good. Acting upon the suggestion of one of the con> victs, I changed the wires, and secured a 100 per cent. better illumination. Can you tell me why this was? (C) I am having a little trouble lately with the potential relay of my 50 ampere rectifier. I used ¾ cored carbons above with a ⅝ solid below, for 45 amperes. If I bring the carbons too close it causes the relay to drop and break the circuit. Now don't say the plunger is dirty, because everything is thoroughly cleaned from one end to the other every month. This has only been occuring since some good brother operators from Chicago and New York have been here with road shows, disrupting and dislocating my apparatus. Can you locate the trouble from the foregoing data? (D) Could you tell me the name of the company making the small bench forge, such as is used in the Triangle "Jim Bludso" picture? Both myself and wife will be anxiously awaiting your reply, because friend wife, besides being a good K. M. (Michiganese for kitchen mechanic.—Ed.) is very much interested in the Projection Department and the accounts of your trip.

Well, in the first place, Brother Havener, kindly present my compliments to your Better Half, and tell her I am indeed charmed to have so lovely a lady interested in my humble efforts; also I am very partial to good pie jugglers. And now, coming down to your questions: (A) The nearest point to Marquette at which I will lecture, so far as I know, will be Duluth, Minnesota. I may, or may not lecture in Milwaukee. That is up to the operators and managers of that city. As to the non-study operator, why it is hardly worth while wasting printers' ink and valuable space in comment. I will, however, remark that if the operator in question had a child in his home, lying at the point of death, he would hardly waste much time hunting up a doctor who did not believe in study, but gained al. his knowledge by "practical experience." It is rather a sad commentary on the intelligence of the gentleman in question when he admits that the relatively simple things I deal with in the lecture are "beyond his depth." That being true I should say he would be likely to drown in about six inches of water. (B) I could not answer this question, because I am dictating this reply in a hotel office at Salt Lake City, Utah, and cannot recall just what the various connections of the Bell & Howell transformer are. At a guess, however, I should say that the transformer in question was one having connections [illegible] to take care of low medium and high voltage, and that your first connection was for high, you afterwards switching to the connection more suitable for the actual line voltage being supplied. (C) Evidently there is something wrong with the winding of the coil of this particular magnet. With a battery and bell, test the coil for ground by touching its housing and one of the contacts. If you find the coil is grounded, then, using the instructions in the Handbook, first having secured a new coil from the G. E. Company, remove the old coil and put the new one in. I will, however, submit this matter to the G. E. Company, and ask them to communicate with you direct. [illegible] can't do it. It is barely within the range of possibility that if you addressed a letter to the Triangle Co. studios, Culver City, Los Angeles, California, enclosing a stamped envelope, they might send you the desider information.

A Clear Screen.

Ask the average operator why he has his condenser located as it is as regards distance from the aperture and he will reply to the effect that at that particular point he "gets a clear screen," which is [illegible] true. And within the limitation of his knowledge he has done the correct thing.

But the thing he does not understand is that there is more than one method of "clearing up the screen," and that his method may be, and most likely is, an extremely inefficient one. The changing of distance of condenser from aperture (moving the lamphouse ahead or back) alters (a) distance of crater from lens; (b) size of spot; (c) divergence of light ray between aperture and projection lens, and (d) position of a real image of condenser, which is the correct shutter position, hence in order to work intelligently in the matter of distance from condenser to aperture we must understand the relation of these various factors to each other. And how many operators are making any intelligent effort to understand these things? And yet it is absolutely essential to efficient work, and even good work, that the operators understand their efficiency because without a proper joining of the condensing and projection systems there will be unnecessary, and very possibly, heavy loss of light. Good work because the sharpness of the picture may be very greatly injured by improper joining of the two systems.

By improper joining you may (a) force your crater too close to the lens, thus setting up undue condenser breakage or fitting of the lens surface, or too far away, thus wasting light, since the law of light is that intensity decreases inversely the square of the distance. See figure 67, page 158, of the Handbook, and text accompanying same. (b) cause a too great divergence of the ray between aperture and projection lens, which involves loss of light and possible injury to definition of picture on the screen, and (c) forcing of the areal image of the condenser (shutter position) inside the lens barrel, or so far out that it cannot be reached with the revolving shutter.

And yet we find men who sneer at these things declaring that "practical experience" is all sufficient and that technical knowledge is of no value. But you DON'T find the fifty-dollar-a-week operator talking any such absurd piffle. The man who takes the I-should-worry position with regard to studying the finer points of projection gets the union scale because the manager has to pay him that, but it is extremely unlikely that he will ever receive more. In many instances high priced jobs have passed the self-satisfied "old timer" by and have fallen to the comparative novice, who has availed himself of every possible avenue of knowledge. The man who depends upon practical experience has only at command such knowledge as his own necessarily limited experience has supplied. The experiences of thousands of other operators, as set forth in the Projection Department of his trade paper, as well as knowledge gained by and through costly research and experiment, is to him as a sealed book.

Ask him, as I asked Secretary R. McDonald, secretary Memphis, Tenn., Local Union No. 144 (two witnesses present): "What is the ratio of movement of the intermittent movement of your projector?" and, like your worthy secretary, he will reply: "I don't know what you mean," although like the good brother secretary, he may be cutting from 60 to 65 per cent. of his light with his revolving shutter.

Such men receive the union scale but cannot very well expect to receive more. Personally I would consider a man who cut such a percentage of his light, under the conditions present in the theater in which the foregoing occurred, as being rather an expensive luxury, even at the union scale.

I mention this incident only to show how non-progressive a man can be. Should the worthy brother take exception to the use of his name, I have three highly interesting letters from him which I will be very glad to publish and leave it to the fraternity at large as to whether or not I am fully justified.

Waked 'Em Up.

Donald Barnhill, Miami, Fla., sets forth the following, all in green ink:

> Well, Brother Richardson, I can safely say that you waked up the operators and managers of Miami, although things have been progressing slowly. The managers are just a little bit skeptical, as yet, but, on the other hand, are very highly pleased with the efforts the operators have put forward for improvement since you left, and the results of these efforts. I have tried out your new lens combination, as per the chart, and have found it to be the most satisfactory. It certainly does the trick. I have just finished reading your Miami chat in the "World," and am highly pleased with it. You placed the faults of each and everyone precisely where they should be, though I, personally, think you were not quite strong enough in some cases. I have painted Mr. Operating Room a flat black, and have geared the rewinder down until it requires 4½ minutes to rewind 1,000 feet.

Well, brother, 4½ minutes to the 1,000 feet is a big improvement, but you have my permission to get another couple of pulleys and reduce still further, until it takes from 10 to 15 minutes to rewind 2,000 feet. I am glad indeed to know that my visit to Miami has produced such excellent results. Let the good work go on. Kindly present my best respects to the guid wife, and tell her I trust she has by now ceased to monkey with the truth. My compliments to the Miami men. May their shadow never grow less.

It Helped.

R. B. Wilby, manager, Montgomery, Alabama, says:

> First I wish to thank you for the kind things you said in your article dealing with conditions in Montgomery. Your lecture seems to have had quite a fine effect on the boys, and the praise given in the story added to it. There is a noticeable increase in the pride they take in their work, and in the interest they take in trying to improve it. They now seem to feel they have a reputation to sustain, and I must say, as a manager, that they are doing their level derndest to do it. Perhaps the clearest indication of this is found in the fact that every operating room in the city had a coat of black paint within three days of the time you left the city, and I haven't seen a light burning in an operating room since you left.

I am glad to know, friend Wilby, that the lecture has been beneficial to the men in your city. Let the good work go on. I hope the pride manifested will continue, and that, as the years go by, it will increase, because it is the man who has pride in his work who ultimately mounts the ladder of success.

Development.

GIVEN proper lighting and an approximately correct exposure, development with a good formula is more or less automatic. A knowledge of the purpose of the various component parts of the developer is, however, desirable.

The purpose of any developing agent, such as Metol, Glycin, Hydrochinon, Eikonogen, etc., which may be employed, is to reduce to a metallic form the silver in the emulsion that has been acted upon by the light.

Carbonate of Soda, or other alkalines, increase the affinity of the developing agent for oxygen, and also serve the purpose of opening the sacks of gelatine wherein lie the particles of silver which are to be acted upon. This action is slow or rapid in proportion to the amount and quality of the alkali used.

The rapid oxidation of the developing agent by the alkali needs a corrective agent, which is found in Sulphite of Soda. This chemical also controls the color of the image. Without sulphite as a part of the developer, the negative would be yellow and stained. The action of sulphite is to eliminate the yellow color to a greater or less degree, depending upon the amount of sulphite used. If there is too much sulphite in the developer the resulting negative would be of a blue-gray color, having a tendency to produce flat positives.

The most desirable color for a negative is a warm black with a slight tinge of olive. This character of negative prints easily and if proper balance has been observed in lighting, it will be found the most satisfactory quality for printing.

With a proper understanding of the purposes of the chemicals going to make up the developer, it is easier to understand the necessity of maintaining harmony of arrangement of the component parts and to adapt same to the conditions under which one is working.

Some carbonate of soda contains caustic soda or caustic potash and the quantity being unknown, the action of the alkali cannot be definitely predetermined. Impure sulphites also have an indefinite amount of alkali, causing uncertain and variable action. Only sodas of known purity can be depended upon to give uniform results.

Various developing agents have their merits and may be successfully used either separately or with various combinations, such as Metol-Hydro, Artol-Hydrochinon, etc.

Temperature is an important factor of development and for best results should be carefully observed. Dark room and solutions should, if possible, be kept at a temperature of 65 to 70 degrees Fahrenheit and the developer should never be permitted to go above 70 degrees in summer or below 65 degrees in winter.

Too cold developer produces thin negatives, with an appearance of fog in spots. A developer that is too warm will produce a heavy, flat quality, lacking in gradation and atmosphere. It is a good plan to test solutions with thermometer.

In tank development, temperature is particularly important. The point of complete development is often a matter of uncertainty with photographers, largely because of lack of attention to the temperature of solutions. If developer is too cold, negatives will reduce very much in fixing and the contrary when developed in solutions that are too warm.

The dark room light should be of sufficient volume so that development can be judged up to the last stage. It should be remembered, however, that no light is absolutely safe. A combination of ruby glass and orange postoffice paper is recommended, also Wratten safelights which are made for plates of different degrees of sensitiveness.

With the proper kind of developing light and with temperatures that are approximately correct, the securing of good results is a matter of experience and judgment.

Complete development of the negative is reached when all the various light intensities are recorded in their relative values. Development should proceed until the highlights have reached the limit of density, through which detail can be printed without over printing the shadows.

Opportunities for Free Lance Cameramen.

A large number of camermen have sent in letters asking for the addresses of firms that buy negatives from outsiders, consequently this department wrote to several different film concerns asking if they were on the market for free lance stuff and what price they paid and the class of material desired. Not all of the replies have come in yet, but the principal buying concerns replied promptly.

Pathe News Department writes:

> We are in receipt of your letter and are glad to refer your communication to the International Film Service, who are now gathering news films for us. They, no doubt, will be pleased to give you the information you request.
> With best wishes, we are, Yours very truly,
> E. COHEN, Editor

This was followed by a letter from the International Film Service, Inc., 226-238 William street, New York, saying:

> Your favor addressed to the Pathe Weekly has been referred to this office for reply, as we gather all of the negative for the Hearst Pathe News.
> We are particularly interested in news stories that "break." By this we mean pictures of great disasters, such as fires, tornadoes, ship wrecks, etc. On schedule events we generally have time to get our staff cameramen to the various places, but we are always glad to be advised in advance as to these events, and if a free lance cameraman gives us this information we will assign him in case we wish the event covered.
> Our price for negative is $1.00 per foot for all negative used. All film should be sent to Hearst Pathe News, 1 Congress street, Jersey City, and copies of the titles enclosed with the negatives. An additional copy of the titles should be mailed to this office. Very truly yours, E. B. HATRICH.

Jack Cohen of the Universal Animated Weekly, 1600 Broadway, New York, gives the following interesting information:

> Now that we are releasing three reels a week, our Weekly being issued twice a week, we require all news events of national interest. Subjects in both of these releases run on an average of 70 ft. in length, and we pay 60 cents per foot for all accepted.
> We have started on the release of a Screen Magazine containing subjects of an educational nature, such as anything of unusual type in industrial life, new machinery for saving time and labor, unique places, scientific subjects, and, in fact, anything that is not of momentary news but has sufficient interest to show in films. Each subject will run in length about 200 feet.
> I would like you to impart this information to the different cameramen who inquire about our weekly. Very truly yours,
> J. COHEN, Editor Universal Animated Weekly.

Pell Mitchell, editor of the Mutual Weekly, put out by Gaumont, Congress avenue, Flushing, N. Y., says:

> Thanks for your letter. In reply we wish to say that we are in the market for film from free lance men, but it must conform to a certain standard of photography which we maintain, and for such negative as we actually use in making up the Weekly we pay 60 cents per foot.
> We want to thank you in advance for your co-operation, and if we can be of assistance to you at any time in connection with your Motion Picture Department of the World, we shall be glad to know it.
>
> With kindest regards and best wishes, Yours very truly,
> GAUMONT COMPANY,
> By Pell Mitchell, Weekly Department.

A. B. Jewett, of the Photographic Department of the Ford Motor Company, which releases the Ford Weekly and educational subjects, intimates that it is useless to submit negative to the Ford Company. His letter is as follows:

> In reply to your favor with reference to free lance cameramen supplying us with motion picture negatives.
> At the present time we have our own corps of cameramen operating throughout the country, and for this reason would be unable to take advantage of your offer.
> Many thanks for same, however.
> FORD MOTOR COMPANY,
> A. B. Jewett, Photographic Dept.

For the benefit of its readers this department will gladly publish information about any other markets for free lance film. Can any of the readers suggest other places where negative is purchased from outside?

pany me wherever I went and has lived up to her agreement ever since.

I was really little more than a child when I joined the Shuberts' forces in New York. The year of the San Francisco exposition, as both my mother and myself wished to attend it, I obtained an engagement in a theatrical company booked for San Francisco and we came out here.

Later, while a member of the Blanche Ring company at Los Angeles, I became acquainted with several people who were working at the Universal and all urged me to join the "movies." At that time I did not think much of it, but when I was induced to meet Lois Weber—Mrs. Phillips Smalley—I became enthused and she, offering me a fine opportunity to "try out," I accepted and under her able tutelage soon realized that I had "found mystelf" at last.

Mary MacLaren.

Since I have joined the David Horsley forces I have had the chance to inject more of my absolute individuality into my work. Mr. Horsley has splendid ideas and his kindly co-operation with my efforts is, I am sure, bringing out the very best there is in me.

I have been having some amusing experiences in connection with my change of name. To my old home friends in Pittsburgh I am still Mary MacDonald, very few of them knowing me as Mary MacLaren. As an illustration, I have just received a letter from an old school girl friend, who writes to inform me of a wonderful "double" I have in the person of a moving picture star.

She begs me to try and see one of this girl's pictures and, if possible, meet her personally and then write and tell all about the interview. She ends her letter by stating, "and the strange part of it is, that her name is almost like yours, she being a "Mary Mac" like yourself."

June Elvidge's Clothes Club

NOWADAYS almost every photoplay actress who is a star adheres to some hobby or other, the carrying out of which she feels sure will immeasurably further the progress of art in the movies. June Elvidge, the World-Brady star, has formed a club whose object it is to teach movie actresses how to dress correctly for the screen. Recently Miss Elvidge has received letters from prominent film actors requesting that a men's auxiliary to the club be formed.

"Wearing the right clothes for the screen," says Miss Elvidge, when asked about her project, "is an art in itself, quite distinct from just wearing pretty clothes on the street or at home or even on the speaking stage. In the first place, one must be careful not to wear extreme styles, which are fads for only a short while. Did you ever sit through a picture taken perhaps only six months or a year ago, in which the actress wore extreme fashions? Then, one must learn color combinations from the screen angle. Often colors which clash when seen naturally make the most wonderful tone combinations on the screen. And it works the other way about, too. In 'The Whip,' where I break in on the hunt breakfast and claim Diana's lover as my own, I wanted to look as smashing as possible. I spent all my spare time for days in selecting my gown. It was black, with huge pink roses on it, and was really most effective off the screen. And what happened? Why, it looked like nothing on the screen. Instead of being a beautiful adventuress going to a hunt breakfast to break hearts, I might have been a Sunday school teacher going on her rural rounds to uplift the young.

"One of the objects of my club is to teach each girl what sort of clothes are most becoming to her style of face and figure, and what lines, no matter how fashionable or becoming to others, she must avoid for herself. For this purpose we are going to engage an expert 'style doctor,' as we call her. The history of fashions and the psyschology of dress are two of the many things we are ambitious to go into.

June Elvidge.

"The need of such a club is all the more felt because we have men for directors instead of women. Oh, yes, he knows if she looks pretty, but he does not know whether she is suitably dressed. Why, I have seen an ingenue who was supposed to be a direct heiress to a million go to a country club wearing a white Mother Hubbard dress, a Honolulu grass hat and black satin tango slippers over white stockings. When I spoke to her director about it he said he thought she looked awfully cute."

June Elvidge is quite a recent screen acquisition. She does not believe that there is no royal road to success. She knows that there is, for she has travelled it.

"What I have done many girls can do," says Miss Elvidge in the ignorance of perfect beauty. She does not seem to realize that she possesses the open sesame to every door in that profession which she has chosen.

Miss Elvidge started in the chorus. It was in the Winter Garden of 1914 that she got her chance, and before she had been a chorus lady for two months she found herself an understudy for Jose Collins, the prima donna. When Miss Collins, a few days later, couldn't perform for some reason or other, Miss Elvidge played her part without a rehearsal and made good. It seemed easy, and so, when a motion picture manager negotiated for her beauty not long after this Miss Elvidge said: "No; in the silent drama I could not use my voice. I want to be a prima donna."

That sounded final, but Miss Elvidge did not know those cinema directors. She was more or less deluged with offers, and two years ago she went with the World-Brady Company to play small parts. After her first two pictures she was advanced to leads, and now she is being featured. Her current screen appearance is in "The Crimson Dove" with Carlyle Blackwell.

Although it has been Miss Elvidge's lot to play "heavy" or vampire roles, she does not mind a bit. In fact, she prefers them to ingenue roles.

"I may not get as much sympathy as the sweet ingenue," said Miss Elvidge, "but I have a lot more fun and opportunity for real acting."

The Continuity

J. Grubb Alexander.

THE success or failure of a picture is in direct proportion to the entertaining value of the story contained therein. The story itself is the rough frame work around which the drama is constructed, while the basic plot is the foundation upon which the structure rests. If the plot is weak, the frame work will not stand the buffeting of the elements, in this case the public. If the story, but the finished continuity; the backbone from foundation is strong and the story or frame work weak, the solid footing is of no avail, the elements will unseat it. If the foundation and frame work are both strong, or in this sense, plot and story respectively, then we have something. But now comes the development of the play structure, or the continuity. This must be well constructed or the foundation and framework are useless, as they are hidden, and the finished structure will not please and attract—the story will be lost.

J. Grubb Alexander.

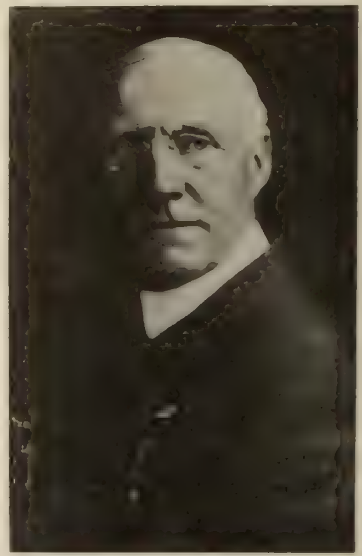
The basis of a motion picture is not merely a plot and which the structure must, in every instance, hang. Of course, the continuity alone, no matter how well constructed, is not enough for an artistic finished product; other elements must enter into the makeup of the successful picture. It must be transferred to the screen by a director capable of a true conception of same, giving it those subtle touches that can only be seen on the stage during the taking of said picture. Again, the characters must be portrayed by artists capable of acting, not necessarily stars, but actors, with a perfect understanding of the psychology governing their movements as the plot unfolds. But underlying the whole is the continuity and story—they are the basic foundation upon which the motion picture rests—upon which the future success of the business rests, and essential to that success will be the perfect harmony between the author, director, and actor, so that the finished product can be likened to a statue, every element in its place and making a finished entirety, each part recognizable as a needed factor in the resultant product—the perfect motion picture, free from propaganda, clean, wholesome and, above all things—entertaining.

Importance of Quality

By Thomas Ricketts.

IN a recent interview Mr. Thomas R. Ricketts, the veteran director now engaged in directing the Mary MacLaren features at the David Horsley studios, when asked his opinion regarding the permanency of the moving picture industry, said:

"There is a quality that is lasting in the motion picture, a quality that will ever appeal to the intelligence and enter into the human heart and linger at the shrine of its great desire. This quality is of such vast import that producers of the photo drama cannot afford to ignore it if they expect to remain en rapport with their public—the constant theater-goers. I am, however, led to believe by some of the pictures I see, that producers have not yet generally realized this importance. Many others are alert and show the march forward toward the ideal. The quality of which we speak is truth and sincerity and the paramount issue is the story, first, last and always, for therein lies the opportunity for sincerity. Having obtained your story, a story with a motif of honest purpose, pruned of artificiality and the spectacular, the dragging in of "punch" to the detriment of an otherwise clean-cut, uplifting and appealing theme, cast it with all-around capable actors of legitimate experience to interpret it. Have it directed by a director who "knows" and add to this photography as nearly perfect as possible. These will be the pictures to live and become staple articles to the producer of the future, when the great spectacular pictures will have lost their glamor and become sans attraction. Conservative manufacturers might do well to think it over."



Thomas Ricketts.

EARLE FOXE A RESERVE OFFICER.

Earle Foxe, who plays the part of Nicholas Knox in "The Fatal Ring," Pathe's new serial, is an officer in the reserve corps of the United States Army. He received his military education at the Ohio State University, where he was one of the students greatly interested in things pertaining to military drill and military studies.

TWO NEW DIRECTORS FOR FAIRBANKS.

John W. McDermott and Joseph Henaberry have been engaged as directors for Douglas Fairbanks. They will work under the supervision of John Emerson, who will hereafter be known as director general.

Both Mr. McDermott and Mr. Henaberry have had considerable experience as directors, the former having been with Morosco, while the latter is a graduate of the Griffith school.

WILLIAM EARLE DIRECTS EARLE WILLIAMS.

Paul Scardon, who has directed Earle Williams in some of Greater Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon features, has a new star under his care—Harry Morey. Through a re-arrangement of combinations, Mr. Williams was placed under the management of William Earle, and Mr. Morey was transferred to Mr. Scardon. Mr. Scardon was a charter member of the Screen Club of New York, and has been one of the most active workers for its upbuilding.

Clara Kimball Young Discusses Picture Art

By Margaret I. McDonald

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG weathers the gale of an interview well; she is alert to the situation and handles it with businesslike skill. She talks easily on whatever angle of the subject is presented to her, and does not depend solely on personal charm or charm of environment to impress her listener. She has something to say about the art with which she has allied herself professionally and proceeds to say it without forcing the interviewer to the pick-and-shovel method of securing "copy." In short she impresses you with the fact that she is a woman of professional experience, that she has profited by that experience, and that her familiarity with her art does not stop with the grease paint or mere obedience to the order of a director. She has made a study of her art—she has gathered by the wayside.

Clara Kimball Young.

Naturally the conversation was not without its reminiscent side, when she spoke of the merger of the interests of the spoken stage with those of the screen, of the pitting of the stage star against the screen star in the silent drama, and of the consequent survival of the fittest in the birth of a big corporation. Then she plunged headlong into a discussion of, or more properly speaking a dissertation on, the moving picture art.

"In every scene of my pictures I want the utmost care to be given to the backgrounds. If the interior set is representing a home it must reflect the character of the occupant. If it is to be a beautiful home, then the background must be arranged accordingly, not overladen with detail so as to detract from the figures moving against it, but furnished with carefully chosen articles which make a fitting and artistic environment for the character."

"The same idea follows in the choosing of exteriors," she continued. "For instance, a director goes in search of a certain location requiring as its chief essential a road bordered by trees. The ideal location is found, but in focusing the camera on the road at the wrong angle practically all the beauty of the scene is lost, while by a little care in a matter which may seem a trifle would result in a delightful effect.

"People who go out to have snapshots taken make the same mistake. For instance, they stand all in a row, or up against a post, or in a doorway, instead of choosing an artistic background that may be close at hand, or creating an amusing situation, which would at least make the picture amusing to look at afterward, if not beautiful."

"In arranging an exterior background it is only necessary to survey the scene through a circle made with your hands," she illustrated, "which would give you the same perspective that your camera would get focused at the same angle.

"A very little thing may ruin the beauty of your scene. A sloping hill with a single tree surmounting it, for instance, may constitute an artistic study; while the addition of a group of houses may ruin the intention."

"These things may seem too trifling to mention," she continued, "but in the making of a moving picture play it is often necessary for us to interpolate scenes of explanation, scenes which feed a certain situation. Therefore, if these scenes which in themselves may lack action are made interesting by the choice of artistic backgrounds the spectator is spared that sense of "drag" which an uninteresting explanation (and we must sometimes explain) tends to give a picture.

"I do not believe in one woman pictures," she stated emphatically. I want all my players to be good players. That is the real meaning of a supporting cast. I want them to have all the opportunity that they can possibly have for the sake of the picture; for, no matter how wonderful I might be, if my support is poor the picture is spoiled.

"There are various things that a woman must be careful of in dressing a character; one of these is the arrangement of the hair. The arrangement of the hair changes the character of the face. It is a common thing to see actresses wear their hair in different styles in different scenes of a play. I always wear my hair in the same style, unless age or conditions call for a change."

Miss Young believes that stage experience is a very essential thing to success on the screen. At the same time she draws attention to the fact that many players of the spoken stage have been failures on the screen. This is due, she says, to two reasons, one being that some of the popular stars are no longer in the bloom of youth, and the camera, reading your very soul, transfers whatever it sees, age or youth, to the screen in its true state of preservation. The other reason is that it is sometimes difficult for the player of the spoken stage to adapt himself or herself to the limitations of the camera. It is difficult for them to move effectively in such limited space, and it is difficult for them to improvise lines to speak in conjunction with the interpretation of a certain idea, having always been used to memorizing the lines of a written play. These and other like obstacles she states have to be overcome in a successful transfer from the spoken stage to that of the silent drama.

A summing up of Miss Young's ideas on the making of artistic pictures leads to the avenue of beauty, and is consummated in her statement that "every scene should be as beautiful as an artist's painting."

As It Was In the Beginning

By Jack Sherrill.

SOMETIME on or about April Fool's Day of 1909, the lame and halt pedagogue, who expounded the "do and the don't" of elementary English and complex "math" to me in a "private sanitarium of learning" out Chicago way, most heartlessly dismissed me from that "house of knowledge" because, in the calling of the roll for the afternoon session, the name of Jack Sherrill remained unanswered despite his frantic repetition. The old "martinette," however discovered a wagging tongue in the neck of one of the dressed up Fauntleroys who held down the desk next to mine, and from him learned that I was spending the afternoon handing plaudits to the heroes and sheroes down at the local "nickelodeon." Thus exit Jack Sherrill from the temple of knowledge, and thus indirectly began my life as a picture player.

Jack Sherrill.

Despite the fact that I most graciously offered my time and my father's money in tuition at a number of academies "sech," still I played stronger and stronger on the "movies" until I had learned just what tonic saturated the hair of each one, just what tooth brush met with their approval, who was married to who, and in fact I became a pestering encyclopédia to those unfortunate enough to have been forced into my company.

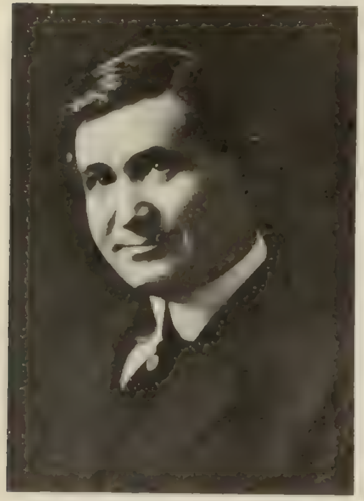
Some three years after this time of first expulsion, I purchased every known theatrical journal, and displaying them proudly under my arm, that I might be adjudged an actor, I sallied me forth to conquer the studios of both Essanay and Selig. For age upon age it seemed I kept going to these studios, and just as regular did I come away, but still I remember the dejected and rejected horde who "camp" there each day. Then one day came the red letter event. A certain dyspeptic gink, termed a director, singled me out and asked but the one question, "Have you a dress suit?" That's all he said, "Have you a dress suit?" still it was enough to force the first pleasant look which had crossed my contenance in three months, and it caused me to dash madly home that night and lay awake wondering what time I was to be called in the morning and incidentally "where I was to get the dress suit to which I had claimed ownership." I lay awake all that night, stayed awake all the next day, and then again for another night laid awake, still the call did not come.

Then came seemingly another decade of waiting until one day I was again singled from the extra horde and put right into a scene far far away from the camera, and when the time came for the paying of that first check, with widespread countenance, I went to collect, feeling confident that I was to receive a compliment and another call for the morrow. Instead I received no one bit of comment, and I confess now, as I did then, to a keen disappointment. But it was the encouragement which I had needed to turn me away from a career as M. D. D. M. L. L. D. or D. D. L., and the parternal visions of the name of Jack Sherrill being emblazoned in gold letters over the entrance to a fashionable apartment announcing a new "Saw Bones," or on an office door with "Counsellor" attached. I resolved with that first pay check in hand that my future was set, and so it was.

Much more perserverance, much more, and recognition began to come my way. I was given several small parts, and still I wondered why it was that the world didn't fall at my feel, although it was probably because I was forgetting that as yet I had been no closer to the camera's lens than the fifteen foot line, and at such a distance the world had hardly been able to recognize me. Ambition became my leader and also my ticket, and on to New York to conquer came Jack Sherrill incumbent of small parts from Chicago town.

In New York my first chance, real chance, was in the leading juvenile role with Mary Miles Minter in the "Fairy and the Waif," then came another opportunity, with Alice Brady as co-star in "Then I'll Come Back to You," and later a juvenile role in "The Witching Hour" and another in "God's Man." Recently I have played in "The Silent Witness," and now I am to realize the dreams of those days back in that Chicago school, for I am to have my first opportunity as a star alone in the coming Frohman Amusement Corporation production of Larry Evans's novel, "Once to Every Man."

Samuel E. Ramseyer



Samuel E. Ramseyer.

A GOOD deal is being said just now on the question as to whether the moving picture activity is or is not good business. That is to say, of course, is it profitable? Moving picture men say no. Behind the discussion, without much doubt, is merely the intention on the part of those who control to raise prices a notch or two. Price raising is pretty surely indicated in these days by either of two things: agitation about the meagre returns and low quality of production in a given business or widespread advertisements of insufficient supply. We hear little about their being any dearth of supply in the case of motion pictures, but everywhere we note much concern for the raising of standards. Raising of prices slips in later and without much loud talk."

Samuel E. Ramseyer, sales manager of Charter Features Corporation, says all the above brings to mind the recollection that a much advertised film introducing a favorite is placed on exhibition in a city of the size of Boston or Detroit in not less than three or four theaters in the heart of the city simultaneously. Only the promoters know in how many places in the suburbs it is being shown at the same time. Certainly, so far as this particular film is concerned, the "market" may be said to be somewhat over-stocked. In the realm of regular drama the producer would be brave, indeed, who should undertake to offer the same production in two or more places in the same state at the same time, let alone the same city.

Motion picture business men should take a kink from the rope of the milk manipulators, who, in the face of raising population, first cut down the number of cows before they undertake to raise the price of their product. The problem today in the motion picture industry is distribution, and Mr. Ramseyer says he will have worked out shortly the most efficient method yet devised to offer both the producer and the exhibitor of this country.

KENT ON TOUR OF SOUTH AND WEST.

For the purpose of inspection and extension of the activities of branches, General Film Sales Manager Sidney R. Kent has started on a tour of southern and western offices. His trip will require a month to complete, and during it a number of important matters are to be taken up with exhibitors as well as with exchange managers.

The tour is necessary because of the increase in the bulk of General Film's product and the increase in the proportion of sales. The application of General Film's new merchandising policies is to be completed during this visit, which will include Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta, Washington, Philadelphia.

BIG RECEPTIONS GREET MISS MERSEREAU.

A most unique trip was completed last week by Violet Mersereau, the Bluebird star, who went to Atlanta and Birmingham as guest of Marcus Loew and proved a veritable sensation. Intended only to appear in the evening three days in each city, the crowds were so large that she appeared in the afternoon also, and still thousands were turned away at every performance. She broke all records for attendance at the theatres during her stay. From her arrival in each city until her departure she was feted and showered with honors.

She also visited Washington and Baltimore as well as Atlanta and Birmingham.

Marcus Loew expressed his personal thanks to Miss Mersereau and his keen delight at her astounding success.

PEARL WHITE IN CHRISTY ARMY POSTER.

A novel motion picture has just been released in the Hearst-Pathe News to aid recruiting. It shows Howard Chandler Christy, the famous illustrator, making a recruiting poster which was posed for by Pearl White, who is now appearing in "The Fatal Ring."

Mr. Christy volunteered to give any necessary amount of his time to his country. Soon after the United States entered the war he made a poster to aid naval recruiting that was most successful. It is captioned: "Gee, I wish I were a man."

Pearl White and Howard Chandler Christy.

Asked to make a poster for the army, Pearl White immediately occurred to Mr. Christy as a suitable model and the player quickly agreed. The result is the latest Christy recruiting poster and thousands of copies of the poster will be printed and displayed throughout the country. Before it will be displayed on the billboards, it will be shown in the Hearst-Pathe News reel.

Chicago Censor Bars "The Little American"

Major Funkhouser's Action Raises a Storm of Protest in Which the City Dailies Take a Prominent Part.

ON FRIDAY, June 29, Major Funkhouser, of the Chicago censor board, placed the ban of his censorial judgment on "The Little American," Artcraft's latest release, in which Mary Pickford appears in a patriotic role. The Major has issued his edict, and every adult in the fourth largest city in the world must rest satisfied that his thinking has been done for him by proxy.

O, Lord, how long!

The action of the Chicago censor has stirred up a storm of opposition throughout the city, more especially as the major is unable to give any satisfactory reason. He holds that the picture unnecessarily wounds the feelings of German-Americans, and subjects Chicago citizens of German blood to unjust suspicion of disloyalty.

Who told him so? Was it Mayor Thompson? It is current that certain members of the city administration are supporting Major Funkhouser in his stand

In an interview with a reporter of an evening paper the Major said:

> They are Germans just the same as Jews are Jews. I would act the same way toward a picture which might be offensive to the Jews. Let them take the matter before some judge. The law is clear to me, and if they want a different interpretation let them try the courts. I don't care, but I won't be the goat. I'll carry out the intent of the federal city laws relating to pictures as I understand them.
> "What are the federal restrictions to this film?" was asked
> The Major hastily drew a paper from his inside coat pocket and read a brief clause forbidding the showing of motion pictures offensive to a friendly nation.
> "But we're at war with Germany," enlightened the writer
> "Then I have the city ordinance to back me," he replied triumphantly

The dailies of Chicago have taken up the matter vigorously. The Tribune wired to Washington, Boston, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Cincinnati, Toledo, Detroit, Scranton, Worcester, Rochester and other cities regarding the attitude toward the picture, and in every case the reply came that it was being shown or about to be shown, and that there were no objections. Everyone here knows that it is doing a record business at the Strand theater, New York Even Evanston, a Chicago suburb, lying outside Major Funkhouser's jurisdiction, which is so ultra-censorial that the major's judgment in such matters is not sufficiently strict to suit its needs, has passed "The Little American," and the picture is showing to crowded houses. Besides, it is not denied that Evanston has proportionally as many citizens of German descent as Chicago.

The Hearst papers, the Examiner and the American, have printed scathing editorials on Major Funkhouser's action The Examiner editorial bore the heading, "If Chicago needs a censor it should get one who is not both stupid and ridiculous." Here are several excerpts from it:

> Unbiased critics who have seen Cecil DeMille's "The Little American," in which Mary Pickford is the central figure, say it is an intensely patriotic film production It is one of those instances where the stage joins pictorially in the chorus of virile Americanism with millions of other patriots in vocal or written speech, in music or the drama
> The barring of "The Little American" from Chicago's theaters by the local board of censors is on singular grounds—that there are parts of the play that might be construed as offensive to our German-American citizens.
> This would be humorous, seeing that this nation is at war with Germany, were it not characteristically defiant of the rules of censorship laid down in a multitude of decisions by our higher courts
> State courts and local courts have uniformly held that censorship of plays and pictures is legally justifiable where public morals are involved The letter and spirit of the laws creating official censors are that these officials are limited to issues of public morality. If a play or picture offends the community's moral sense, the censors have a right to forbid its production.
> Official censorship ends there, as it ought to end.
> It is only a few weeks since Judge Kavanagh, one of the wisest jurists in our local courts, made a sweeping decision against the right of official censors to go beyond the issues of public morality and arrogate to themselves the right to censorize plays or pictures on grounds of public policy.
> This decision by Judge Kavanagh was made specially in the case of another intensely American play. Major Funkhouser's censors rejected the play [illegible] it might offend some of our British-American citizens. The play [illegible] historical, and dealt with incidents in the Revolutionary War [illegible] flattering to Great Britain.
> The meddlesome Funkhouser was promptly overruled on this public [illegible] some pictures had been toned down on the public [illegible] was released for production.
> [illegible] "The Little American," with not a single immoral line or picture in it
> All that the Funkhouser board can find objectionable is some scenes that reflect harshly on ruthless German militarism.
> In other words, we have gone to war with Germany and are preparing to spend billions of money and perhaps a prodigious number of human lives to make it impossible for Germany to continue its crimes against civilization and ourselves by these ruthless military methods.
> The author of "The Little American" says he wrote his play to stimulate recruiting for the American army and navy. Mary Pickford, who stars in it, says she was thankful for the opportunity to do her "bit" [illegible]
> But Major Funkhouser's sensitive mind sees something in the play that [illegible] fellow citizens
> If Funkhouser was ridiculous in some of his former rulings, he ap- [illegible]
> He ought to know what all real American patriots know, that our first duty is to rouse the American spirit, to stimulate the fires of patriotism, to give every ounce of energy we possess, in oral or written speech, in [illegible] realize what they are fighting for.
> And if in doing this we tread on the toes of some sympathizers with Germany, we are not likely to put on the soft pedal because Major Funkhouser thinks we should.

Charles P. Schwartz, attorney for Paramount, filed a mandamus suit against the city of Chicago, Thursday, July 5, to compel the city to allow showings of "The Little American." It is expected the suit will be tried in the Superior Court, the judge to be named later.

It is said that Major Funkhouser gave his word, in the presence of a number of witnesses, to issue a permit for the picture, provided that George Creel, press censor of the United States, pronounced the picture all right. However, when a telegram from the Paramount office in New York arrived, announcing Mr. Creel's favorable opinion of the picture, Major Funkhouser is said to have repudiated his agreement.

The Paramount representatives state that the entire Chicago censor board, with the exception of its head, is in favor of passing "The Little American." It is said that in the near future an invitation presentation will be given by Paramount, to which some of Chicago's leading citizens will be invited. After viewing the picture they will be asked to cast their votes and decide whether they think Chicago should see the picture or not; also to ascertain whether there is in it anything "that would offend a friendly nation," the friendly nation in this case, according to Major Funkhouser, being Germany!

Miss Heikes-Justice, Author of "Who Shall Take My Life?" Talks of the Rights of the Photodramatist.

After spending several weeks in Chicago, Miss Maibelle Heikes-Justice returned to New York last week. While here she was much interested in Selig's "Who Shall Take My Life?" the story of which was written by her. Of this production, before she left, Miss Heikes-Justice said:

"There is a feeling of satisfaction and pride on the part of an author in viewing a finished production after having had the close co-operation of both producer and director in the work. The making of 'Who Shall Take My Life?' has been a pleasure to me rather than work. From its very beginning I have watched the production step by step. Under the personal supervision of William. N. Selig and the fine production of Colin Campbell, the picture was brought to a point where the author was called in, and after several weeks of co-operation in cutting and assembling, it is now ready for release.

"Many of the final and important decisions in assembling the film were left entirely to the judgment of the author. This courtesy on the part of the Selig Polyscope Company is one that should be accorded every earnest working photodramatist by the producing company. Such co-operation will unquestionably lead to the production of greater stories and better films.

"The usual plan of taking a photodrama from the hands of the author and not giving him or her a glimpse of it until it has been pruned and often distorted by everyone down the line is all wrong."

On her return to New York, Miss Heikes-Justice expects to take an active interest in war service, and it may be that she will visit France and England before the present conflict is ended.

Fire Consumes Pathe's Chicago Office

Three Million Feet of Films, Amply Covered by Insurance, Destroyed—Business Continued Right Along.

A FIRE which broke out early Sunday morning, July 1, in the vaults of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., on the fifth floor of the Consumers Building, this city, resulted in a conflagration that brought a large portion of the Chicago fire department to the scene and in a heavy loss both to the building and to the film company.

About 3,000,000 feet of film in the Pathe vaults were destroyed, in addition to the office fixtures and all printing and posters.

All the films used by Chicago customers, which had been brought in and just put in the vault, were included in the loss, and left the office with no films on hand to give these customers a Sunday show. C. W. Bunn, manager of Pathe's Chicago office, however, was equal to the occasion. He immediately wired the Pathe offices in Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Omaha, Des Moines, Cleveland, Cincinnati and other towns to help him out. The result was that nearly all the Chicago customers were taken care of on Sunday, July 1.

By Tuesday, July 3, a complete stock of films and printing had arrived from New York. On that day J. A. Berst, vice-president of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., arrived from New York. He was seen at the office on that date, and was taking everything calmly. He stated that the loss, approximately, sustained by his company was about $75,000. He said, however, that all the films, furniture and fixtures were covered by insurance, but that the burning of posters and advertising matter was a complete loss.

Mr. Berst returned to New York July 5, and stated before going that he would return to Chicago again on July 18 to attend the convention of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

On Friday, the time of writing, Manager Bunn stated that everything was running just as smoothly as if the fire had not taken place

Fred C. Aiken, prominent in Chicago film circles for many years, accompanied by Mrs. Aiken, motored from Chicago to his father and mother's home in LaCrosse, Saturday, June 30, to attend their golden wedding. All the living members of the family were present for the occasion. I have the pleasure of knowing both Mr. and Mrs. Aiken, Sr., and wish them both many happy years to come.

The Jackson bill, which was vetoed by Governor Lowden several months ago, was again brought up by the father of the bill and passed through both houses during the last session. It was among a number of bills that were allowed to become laws, recently, without the signature of the governor. This bill originally aimed at "The Birth of a Nation" and similar productions, prohibiting the exhibition of pictures tending to incite race hatred. It also aims at similar dramatic productions. This is another case where laxity on the part of dramatic and photoplay producers has allowed the enemy to steal a march on them.

A special picture program in aid of the Red Cross was given at the Harvard theater, 6312 Harvard avenue, this city, Friday afternoon, June 29. The Harvard seats 600 people, and 15 cents admission was charged to the show, which netted $125. Fred J. Nortman and Charles Fecher, who own the theater, are also owners of the Lexington and Drexel theaters, this city. They are to be highly commended for their patriotic action. The Seosa Club, numbering eighteen girls, aided in selling the tickets. Keep the good work up, exhibitors!

"The Tanks" pictures, now showing at Orchestra Hall, had a narrow escape from destruction in the recent Pathe fire in the Consumers Building. The fire took place early Sunday morning, July 1, and the films were taken over late Saturday night, after the show to the Pathe office to have them cleaned for the beginning of the next week's run. The boys in charge waited until they were cleaned, so as to avoid calling for them on Sunday morning before the Orchestra Hall show. Had they not done so there would have been no show at Orchestra Hall the whole of this week so far as "The Tanks" pictures were concerned.

The only copy of "May Blossoms" in the possession of Pathe Exchange, Inc., was destroyed in the fire in the Consumers Building. This well known Pathe feature, in five reels, was beautifully colored, and the production was highly thought of wherever shown. A copy of "The Vicar of Wakefield," which had only been used for several trade exhibitions in this city by Tom North, was also destroyed.

"The Battle of the Somme," Pathe's serial in seven episodes of two reels each, was also consumed. The last named pictures cannot be duplicated, as they are from an English negative.

Among the western managers of the Fox Film Corporation who stopped over in Chicago, Friday, June 29, on their way to New York to attend the annual meeting of managers of that company were William Citron, San Francisco; Mr. Carmichael, Los Angeles; Cliff Reed, Dallas; Mr. Lawrence, Minneapolis; Mr. Young, Kansas City; Lester Sturm, Omaha; D. A. Thomas, St. Louis, and Charles Phillips, Indianapolis. The party left for New York Saturday, June 30, accompanied by J. E. O'Toole, manager of the Fox Chicago office

Taylor Holmes, who established himself in the good graces of Chicago theatrical circles last year by his impersonation of Bunker Bean, was recently engaged by the Essanay company for an extended period. Mr. Holmes is now taking the place of Frank Craven in "Seven Chances," at the Cort, until the end of its Chicago run, which is set for August 4. Mr. Holmes has just completed his first picture for Essanay. It is entitled "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," and will be released Sept. 3. Mr. Holmes is working at the Essanay studios during the intervals between rehearsals and performances at the Cort.

Kenneth Hodkinson, at one time general manager of Paramount's New York office and of the exchanges of that concern throughout the country, was recently appointed assistant manager of Pathe's Chicago office. He is the son of W. W. Hodkinson, formerly president of Paramount. Mr. Hodkinson, Jr., at one time had charge of the Pacific Coast offices of Paramount, and earlier had charge of the booking department of the General Film Company's San Francisco office.

Major Funkhouser recently disturbed the arrangements of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who had booked "The Little American" at the Studebaker for a run beginning Sunday, July 1. He refused a permit for the production, and the run of "Wild and Woolly" was continued for another week instead. The latter will be succeeded by "God's Man" on July 8.

"The Crisis," considered by many as William N. Selig's greatest production, is making a big hit in London, England. The following are a few excerpts from a criticism in one of the leading dailies of that city:

"This twelve-part picture has the merit of being splendidly produced and finely acted, especially by two men.

"Those who know the American Winston Churchill's widely read book will remember these two fine characters—Judge Silas Whipple and Colonel Carvel, great personal friends, but bitter political enemies. The colonel with the conciliating cigar, as seen in this picture, will remain a memory as long as one lives.

"I do not remember seeing before such a character on the screen. The whole of the film is marked by such strong characterization, such contrasts, such little touches, revealing the souls of men, that 'The Crisis' is bound to live when hundreds of other pictures have been forgotten.

"I believe this picture is to be put on next week at the Scala, exclusive to London. It is such a human story that the man who sees it once will want to see it again, if only to look upon that dear old Colonel Carvel."

Activities at Universal Studios

Director General Henry MacRae Has Twenty-Five Companies at Work.

OUT at Universal City last week we noticed on one set Roy Clements directing Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in their first two-reel comedy. •

Due to the large demand for the comedies of this team all of their productions henceforth will be in two reels To facilitate the releasing Burton George has been engaged to assist as alternate director.

Franklyn Farnum was starting a Bluebird feature under the directorship of Joseph DeGrasse, while on another set Dorothy Phillips was engaged in making cabaret scenes, with Ida De Grasse as the director in charge.

Francis Ford was busy on interiors that day for his latest production which features himself and his new leading woman, Mae Gaston. Stuart Paton was in the electric light studio taking fight scenes of "The Gray Ghost." Harry Carey was on the five-reel western story at his location in Newhall, Cal.

Upstairs in the administration building we found Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady, the manager of the manuscript department, was selecting the best from many stories.

J. Grub Alexander, who has been a valuable member of the Universal scenario department for two years, has been promoted to the position of scenario editor.

Fred Palmer, formerly of the Mack Sennett Keystone forces, is now writing comedies for Lyons and Moran.

William Sistrom, who was sent out by President Carl Laemmle to take charge of the financial end of Universal City, is one of the best liked men of the lot, especially on pay-days.

Balboa Announces a Photoplay Contest

Five Hundred Dollars Is Offered for Five-Reel Subject Featuring Jackie Saunders.

FROM Balboa studios comes word of a photoplay contest. Five hundred dollars is offered by Horkheimer Brothers for a five reel photoplay in which Jackie Saunders is to be featured. The competition is open to all and the winning decision will be made entirely on the suitability and merits of the scenario. All photoplays submitted must be worked out into full continuity of scenes, preceded by a synopsis of the story and cast of characters and scene plot. By viewing the productions in which Miss Saunders has been featured recently scenario writers will be able to get a line on the class of stories most likely to appeal to her and her managers.

All scripts must be submitted before November 1 and should be addressed to "Contest Editor, Balboa Amusement Producing Company, Long Beach, Cal.," with stamped self-addressed envelope inclosed. Scripts must be typewritten and as few subtitles as possible employed in the scenario.

Jackie Saunders, Director Sherwood Macdonald and H. O. Stechhan, assistant to President H. M. Horkheimer, will be the judges in the contest and will select five photoplays from the scripts submitted. These five scripts will then be handed to a committee composed of Maitland Davies, dramatic editor of the Los Angeles Express-Tribune; Miss Grace Kingsley, dramatic editor of the Los Angeles Times, and Mark Larkin, of the Los Angeles Record, who will select the winner. No person in any way affiliated with the Balboa company will be allowed to compete. The author of the successful photoplay will be given name credit on the screen and on all advertising matter, when possible.

Miss Saunders' last six releases on the Mutual program are "Sunny Jane," "The Wildcat," "The Checkmate," "A Bit of Kindling," "Betty Be Good" and "Bab, the Fixer."

Director Rupert Julian, of the Universal-Bluebird Company, left this week to inspect two locations in Southern California. One of these he will use for the making of a feature production, work upon which he will begin shortly. This feature will be a strong western story of the Bret Harte type, with many unusual and intensely interesting situations.

Henry McRae, production manager, is arranging for an all-star cast for Director Julian's coming feature in which more than a hundred people will be used.

Many of the exteriors will be made either in mountainous country surrounding Big Bear Lake or in the neighborhood of Mount Whitney.

Charles U. Wells, a stock player in the Helen Holmes company at the Signal studios, surprised his friends at the plant by arriving one morning this week with the announcement that during the previous evening he and Miss Georgia Dufay had stood before a frock-coated member of the clergy and answered "I do" and "I will" to a number of questions put to them by the aforementioned pastor.

For the past month the Balboa lot has resembled a modern shipyard, by reason of the fact that a large number of skilled workers have been engaged in the construction of a modern submarine. It figures importantly in the filming of "The Twisted Thread," H. M. Horkheimer's new serial story. This craft promises to be a startling warcraft in that it can be operated on land as well as in the water. Having a crawler attachment, like the big tanks now in use on the other side, the Balboa submarine is really amphibious. It noses its way out of the deep and comes up on the shore like a crocodile, which makes it look very uncanny. The craft was launched at Alamitos Bay recently.

Max Asher, well known stage and screen star, was welcomed back to Universal City this week with open arms. He is one of the old-timers of the Universal, his former engagement with the company extending over a period of three years. Asher forsook the field of motion pictures two years ago and went into vaudeville, playing every town of importance from ocean to ocean. A successful season with his own musical comedy company followed, but the click of the camera tempted him again and he returned to pictures, joining the Fox Company for a short engagement. Craig Hutchinson, who has been associated with the Keystone and the L-Ko comedies, is staging the Asher pictures, and Gladys Tennyson, who has also appeared in a number of Keystones, has been engaged to play the leading feminine roles.

Mary Pickford has devised a new plan to raise money for her charities in addition to her own contributions by making personal appearances at the theaters in return for the theater manager's presenting a check to the charitable institution. While in the northern part of the state for the exterior scenes of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," Miss Pickford received an appeal to help an orphan asylum in Los Angeles. The exhibitor in a neighboring town was also the owner of a large truck garden. The two got their heads together and Miss Pickford made two personal appearances before his audiences; in return the farmer-exhibitor sent a carload of potatoes to the orphan asylum.

Margarita Fischer's next appearance will be in a light comedy written especially for her, with a plot centered around college life. Harry Pollard is directing the feature, as usual, with locations in and around San Diego. A well selected cast is in support of the star.

Jay Belasco, who is supporting Tyrone Power in the Marine Company feature, "Lorelei of the Sea," writes from the Santa Barbara Islands to the effect that all the company are living close to nature. Jay described short trips in small boats with big seas to remote and rocky spots and of being unable to return to the base of supplies for two days and other interesting adventures. Jay sums it up as being a hard but healthy experience.

Theda Bara, the celebrated luminary of the Fox forces, was hostess to Major Gen. Hunter Liggett and Mrs. Liggett on the occasion of their visit to the local Fox studios. Major General Liggett is the head of the western division of the United States Army, and it was the first time that he and Mrs. Liggett had been able to meet Miss Bara personally, although they both have been admirers of the screen art of the star.

It is stated the company will build its own studios in Hollywood.

Sherwood MacDonald is the new director of Gloria Joy, the Balboa's child wonder, having just completed a series of six pictures in which Jackie Saunders was featured. Director MacDonald is now filming a five-reel Mary Sunshine play, from a story by Will M. Ritchie, entitled "No Children Wanted." It will give little Gloria excellent opportunities to display her special childish charms.

A special service for motion picture persons and their friends was held at 11 o'clock last Sunday in Christ Episcopal Church, Twelfth and Flower streets, of this city, by the Rev. Baker P. Lee. Inasmuch as the motion picture industry has become such a powerful factor, both in the life of pleasure and in the industrial life of this part of California, the rector of Christ Church, who is a personal friend of many players and also chaplain of the Actors' Church Alliance, thought it proper to provide a special service in their honor. The sermon subject was "The High Aim of the Moving Picture and the Propagation of Truth and Righteousness." Special music was rendered by a choir of seventy-five voices.

Lina Cavalieri will arrive at the Lasky studios some time in August.

With the thermometer at 110, the new swimming pool at the Lasky studio is the most popular institution on the lot. During the extreme heat Studio Manager Milton E. Hoffman so arranged the schedule that it was possible for them to dismiss their companies in the heated hours of the day, resuming it in the cool of the evening.

The roar of musketry, the shouts of soldiers and the war cries of Indians awoke one day last week the residents of the peaceful San Fernando Valley near Universal City to a realization that a battle was in progress. Francis Ford, Universal director, was filming scenes for his eight-reel production, "John Ermine of the Yellowstone," which promises to surpass any previous drama he has staged. More than one thousand men and women were engaged in the scenes.

Director Elmer Clifton, who recently completed the staging of "The Fourth Glove," featuring Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, at the Bluebird studios, has begun work on another feature entitled "Sky High." Several thrilling airplane stunts are planned for the picture. Herbert Rawlinson and Brownie Vernon have been selected to play the principal roles, supported by a strong cast, which includes Frank MacQuerrie, Percy Challenger and Mark Fenton.

Dorothy Phillips, the Bluebird, made a personal appearance at the Superba theater during the run of her latest feature, "The Fires of Rebellion." Miss Phillips sang a light opera selection that drew enthusiastic applause from the audience. Prior to her advent into the field of motion pictures Miss Phillips was a soloist with the old Savage Opera Company.

Manager J. A. Quinn, of the Rialto Theatre, staged his formal opening on Saturday night at a midnight matinee, of which stunt Mr. Quinn is the originator. The feature shown was "The Whip," and it proved exceedingly popular with the audience of motion picture notables gathered to do honor to the popular manager.

The advent of Manager Chris Glimm upon the local Rialto, from his trip to New York, was marked by capacity houses at the Garrick.

Manager James Anderson, of Clune's Broadway and Comedy theaters, reports capacity business at both houses. Douglas Fairbanks in his latest success, "Wild and Woolly," is responsible for the crowds at the former house.

LAWRENCE TO DIRECT FOR IVAN.

The Ivan Film Productions has further increased its directorial staff by engaging Edmund Lawrence. Mr. Lawrence was with Julia Marlowe on the legitimate stage as both actor and director and with E. H. Sothern. Deserting the stage he became a director for the Kalem Company. Mr. Lawrence produced successful children's pictures featuring his child Adelaide, then six years of age. Leaving Kalem Mr. Lawrence directed pictures for the World Film and Equitable pictures. The title for Mr. Lawrence's first production to be released under the Ivan banner will be "Married in Name Only."

British Notes

THE annual report of the Exhibitors' Association for the year ending March 31 last reveals a chapter of trials and vicissitudes through which, its authors are proud to state, the exhibiting industry has passed in a manner that speaks volumes for its vitality. The only depressing item in the lengthy document is the record of the closure of an additional 200 theaters since the issue of the preceding report, due in each case to abnormal situations directly carried through the war. The usefulness of the association, points out the secretary, has been limited through lack of revenue. Nevertheless the association comes out with a small balance on the right side, and this in face of the very heavy litigation against arbitrary authorities and others seeking to impose restrictive legislation on the industry. One of the most satisfactory features of the association's work for exhibitors is the correspondence bureau conducted by the secretary, Gavayzi King, which mainly through the number of new orders issued under the Defence of the Realm Act has increased enormously. This department has undoubtedly kept many disputes between exhibitors and exchangemen out of the courts. The secretary has only in the rarest instances found it impossible to arrange such matters to the mutual satisfaction of the contending parties. Renting exchanges have almost without exception shown a ready disposition to meet the secretary and conclude fair and just arrangements, with the result that business relations between exchanges and exhibitors have been unimpaired.

The title of the film produced by the Western Import Co. (Triangle) at the instigation of the new Ministry of Food for the purpose of conveying to the public the necessity of food economy has been changed from "Civilians Fall In" to "Everybody's Business." Unlike the majority of propaganda films that have recently swarmed upon the exhibitor, "Everybody's Business" spreads its moral via the drama with half a dozen stage celebrities in the cast. Ralph Dewsbury directed the production at the London Film Company's studio, being specially released from military duties for the purpose.

"Intolerance" celebrated its century performance in the metropolis on Monday at Philharmonic Hall, whither it was transferred from Drury Lane. D. W. Griffith, fresh from his visit to France, gave a short address upon his experiences in the French and British lines, where he has been the guest of the Allied commanders-in-chief. Contrary to several newspaper statements Mr. Griffith has not found any photographic material on the western war front suitable for inclusion in his forthcoming war film. The smoke, noise and disturbance make camera work impossible, says D. W. G.

I am informed that the next official war feature to be issued by the War Office will be entitled "The Battle of Arras." The subject graphically depicts the recent penetration of the formidable Hindenburg line in the region of Bullecourt.

Of the genius the war has given birth, none will live longer in the memory of the public than the work of its two great cartoonists, Louis Raomakers and Capt. Bruce Bainsfather. That of the Dutchman is almost too sordidly tragic to lend itself to motion-picture construction, but Bairnsfather's humorous drawings of Tommy's life in the trenches have made excellent material for a series of animated cartoons. Film Booking Offices, Ltd., the new Essanay-M. P. Sales Company distributing exchange, is the agency responsible for their production and release.

In quest of realism for the making of a submarine drama a party of Swedish players have just experienced an uncomfortable encounter with the real thing. Cruising along the west coast of Sweden in search of a location, their vessel was stopped by a German U-boat, and four of the company were taken as hostages. The submarine disappeared, but encountered the sailing vessel again, opening a violent shellfire around her. The commander of the raider then boarded the ship and after examining her papers returned to his own craft to open up another bombardment. Fortunately the sailing vessel by skilful manoeuvring escaped and arrived at Gothenburg on the evening of June 5.

T. P. O'Connor, the president of the British Board of Film Censors, has left England for the United States. Although his mission is a political one affecting Irishmen in America, he will doubtless make use of the opportunity of learning first-hand something about the enormous amount of material that comes under his judgment in the course of a year.

The film exchangemen in Glasgow and Scotland generally are evidently not going to be outpaced by the Exhibitors' Association converting itself into a trades union. The name of the new body, which has already been registered, is the Scottish Renters' Association.

New undertakings in the moving picture business are not nearly so numerous as in pro-war days, when each week used to see the incorporation of ten or a dozen new companies. The companies register gives particulars this week of a new Birmingham undertaking capitalized at $170,000, and named Colossal Productions, Ltd. The moving spirit in the enterprise is Sol. Levy, formerly of Sun Exclusives, who distributed the first batch of Frohman-Equitable releases in this country.

The Kinematograph Trade Council has been discussing again the proposal of its finance committee for the absorption of the British Board of Film Censors into the Trade Council. The main idea is to evenly distribute the cost of maintaining the voluntary system of censorship over the three factions of the industry, manufacturer, renter, and exhibitor instead of continuing under the present arrangement, which saddles all the expense on the manufacturer and the renter. The method of distributing in proper proportion the censorship charges would be by means of adhesive stamps. These in the first place would be supplied by the manufacturer to collect at face value the contributions of the other two sections of the trade. They would be sold to the renter at a premium, and he in turn would attach them to his invoices to exhibitors. After much discussion the proposal was agreed upon and a detailed scheme of working is to be drawn up for the next meeting of the council.

A Glasgow exhibitor has been fined £10 for issuing season tickets not charged with their proper amount of duty under the entertainment tax. The ticket was only "taxed" upon issue at three pence, although it admitted the purchaser six times to the theater.

"The Crisis" (Selig) is at last to be shown to a waiting trade and public. The Scala theater opens with the Churchill story on Monday. Its presentation is singularly opportune from a publicity point of view. The other Winston Churchill was never so much under discussion as now, and the number of people in the trade who confuse the statesman with the novelist is astonishing. He is some publicity man who can teach E. H. Montagu stunts.

The new War Office exclusive, "The Battle of Arras," strikes an entirely different line to any of its predecessors. There is nothing sad or tearful about this subject, none of those stacks of dead and dying which characterized the "Battle of the Somme." It is one inspiriting, encouraging chronicle of rapid progress, too quick in movement to become depressing and too variegated to become monotonous. "The Battle of the Somme" showed the British troops just chipping at the heels of the Hun. In "The Battle of Arras" they cannot be seen for dust. J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

FRANK WOODS JOINS FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY.

Frank E. Woods, for the past four years supervisor of productions at the Fine Arts-Triangle studios in Los Angeles, has been engaged in a similar capacity by the Famous Players-Lasky interests. Mr. Woods, who, with Mrs. Woods, has been visiting in New York for the past few weeks, left for the coast on Monday, July 9. Mrs. Woods remains in New York for a few days, when she will follow her husband west.

Indian Notes

By S. B. Banerjea.

A MOTOR dacaity of an unusual character has just been committed in Calcutta. It has features, which will make a first-class film and will appeal to lovers of the morbid and the sensational. The question has been raised in more than one Indian paper whether the crime has been influenced by the kinema, or not. "The Capital," the leading organ of the commercial community in India, observes in this connection:

"I do not think it silly to discover in this crime the malign influence of the cinema. It is notorious that the best "draw" at any of the picture houses in Calcutta is the film depicting successful and sensational crime. This is specially true of the Indian clientele who fill the cheaper seats. I have directed attention to the danger more than once; but although we have a cinema central committee, no check has been placed on exhibitions far more dangerous to the public weal than the inebrity of Max Linder and the coarseness of Charlie Chaplin. Old women, even if they chance to wear trousers, have keen noses for purience, but no eyes for incitement to outlawry. The Burra Bazar crime was planned on the cinema ideal and would have succeeded had the locality swarmed with paramallas. The Bengalees are quick to learn from the printed page. Robbery under arms followed the introduction of the cinema, which proves conclusively that pictures have a more powerful educative effect on the badrahog than pedestrian letter press."

The extract is long, but it amply repays perusal, for it shows that the European community in India will not care to have "robbery under arms" and similar other films in this country. Will manufacturers of sensational films please note this fact?

Should they ignore the warning, they would find themselves in trouble in Indian waters, sooner or later. They will be interested to know that a bill providing for the licensing of cinematograph theaters and a censorship of films will be introduced during the Simla session of the Imperial Legislative council. The bill, I may add, is now being drafted, and will be circulated among the provincial governments for opinion before consideration.

In Calcutta we have a censor committee for each of the leading houses. It is stated that "the different management are satisfied with results so far and that private exhibitions for the benefit of the censors have led to nothing but harmony." So far so good. But we are also told that the habit of the censors to air their views during the running of a film is objectionable, and they have been advised to compare notes afterwards, so that the views of one can have no influence on the views of another. It is to be hoped that the censors will appreciate this suggestion.

The Bombay office of the Universal Film Co. has issued a notice stating that pirated copies of their films are being imoprted into India. I for one did not know that film pirates were working in this country. I hope, however, that the warning issued by the Universal Film Co. will put all exhibitors on their guard and that I shall not have to record their doings in these columns at any time.

The Grand Opera House of Calcutta has been leased by Mr. Dricasse of the Bijou. It is being reconstructed from top to bottom at enormous expense. It will be named the Bijou Grand Opera House. The proprietor expects to have vaudeville and other companies at this new theatre at no distant date. I wish him all success; but I hope he will show us the best American films, and not confine himself to those of British manufacture solely.

The advent of American enterprise in India has alarmed several bioscope theater owners, who specialize in all-British films. One of their organs in India has written an article advocating a bold stand against the "American invasion," which threatens the existence of British theater owners. The arguments advanced by the writer of the article are not convincing. It would be well if I told him (and those whose cause he advocates) that the Indians, who were the chief patrons of bioscopes, did not care whether a film was British or American, so long as it appealed to them. I myself have seen several all-British films which drew very thin houses. The moral is obvious. If you want to succeed, give the people what they want, not what you think they should see. The "threatened" American invasion is, to my mind, calculated to yield good results. Ver. sap.

The compulsory system of military training in India has not disturbed the film trade, for this is largely in the hands of the Indians. The number of British-owned kinema houses can be counted on one's fingers. If, as a result of the compulsory service, they are shut down, the bioscope going public will not suffer at all.

I am certain that the manufacturers of films, in which some Hindu character is introduced, do not purposely represent it in black color. I have seen several films, all American, in which "Hindus" have been alloted the parts of swindlers, rogues and vagabonds. As white filmgoers are likely to imbibe a false opinion of Hindu character, it would be well if care were taken to have noble characters as well. There are rogues and vagabonds everywhere. Why should the parts of rascally people be alloted to the "Hindus" always? I have seen Hindu filmgoers resent representations of criminal Hindu characters, as exhibited in several American films screened in this country. I hope film manufacturers will note the above fact, and take care that they do not hurt Hindu feelings.

I am delighted to learn that at least one American film manufacturer has engaged the services of young Indians to fill certain roles. I make no doubt they have been giving satisfaction to their employers. Europeans and Americans can never successfully fill Hindu parts. The manners and customs of the whites are totally different from those of the Indians. So, if correct renderings are desired, it is advisable to employ Indians, of whom a goodly number can always be found in different parts of the States.

GOLDWYN SEEKS TO ENJOIN MABEL NORMAND.

Suit has been instituted by Goldwyn through Gabriel L Hess, general counsel for and secretary of the company, and John B. Stanchfield, of Stanchfield & Levy, has been retained as attorney and as special counsel to obtain an injunction preventing Mabel Normand, screen comedienne, from working for any other concern or individual.

It is claimed that Miss Normand entered into a contract on September 16, 1916, with Samuel Goldfish, whereby she was engaged to be starred in motion pictures under his management for a period of two years at a weekly salary of $1,000.

Upon the formation of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation Miss Normand's contract was assigned to Goldwyn.

WESTINGHOUSE SALES MANAGER PROMOTED.

Samuel Lindsey Nicholson, who has been sales manager of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company since 1909, has been promoted to the position of assistant to the vice-president, with headquarters at East Pittsburgh. Mr. Nicholson is unusually well known throughout the electrical profession.

H. D. Shute, whose election as vice-president of the Westinghouse was recently announced, will have executive charge of the company's commercial organization, both domestic and export, succeeding Vice-President L. A. Osborne, whose headquarters have been transferred to New York.

NEWSPAPER MEN FACE CAMERA.

The New York Press Association learned it could act last week. The cause of it all was a visit to the studios of The Whartons, during the convention of the association here.

One of the entertainments scheduled for the association was a visit to the Wharton plant, and when the members arrived at the studios, they found cameras waiting for them everywhere. What was more natural than that directors should shout orders and the members of the association follow the commands while the cameras clicked? Later the near actors viewed themselves on the screen.

FILM AGENCY CLOSES OFFICE.

Readers will note from our advertising columns that the New York office of the Albion Cinema Supplies Company has been closed and that all business should now be directed to the London office, 6, Dansey Yard, Wardour street, London W.

William L. Sherrill Talks

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL, of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, came to the industry little more than four years ago, inexperienced in the manufacture of motion pictures and inexperienced in the many peculiar ways which may be claimed as belonging solely to the industry. Since the day of beginning of activites of his corporaton, he has applied and rigidly adhered to an application of the principles of commercial trading, and the success which has been resultant speaks in proof of Mr. Sherrill's contention, "Commercial procedure in the conduct of any business is one of the laws of success." In speaking of the future of the industry, Mr. Sherrill makes the following interesting observation:

Wm. L. Sherrill.

"I do not feel equipped to venture comment upon the technical perfection or digression of the finished motion picture production. That is the office of the technical man of many more years of experience than I have at my command in the making of motion pictures. I am also a bit reticent as to any criticism of the methods of distribution of product, although I have had the advisability of the territorial rights method proved conclusively to me by the success which the Frohman Corporation has met in that method

"While I have endeavored to give close study to the workings of both studio and laboratory during the few short years of my motion picture experience, still, the abundance of capable ability which is to be purchased for the execution of these departmental results make technical discussions, to my mind, a subject for the technically trained mind. I do, however, feel particularly gratified with the great measure of success which the adaptation of commercial principles, such as have been taught to me in other commercial walks and the financial world, has brought to our corporation.

"For many months we have been making a careful study of the needs, requirements and desires of both exchangemen and exhibitors, and the results of our declaration to these men that we intend to heed their suggestions and to lend them every aid in the exploitation of Frohman product has been in excess of our wildest anticipation. The response has indeed been most gratifying, and a further substantiation of my contention that excellence of product must have coupled with it service and co-operation if the full quota of success is to be met for all concerned.

"The Frohman Amusement Corporation is in the business of manufacturing motion picture to stay, and it realizes that the success of the future is to be measured in no small way by the amount of co-operation to be given to the distributor of our product.

"I do most seriously expect that at no distant day the matter of thorough co-operation between manufacturer and his buying exchangemen and their exhibitors will play as much importance as the excellence of production, and with the keen competition which undeniably exists at present, the abundance of production, etc., manufacturers may well look toward commercial procedure as a factor of utmost import in their future success."

GEORGE EASTMAN IN RED CROSS FILM.

One of the most popular films of New York state right now, from an exhibitor's standpoint, is the Red Cross picture recently made by the Whartons as their donation to the Red Cross fund of America. Following its first week in Rochester, where it was used to stimulate giving to the Red Cross fund during the President's drive for a hundred million dollars, it now is being booked in all houses throughout New York.. George Eastman, head of the Eastman Kodak company, and other notables appear in the film.

Producer, Have a Conscience!

By Margaret I. MacDonald.

NEVER before in the history of the moving picture has there been as serious a call on the conscience of the producer as at the present time, when the screen is expected to bridge that gap between work and more work at the various military camps throughout the country, as well as providing recreation and moral stimulus for the men in the trenches who are here today and gone tomorrow.

We are brought face to face with the necessity for the application of wholesome and inspiring entertainment for these men who in their period of segregation are forced to withstand greater horrors than any of us know. And through the various sociological organizations which are busying themselves with war time morals we are made to realize the possibility of vice and of stimulating flagging morality. It is therefore up to the producer now if never before to burn the midnight oil in trying to make his product the cleanest and best sort of recreation.

The kind of pictures that we would suggest are not necessarily preachments nor the so-called moral uplift pictures. Such pictures frequently fall short of their mark and lack the necessary recreative quality to carry them over. A good drama or even melodrama containing the proper moral balance is always acceptable. But to be righteously effective it must be clean with its vision inclining upward rather than downward. It must avoid suggestions of vice and of unwholesome methods of living. Its principal characters should be of that nobler type which moves on an elevated plane of morality, and which battles victoriously with whatever evil chances to cross its path.

Ignoble types, which are necessary to the realism of many stories, should be visualized with a view to inspiring aversion for such types and their methods of living. Refined comedy or even slapstick comedy in its wholesome form is an excellent tonic for tired nerves or drooping spirits. Comedy we need and must have; but above all things let it be clean comedy. Such comedies as the following, for instance, are for the most part mirth inspiring and harmless: "Max in a Taxi," Essanay-Linder; "Easy Street," Mutual-Chaplin; "The Clock," Bluebird; "The Cop and the Anthem," Broadway Star Feature, adapted from an O. Henry story; "A School for Husbands," Paramount-Lasky; "Wild and Woolly," Artcraft-Fairbanks; "The Magnificent Meddler," Greater Vitagraph, and any of the Metro-Drew comedies.

As samples of clean, entertaining drama and comedy-drama, we would suggest "Primrose Ring," Paramount-Lasky; "The Law of Compensation," Selznick; "A Naked Soul," Brady-International: "Builders of Castles," K-E-S-E-Edison; "Wolf Lowry," Triangle-Ince; "The Poor Little Rich Girl," Artcraft-Pickford; "The Barrier," Rex Beach; "Great Expectations," Paramount-Famous Players; "Little Lost Sister," K-E-S-E-Edison.

This does not include such productions as "Joan the Woman," which stands for itself as one of the most perfect of moving picture productions.

Good samples of melodrama are "The Blue Envelope Mystery" and "The Girl Phillipa," Greater Vitagraph, and "The Message to Garcia," K-E-S-E-Edison. Some of the recent serials also provide good types of melodrama, such as "Ultus," a Gaumont production not yet released; "Fantomas," also from Gaumont, and released through the Mutual Film Corporation; "The Voice on the Wire," Universal, or any of the Pathe serials such as "The Perils of Pauline" released some time ago.

It is not too much to say that the morals of the entire world are in a large measure at the mercy of the moving picture screen. Many of its children base their ideas of life on what they see on the screen. Its people depressed, afflicted, and under the shadow of a great war turn to the most easily acquired and most diverting form of recreation, that which is found on the screen. It is therefore up to the producer at this most critical period of the world's history to do his "bit" by devoting the best efforts of himself and of his employes to the making of only the best class of picture.

DOUD SEEKING A MARKET.

Omer F. Doud, general manager of the Fielder Film Corporation of Chicago, was in New York City During the week of July 2, arranging market facilities for the product of his company. Mr. Doud is quite enthusiastic over the quality of his first release.

Whartons Open Offices in New York

Through Their Releasing Corporation They Will Issue Products in New York and Northern New Jersey.

WITH Edward Small and Charles J. Goetz as the active managers, The Whartons, of Ithaca, announce the forming of the Wharton Releasing Corporation, with offices in New York City. The intention of the new company is to handle its products direct to the exhibitor in New York State and northern New Jersey and to afford better facilities for marketing of "The Great White Trail" and other products made by the makers of "Patria" and "The Exploits of Elaine" to the various states rights and foreign buyers.

Leopold D. Wharton is the president of the new affiliation of the Ithaca plant, but Mr. Small and Mr. Goetz will be the active men in New York, Mr. Wharton's time being largely taken up with production. The Whartons believe that in Mr. Small and Mr. Goetz they have two men who are amply able to handle the Wharton productions. Mr. Goetz has been in the film business for years, having been associated with the selling end of the Fox, the World, the General and Artcraft companies, while Mr. Small is well known in the amusement field, having been secretary of the Master Drama Features and formerly associated with Marcus Loew.

Offices have been opened by the new corporation at 130 West Forty-sixth street, Suite 901, where salesrooms, projection rooms and all other conveniences for buyers and exhibitors have been provided.

"The idea upon which we are to work is to be one of service," says Mr. Goetz. "We believe in giving both the state right buyer and the exhibitor the most that we possibly can give him for the money. Of course, the first thing in our consideration is the quality of the picture—and after giving that we hope to aid in every possible way in sending the public to see that picture.

"We are holding New York and Northern New Jersey for ourselves, inasmuch as we are fully equipped to handle these two states from a straight exchange basis, booking the pictures into the various houses in the regular way. The rest of the country, naturally, will be state righted."

"The Little American"

New Standard Set for Motion Picture Drama by Six-Reel Artcraft Release, Written by Jeanie MacPherson, Staged by Cecil B. De Mille and Starring Mary Pickford.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AFTER witnessing "The Little American" the one improvement that will possibly suggest itself is a change of title. This five-reel photoplay, written by Jeanie MacPherson, staged by Cecil De Mille, and starring Mary Pickford, is so superior in theme and craftsmanship to any of the previous Pickford pictures that it should have been dignified by a title more in keeping with its merits. However, this conclusion can only be reached after seeing the photoplay, and everyone is going to see "The Little American" and then advise his neighbor to go and do likewise.

Scene from "The Little American" (Artcraft).

To begin with, the theme is right up to the minute, the United States and the battlegrounds on French soil being the scenes of action. Next, and most important of all, it is drama in the best sense of the word. It is also the story of the love of a man for a maid, and no matter how broad the interests involved and how surprising the truth with which the realities of the present world conflict is brought home to the spectator, it is the destiny of this man and this woman that absorbs the attention and places their fate above everything else in the story.

Angela Moore, a young American girl living in Washington, is courted by Karl Von Austrein, an attache of the German Legation, and Count Jules de Destin of the French Embassy. Angela prefers Karl. At the rumor of war each of the men returns to fight for his native land. Later Angela is sent across the Atlantic to join her great aunt, a French lady of title. The ship is sunk by a submarine, but the girl is saved and reaches the chateau, only to find it full of wounded French soldiers and her aunt dead. Angela takes charge of the estate and meets the count, who intrusts her with the workings of a secret telephone that may be used to help destroy the chateau by gun fire in case it is taken by the Germans. This happens, and Karl is among the invading forces. He has heard that Angela went down with the ship, and has allowed himself to be influenced by the acts of immorality practiced by his brother officers. When he discovers a young girl trying to hide from the invaders he seizes her in his arms and finds that she is Angela. Horrified at his act, he does his best to save her from the fate that befalls the other women of the chateau. The subsequent action shows the American girl aroused to contempt for her own life at the brutal treatment dealt the helpless men and women about her. She phones the necessary information to the French gunners, is discovered and shielded by Karl and both are sentenced to be shot, when these facts are brought to light. They are made to face a firing squad, are saved by a chance shot from the French guns and find freedom at last when Angela's French admirer secures Karl's release from a concentration camp.

Placed in imaginary surroundings, such a tale would constitute an ordinarily good melodrama. With a background of actuality and told in the remarkable realistic manner employed by Director De Mille, it grips the interest and sways the emotions with irresistible force. Every detail of the production, the sinking of the ship, the tide of battle that ebbs and flows about the old chateau, are reproduced with great fidelity. But beyond all else in its ability to work its will with the man in front of the screen is the splendid forward thrust of its incessant movement. In editing the film everything has been pared down to the essential with the same thoroughness that marks the playmaking of Eugene Walter. It is hardly necessary to add that no time is wasted with cut-backs. "The Little American" is screendrama. May its tribe increase!

It is a pleasant task to record the fact that Mary Pickford meets this advance in her medium for expressing her art with complete success. Angela Moore is forced to face experiences that would try the soul of the bravest, and is not found wanting. Although the tragic note has not been granted to Miss Pickford, it does not prevent her from giving a consistent portrayal of the character and making clear the horror and righteous determination that fills her heart at sight of the suffering around her.

The list of fine impersonations includes the entire cast. Jack Holt as Karl, Raymond Hatton as the Count, Hobart Bosworth as the German Colonel, James Neil as Senator Moore and Ben Alexander as Bobby Moore have the most important roles next to the stars.

Pathe Pictures

"The Last of the Carnabys," Five-Reel Astra Drama, Featuring Gladys Hulette, and "Borrowed Identity," Third "Fatal Ring" Episode.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

PATHE'S feature release for July 22—"The Last of the Carnabys," a five-reel drama—brings Gladys Hulette to the screen in a somewhat different role than those in which she has been seen in recent releases. Her part is a sympathetic and appealing one, and her portrayal of the role adds laurels to her fast-growing crown. William Parke's direction is the other outstanding feature of the picture. The direction, together with the work and personality of the star and her support, and a fairly interesting story by Samuel Morse, combine to make the picture a good program release. William Parke, Jr., again is seen opposite Miss Hulette, but in this latest Astra production there is not the customary romance between the characters played by them—they are sister and brother, the last representatives of an old and famous New York family. There is no dominant love interest in the picture, stress being successfully laid on an appeal for sympathy with the girl who overcomes obstacles in living up to the traditions of the Carnaby family.

Space limits the many good things that might be said about the senior Mr. Parke's direction. The atmosphere is in harmony with the story; some lightings are especially fine, and there has been much attention paid to detail—all of which makes for the better entertaining value of the film.

The last hundred feet or so of the picture, however, are not in keeping with the consistency of the whole. The ending is rather peculiar and, although happy, to some may be more or less disappointing.

The cast is a well-chosen and an able one. Each of the types fit almost perfectly. Important in support of the principals are Paul Everton, Harry Benham and Eugene Woodward.

"Borrowed Identity."

Exciting fight scenes on board a yacht add interest to "Borrowed Identity," third two-reel episode of Pathe's "The Fatal Ring" serial. This episode shows how Pearl—played by Pearl White—and her followers are rescued from the house of mystery. The reporter is sent to cover ship news by his editor. Pearl and Knox are lured to a yacht and there made prisoners by Carslake. Pearl escapes in the guise of the girl who lured her to the yacht. Pearl and Carslake get on a boat and, at the point of a gun, Pearl obtains the setting and the diamond. Carslake jumps from the boat and Pearl gets the police. The police go to the yacht and battle with the gang. Pearl is saved by the reporter. The end shows that Carslake still has the real diamond.

"The Beloved Adventuress"

Kitty Gordon the Star of a Five-Reel Photoplay by Frances Marion That Is Dramatic But Sordid in Theme—Directed by William A. Brady.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE character acted by Kitty Gordon in "The Beloved Adventuress" is Juliette La Monde, a musical comedy star, who is surrounded by admirers. The one to whom she gives her heart, however, is a married man, who leaves his wife to live with the fascinating actress. Each professes to be madly in love with the other, but when Juliette's young sister comes to live with her, Morgan Grant, the ardent gentleman, at once transfers his affections to the other member of the family; but Juliette saves Francine from disgrace by firing a bullet into the faithless one and putting a stop to his love making forever. She then goes to France and joins the Red Cross, dying bravely in an attempt to rescue a wounded woman, who turns out to be the discarded wife of Morgan Grant. The younger sister, her eyes opened at last, marries a manly young chap who is worthy any good woman's love.

Scene from "The Beloved Adventuress" (World).

This more or less truthful story of the life of an actress was written by Frances Marion and directed by William A. Brady. The president of the World Film Corporation has placed the scenario on the screen with the completeness of an experienced director. Kitty Gordon acts the part of Juliette with authority, and dresses it gorgeously. Her gowns will delight the members of her own sex. Frederick Truesdell, Jack Drumier, Lillian Cook, William Sherwood and Pinna Nesbit are the leading members of a cast that support the star most effectively.

Warren Working on Second Picture.

Edward Warren is busy at work on the second production under his own banner. It promises to excel even the settings of "The Warfare of the Flesh," and as is the custom of Mr. Warren an all-star cast is being used. The theme will be a pleasing heart-story of the present day.

"When True Love Dawns"

Susan Grandaise in Five-Reel Brady-International Photoplay That Shows the Artistic Perfection of French-Made Pictures, Directed by Louis Mercanton.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE second Brady-International release featuring Susan Grandaise, "When True Love Dawns," confirms the impressions made by the first picture—that for artistic perfection these photoplays are in a class by themselves. Direction, acting and photography are all of the highest order and have a distinctive quality as marked as a painting by some celebrated master.

The story of "When True Love Dawns" is a variant of Ohnet's "The Ironmaster." Susan Breville, a young girl of wealth and social standing, loves an artist, but gives him up and marries an elderly millionaire named George Destray to save her grandmother, the Duchess of Breville, from poverty. Her husband is engrossed with his affairs and Susan renews her acquaintance with the painter, now a successful man. She imagines that she can be happy only with him and agrees to an elopement. Destray learns of this and plans to put himself out of the way so that there shall be no bar to Susan's happiness. The owner of a stone quarry, he adjusts a blast so that the explosion will kill him, but Susan discovers his intent in time to prevent it and realizes at last that Destray is the man she truly loves.

Scene from "When True Love Dawns" (World).

As the heroine of "When True Love Dawns." Susan Grandaise is called upon to portray a different type of young womanhood from her role in "A Naked Soul." Susan Breville has all the innocence and grace of the other character, but her rank in life is much higher and she adds the experience of a wife to the influences that mold her nature. These subtle distinctions are brought out by the actress with the fineness of touch and charm of person that make her performances a continual delight. The scene where she agrees to go away with the artist is played without a suggestion of the grosser passions; Susan's resolve is that of a woman who feels that she can no longer live a lie for her own sake, but more for the man whose name she bears. The beauty of pose and gesture which is hers and which makes her so effective before the camera, is given full play in this picture. The taste of Miss Grandaise in the selection of costumes is another telling point in her favor.

To Albert Signer as George Destray go the chief acting honors of the cast. His performance endows the millionaire with a nobility of character that regulates his every act, and is accomplished with an ease and naturalness that make the illusion perfect. Brenton Marchville as Robert Breville, Paul Guide as Paul Lancy, and Marie Jalabert as the Duchess of Breville, are worthy their distinguished companionship.

Louis Mercanton again shows his mastery of composition and balance in his groupings, and his ability to infuse the extra people with the spirit of the scene.

"A Place in the Sun"

In Essanay's "Do Children Count?" Episode Little Mary McAlister and Associates Do Fine Work.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

THE title of the latest episode in Essanay's "Do Children Count?" series has little connection with the story. It is called "A Place in the Sun." In this picture Little Mary McAlister is assisted by two little boys and a bull pup. This cast makes it an excellent child picture. The smaller of the two boys has a way of laughing which seems to consist in opening his whole face. The pup will eat anything, even if it is on a fork or a spoon.

Little Mary's family is in want. She finds an old miser's wallet on the street. Her mother has told her that the Lord will provide. So she takes the wallet as sent by Providence.

She orders all the supplies the family needs. Then the old miser traces her and has her arrested. The judge in the juvenile court pays the miser out of his own pocket the money which Little Mary has spent from the wallet.

Mabel Bardine has maintained a consistently vivid impersonation of Little Mary's mother all through the series. In this episode she is a poor woman in ill-health. We must not forget that much of Little Mary's success depends upon this charatcerization.

Little Mary is the typical little mother while her own mother is ill. She clears away the table, wipes up the floor, washes the jam from her little brother's face, and lays the older boy across her lap—to sew up a tear in his breeches. As has been observed in other reviews of this series, the children here really act. This raises the picture above the class in which children are merely lovable children. Children in the audience will be intensely interested in this episode. It is something they can understand. In its way it is a modern fairy tale, too.

Kalem Shows Two Stingarees

Also the Last of the American Girl Series, in Which Marin Sais Does Excellent Riding.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

STINGAREE will have to get another white coat. He exchanged clothes with a young man who was going to take a position as clerk in a bank in New South Wales and he did not get his coat back. This happened in an episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree," called "A Double Deception." Edythe Sterling is the banker's daughter very anxious to meet the romantic Stingaree. When she meets him in disguise, of course, she does not recognize him. She dons an ill-becoming riding-habit and rides off, side-saddle, into the country, where she finds the bogus Stingaree, who has escaped from Howie.

In "An Eye for an Eye," Stingaree finds a lamb with a broken leg. He carries it to the shack of Gypsy Prince, a gambler. In a game, the gambler uses loaded dice and wins from Stingaree. Later, Stingaree gets even. He holds up a stage upon which Gypsy is a passenger. He makes him restore to another passenger, Tom Banks, money which he has won from him. Then Stingaree arranges the meeting of Tom and the girl he has been kept from marrying by the debt on his mother's homestead.

The author, E. W. Hornung, has done an excellent bit of characterization in Stingaree. The actor, True Boardman, makes up the character as dissipated about the eyes. This is unfortunate. Some people dislike pictures where, they say, "the actors look dissipated." Howie is played by Hal Clements. He did not originate this character. He played it in the first episode of the present series. Not much acting is required of Howie in these two episodes.

The last of "The American Girl" series is "The Ghost of the Desert." Marin Sais is at her best when she is astride a horse. She does some excellent riding in this picture. She also wears a beautiful gown. But that is before she starts out on the trail of Devil Dorgan. He is the ghost who comes to life after twenty years.

"Patsy"

Five-Reel Fox Picture with June Caprice First as Ragged Princess and Then as Ingenuous Maiden Making Love.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE were better possibilities in the story of this picture, "Patsy," than the Fox Film studio has brought out. It has one extremely well directed situation, but the heroine fails to make any real impression in this role. One might be tempted to say that the director, John Adolphi, did not think much of his material as a whole and put all his imagination into the part that appealed to him. To tell the cold truth, the scenes in the room of the villainess (Edna Munsey) with Joseph Gramby and Harry Hilliard make every scene in which the heroine (June Caprice) appears seem thin. There is no true ingeniousness in her presentation of Patsy, and the director let her wear clothes, both night and day gowns, that no mountain girl would be at all likely to have so soon after she arrived in the city. Besides, the picture drags along unmercifully.

The early scenes of the story show the heroine as a ragged tomboy girl of Southern mountains. The scenes are full of obvious acting and are kept on much too long for real effectiveness. She is sent to the city where a one time friend of her father's whom she doesn't know is dead is expected to meet her. The man's son, who is a good sort but is leading a speedy life, gets the letter and expects Patsy a boy. It astonishes him to see her; but he takes her home and wants the old butler to take care of her. They decide to get a housekeeper. The picture attempts the ingeniously embarrassing, but the actress fails to persuade us of her sincerity. The counterplot, in which a scheming woman has caught the young man in his cups and made him think he has married her, gives the story a new lease of life; but we are let into the secret that she is the faithful butler's wife too soon and we can foresee the end when the butler will see and recognize her.

"Neptune's Naughty Daughter"

Alice Howell Featured in Two-Reel Century Comedy That Is Crammed with Action—Distributed on State Rights.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

IT WOULD hardly have been possible to get more action into a comedy that is contained in the two reels that comprise "Neptune's Naughty Daughter," a Century Comedy featuring Alice Howell, and which is for distribution on the state rights plan. More things happen during the running of the two reels than usually happen to the heroine of a paper-covered thriller; and if the piece does not make every one who sees it laugh a few times at least, there is something wrong with that person.

Scene from "Neptune's Naughty Daughter" (Century).

Alice, the daughter of a fisherman, besides pulling some of her own stuff, gets shanghaied. But this happens only after she has done her comical best to overcome the villain and go to her sailor-lover. But when she gets on the ship she starts things, and from then on they happen so rapidly that one can scarcely get one's breath between smash-up, boat collisions, etc.

Directed by J. G. Blystone, the comedy is a very good example of the rapid-fire type of fun.

"The Message of the Mouse"

Six-Reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Written by George R. and Lillian Chester and Directed by J. Stuart Blackton.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THIS Blue Ribbon feature, "The Message of the Mouse," may be strongly recommended to lovers of much villainy, of mysterious rooms with secret panels and fireplaces that turn at the pressure of a button and reveal a stairway for the convenience of the arch-plotters when hard driven by the police. George R. and Lillian Chester have written a six-reel scenario that starts off entertainingly and maintains the interest in a clever plot right through to the finish.

The story takes its title from a bit of paper torn from a cipher message which a mouse picks up and drops in the bedroom of the heroine. The ambassadors from five different nations are concerned in a plan to destroy, as far as possible our merchant marine, and to divert billions of American capital to their own countries. The daughter of a wealthy shipbuilder gets an inkling of the plot from the bit of paper and helps the secret service officials to run down the conspirators.

Anita Stewart plays Wynn Winthrop, the heroine. The part is well within her capabilities and she is as pleasing as ever as the kind of refined but courageous American girl she does best. L. Rogers Lytton is adroit as the chief plotter, and excellent impersonations are contributed by Julia Swayne Gordon, Rudolph Cameron, Franklyn Hanna, Robert Gaillard and Bernard Seigel. J. Stuart Blackton's direction of the picture is equal to its needs.

THE second of the Terry Human Interest series which deals with the possibility of reading character in the face demonstrates its claims by means of the eye, and is entitled "Character as Revealed in the Eye." Various kinds of eyes are shown and their meaning read in an interesting and easily credited manner. The eyes of President Wilson, William H. Taft, Billy Sunday and General Pershing are referred to by pen and ink sketches as living examples of the truth of the teachings of Jessie Fowler, upon whose studies are based the claims of the picture.

On the same reel with "Character as Revealed in the Eye" are some child studies from Little Italy on New York's East Side.

The Selig-Hoyt Comedies

"A Rag Baby" and "A Runaway Colt" Are the Fourth and Fifth of the Series, and Both Can Be Recommended as Telling Mirth Makers.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

RECOUNTING my own experience while viewing the fourth and fifth of the Selig-Hoyt comedy series, I can vouch for their catching farce-comedy qualities. The fourth is "A Rag Baby" and the fifth "A Runaway Colt," and they exercise a continuous tickling of one's risibilities.

"A Rag Baby."

In "A Rag Baby" we are treated to the further antics of James Harris, who takes the part of Tony Gay, brother of Clara (Amy Dennis), whose husband has stolen her baby. The merry doings of the farce comedy revolve around the recovery of the child.

Tony buys a drug store so that he can have the pleasure of filling prescriptions for his beloved brother-in-law and thus keep him confined to bed, while the plan for recovering the baby is being worked out. He engages Old Sport (William Fables) as his clerk, and what that worthy does not know about filling prescriptions can be imagined when it is told that he is a pugilist, in training for a bout with Dusty Bob, nicknamed the Dusty Hitter. Tony is just as ignorant in the matter of drugs.

Scene from "A Rag Baby" (Selig).

The scenes in the drug store produce riotous mirth, and an end is put to them by the explosion of a bomb which demolishes the store and sends Tony and Old Sport heavenward for a time and then drops them through the roof of a girl's boarding school, where the missing baby is eventually found.

The release date is July 9, through K-E-S-E.

"A Runaway Colt."

In this Hoyt farce comedy we have still more riotous fun. James Harris appears as Elias Simpkins, an energetic farmer with a pretty daughter. Her name is Letty, and she throws goo-goo glances at the hired farm hand, Hank Higgins, a lubberly yokel who excites the major portion of the mirth. William Fables plays the role with an abandon that sometimes causes the spectators to suspect that all is not quite right in the region of his midriff.

The ingenuity shown in the scene where Hank, innocently chopping wood, contrives to hoist his future father-in-law high in the air and then deposit him at the bottom of a deep well, will never fail to raise screams of laughter. Another clever trick is shown in the scene where the big, sissified son of Judge Short is making love to Letty and is interrupted by the kick of an old horse which stands behind him. The momentum lands the lover high in a tree top and, seeing that the tree has no lower branches to assist one in climbing it or getting down, Hank solves the difficulty by felling the tree and then releasing the half dead victim from the heavy branches that press him to the earth.

Hank's clever scheme to defeat his future father-in-law, after a spirited mauling match, and then flying with Letty to get the marital knot tied, will not fail to give a strong finish to this merry farce.

The release date is July 23, through K-E-S-E.

"Lady Barnacle"

Viola Dana in Entertaining Five-Reel Metro Screen Version of Edgar Franklin's Sprightly Novel.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT would probably surprise the natives of India if they knew the amount of comedy entertainment they have furnished for the screen in the United States. "Lady Barnacle," a five-reel Metro screen version of Edgar Franklin's novel, has a Hindu herrine whose attempt to reach her lover in this country causes her to attach herself to a modest and immaculate young man from Boston when he leaves India for his native land. She gets her unwilling traveling companion into all sorts of amusing situations on the voyage over, breaks up his love affair with a young woman on Beacon street, and nearly makes him fall a victim to her father's wrath. However, after a too long drawn out finish, she explains matters to the satisfaction of all concerned. The most of the action is capital farce, although the motives are serious, and the entire story is given an originality of handling that is refreshing.

The production has been treated handsomely in the way of locations and the other adjuncts of a well-made picture. Director Collins displays his customary good judgment all through the five reels, and "Lady Barnacle" may be introduced to all grades of moving picture spectators with every assurance that she will meet with a warm reception.

Viola Dana, whose ability in types of the Hindu Princess class has been clearly proved, plays the title role with the same charm, unforced humor and honesty of purpose that has previously distinguished her impersonations. This little lady may always be depended upon to give to her work the best that is in her, and her best is a very excellent example of screen acting. Robert D. Walker as the good young man from Boston performs the difficult task of winning a strong liking for the character. The other members of the cast are worthy the company they keep.

"The Car of Chance"

Five-Reel Bluebird Release Featuring Franklyn Farnum Has Fair Plot but Is Too Deliberate in Action.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Bluebird five-reel feature, "The Car of Chance," has one fault—it never gets out of slow speed. The authors have conceived a fairly good story, but it unfolds so deliberately that its value is greatly weakened. The happy-go-lucky son of a wealthy father finds, upon his parent's death, that he has been left nothing but an automobile and an order for unlimited gasoline. The young fellow loves the daughter of a man who has a large bank account and is the manager of a local street railway. He frowns upon a penniless suitor and encourages a rival who has money but no morals. The street car men go on strike, and the hero helps them to win their fight by organizing a line of jitney autos to carry the public about the city. This quickly brings the heroine's father to terms.

There is an underplot involving the daughter of the leader of the strikers and the dishonest rival, but the picture never reaches any real dramatic height. The incident of the villain trying to force his attentions upon his stenographer and the smashing in of the office door by the hero at just the right moment has lost its novelty; and a misunderstanding between the young man and his sweetheart over the affair is of too short duration to create any real suspense.

Scene from "The Car of Chance" (Bluebird).

The picture is well produced and is played in good style by Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon and other competent members of the cast.

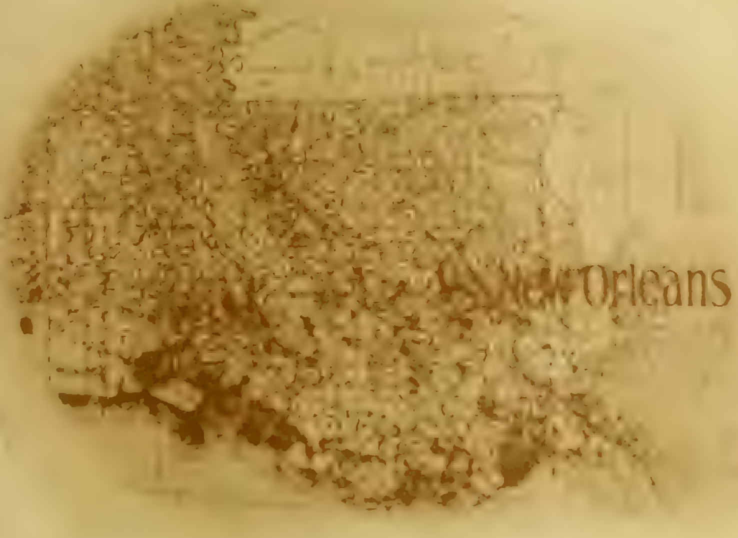
Putting New Orleans on the Moving Picture Map



Special Correspondence by Randall M. White, of the Moving Picture World

IT IS the common remark of good friends of New Orleans, spoken not in anger but in pity, that until a few years ago this "Cradle of France in America" had been fast asleep for a century or more. Today, pulsing with the strength of its almost incalculable natural resources, the period of its complete awakening is at hand. Government ship yards are building, new industries are being developed and the old Crescent City of the South is stepping out bravely to take its place well up in the [illegible] of progressive cities of the United States.

This era of awakening, which one cannot but sense in even the briefest stay in this quaintest of American municipalities, is calculated to make one throttle what might otherwise be tremendous surprise at what is at the moment being done to "put New Orleans on the moving picture map." In a few short years the moving picture industry, pushed and forced by the most aggressive operators from other lines, has outstripped all other businesses save two or three. It is to be expected then that in any city which has "found itself" the moving picture, loved of both the masses and the classes, should promptly step out in front.

On July Fourth there was opened for the pleasure and comfort of the people of New Orleans a photoplay entertainment which the controlling Saenger Amusement Company, Inc., feel it is justified in calling the "Greatest Show South," but which any fair observer will concede is something more, in that it gives promise of being one of the foremost institutions of its kind in the United States, the effete North and East and the proverbially aggressive West not excepted.

This big project of the Saenger company's has been in the planning for fully five years, but only a year ago, after every little detail of the plan of construction and operation had been carefully worked out, was the contract for the erection of the beautiful new Strand theater in New Orleans let. Delays occasioned by war-time conditions in building circles have been responsible for postponements of the opening of the house. But the controlling company has been constantly optimistic, holding that a project involving an investment of $315,000, with $180,000 of this considerable amount represented solely in the theater proper, is something which had better move a little bit too slowly than a bit too rapidly.

The new Strand, pride of the South, must be considered as an enterprise in the broadest sense of the term. While the beautiful theater is the concrete thing one views, even more important is the carefully-laid plan of operation which has been devised. In its operations throughout the South up to the present time the Saenger company has already given evidence that it regards the conduct of its theaters as of fully as much importance as it does the nature of the theaters themselves. In New Orleans it is starting out to build for a long and increasingly successful future, and this thought, expressed by careful, conservative men who direct its affairs, is the best guarantee to the people of New Orleans and the country from which the city draws that the Strand theater will indeed be an important factor in putting the Crescent City on the moving picture map.

Has Seating Capacity of 1,500.

The Strand theater building is situated on Baronne street, between Gravier and Common streets, about two blocks from Canal street, the main artery of New Orleans' business life and a street famous as the widest municipal thoroughfare in the United States. The building's frontage is 158 feet on Baronne street and 108 feet on Gravier street. The construction is strictly fireproof throughout, the exterior showing a dignified expanse of buff press brick with terra cotta trimmings to match.

The theater auditorium proper is 128 feet long by 54 feet wide, the main exit being 30 feet wide, taking up more than half the auditorium's frontage on Gravier street. The main entrance is through a beautifully ornamented lobby 12 feet wide and 50 feet long leading from Baronne street into the main auditorium foyer, which is 54 feet wide and 12 feet deep. Approximately 1,000 people can be seated on the main floor and 800 more in the single balcony, which extends about one-third the distance over the first floor. Both the first floor seats and those on the balcony are placed on a mathematically computed concaved slope which gives perfect vision from each seat in the house whether patrons do or do not choose to remove their hats. Across the rear of the first floor and again half way down toward the stage there are a series of four loges, each designed to accommodate about ten people. Five more loges of about the same size are to be found on the front of the balcony.

At the rear of the house on the first floor, Baronne street side, has been placed the men's smoking room. Stairs, right and left, lead to three separate levels from which the various parts of the balcony can be reached. The first level is a "comfort floor" which extends entirely across the building and is almost as deep as the complete pitch of the balcony. An ornamental "well" 18 feet deep by 45 feet wide is a construction feature of this section of the house. Kept from danger by a pretty iron grilled railing, promenaders can look down into the main auditorium as their fellow theater patrons come in. Just behind this veil are commodious lounging quarters for both sexes, and at one side a retiring room for the women patrons. Passageways from this first level lead to the balcony loges and front seats in the balcony.

J. H. SAENGER, PRESIDENT; A. D. SAENGER, VICE-PRESIDENT; H. FICHTENBERG, VICE-PRESIDENT; W. H. GUERINGER, AS'ST GENERAL MANAGER; L. M. ASH, TREASURER; H. H. GEE, COMPTROLLER

On the second balcony level, reached by a continuation of the stairways from the main floor, right and left, the feature of construction is the office suite for the management of the theater. This suite is made up of three light, airy administration rooms and is equipped with a private toilet and shower bath. Entrance from this level is to the middle section of the balcony. The rear, or high point, of the balcony is reached by a still further continuation of the stairways from the main floor, right and left.

Marble and Mahogany Interior Trim.

The interior trim of the building throughout is an artistic combination of Caen stone, white Italian marble, broken here and there with beautiful lobby frames of special and permanent design provided by the Menger & Ring company of New York City; these frames are heavy in construction with fluted columns and ornamental bases and capitals, the prevailing color being gold with a light blue tone touched in The display was provided by the New York concern after it had been given carte blanche and the frames are conceded by the manufacturers to be the finest examples of this class of work which have ever been turned out of their factory. There are beautiful indirect lighting fixtures in the ceiling of the lobby and the floor is in tiled marble effect. The ticket booth, in itself a thing of beauty, constructed of marble and glass, stands in the front of the lobby, almost on the street line, and will use a four-color ticket-selling battery, installed by the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, of New York City.

The Caen stone, which will cover the broad expanse of wall space in the main auditorium, is of a very light buff color. Marble baseboards and marble trim here and there have been used in conjunction with a rich mahogany wood. The radiators which are necessary to the heating of the building by steam have been placed in niches in the wall. The ceiling of the auditorium, forty feet high, is flat and has been decorated in a daylight sky effect, in pale blue and white. Heavy plaster beams, and plaster grills—two of these grills for the typhoon cooling and ventilating system—together with pretty indirect lighting fixtures hanging close to the ceiling, add to the pleasing artistic effect.

THE MAN WHO BUILT THE STRAND

E. V. RICHARDS, JR.
SECRETARY & GEN MANAGER

The special opera chairs in the boxes are mahogany upholstered in rich, dark tapestry, the musicians' chairs are in mahogany and green tapestry standing in a conical metal base, and the other chairs, both on the main floor and in the balcony are of mahogany, upholstered in green leather. It is quite noticeable, it may be observed, that in the placing of the chairs everywhere the comfort of the patrons of the house has in no instance been sacrificed in order that the seating capacity might be increased. The Thomas A. Edison Wisconsin Seating Company has been held responsible not only for the special manufacture of the chairs, but also for their proper arrangement.

Color Scheme Brown, Blue and Green.

The chairs in the theater have been placed on a hardwood flooring. Down the aisles and in the foyers, lounging rooms, etc.,.the floor covering chosen is noiseless cork tile, laid in six-inch squares, light and a dark shade of brown working out the design. Beautiful tapestry panels on the walls, provided by M. H. Rogers, of New York City, and luxuriant velvet stage drapes especially designed and made by the Schwartz-Eustis Company, interior decorators of New Orleans, have all been studied out to provide a harmonizing color scheme in the pastel shades of brown green and blue.

Of particular interest to the moving picture trade in the construction of the new Strand will be found the last-word refinements in the way of operating equipment which have been provided, partly with the aid of established manufacturers of the lines of goods required, but more particularly because of original thought given the peculiar requirements of the theater by those who are going to operate it.

Tiled Bathroom for the Operators.

The operator's booth and quarters are at the extreme rear of the balcony, slightly above the balcony seating floor. This building equipment consists of three rooms, the top of each room projecting above the roof level of the theater to permit of each room's being naturally lighted and ventilated with the aid of windows and skylights, as well as with the regulation exhaust fans. The operator's booth proper is the center of the suite of three rooms. It is 14 feet wide and 10 feet deep and will house two of the latest type Nicholas Power Company projectors, the No. 6B, shooting 150 feet to the screen in the front of the house. From this booth the operator will not only be able to control every function of the projecting machine, but, because of a specially designed interlocking electrical system, will also be able to control the lighting system of the stage as well as the auditorium proper.

A rewind room to the left of the operator's room has its only communication with the operator's booth through a revolving metal pass window which will enable the operator to pass a film to be rewound without making an opening from his quarters to the other room, which might increase the fire hazard; fireproof cabinets for the storage of such film as must necessarily be kept in the theater from time to time have also been placed in the rewind room. Entirely separate from each of these other operating rooms, too, is the small room to the right of the main operating booth, in which a double generating set has been placed. Running along the rear of the three rooms already mentioned is a hallway which leads to a spacious tiled bath and toilet room for the use of the operators and house attaches; there is also a shower bath in this room.

Original Idea in Screen Arrangement.

The projection screen arrangement devised for the new theater is novel in the extreme and probably stands alone among all the theaters in the United States. A Minusa Gold Fibre Screen, 24 feet wide and 18 feet high, especially constructed, has been chosen. This screen, already stretched and mounted on the usual wooden frame, has been bolted on to a holding device made of light angle iron

With the aid of this device the screen can be tilted to any desired angle or can be moved forward or back the full depth of the stage, 18 feet, a simple mechanical contrivance, operated from the stage, doing all of the work. The forward and back movement is accomplished by rolling the screen's light steel scaffolding in tracks on noiseless rollers, and is desired for the reason that during the progress of each show at the Strand the stage is to be used for something other than moving pictures. Easily interchangeable lenses and apertures on the projecting machines, worked in conjunction with the tilting screen, will be used to correct some of the faults of projection which the new Strand management have already found are practically impossible of correction in any other way.

The beautiful stage drapes already mentioned, which will to a considerable extent replace the [illegible] stage settings to be seen in some photoplay theaters, have also been ingeniously devised to work in conjunction with the movable screen. These drapes, four in number, completely mask the proscenium opening, which is 32 feet wide by 25 feet high. The drapes are all of heavy velvet, each finished with a 16-inch gold colored fringe. The "grand drapery" across the top of the opening rolls in graceful scallops and bears the Saenger and Strand emblems. The first stage drape, green in color, merely parts in the middle and is drawn the desired distance off stage, right and left, on a stout rod with the aid of ball-bearing rollers.

The second stage curtain, gold in color, and the third, purple in color, move not only to and from the center of the stage as does the front curtain, but also move upstage and down on the same device which moves the screen. This arrangement will make it possible to use all the curtains in much the same way that "tormentors" are used on the stage of dramatic theaters. These draperies, too, are easily taken down, and it will be possible to use in their place, when occasion seems to demand it, any special form of scenic drop which might enhance the effectiveness of the particular photoplay being shown. Left and right on [illegible] a few feet above the level of the main auditorium, are two comfortable dressing rooms. The drapery arrangement of the stage already described and the seating arrangement provided for the thirty-five piece symphony orchestra which will be featured at the Strand is counted upon to give the theater its most artistic appeal to the eye. The musicians, costumed in Tuxedo suits, lavender and gold, will sit in cascade effect on three separate levels approaching the stage elevation, inclosed from the audience by a low pergola railing broken at intervals by marble vases filled with flowers.

Interlocking Dimmer System on all Lights.

The lighting system of the theater from top to bottom, both as regards the auditorium lights and the so-called effect lights, is also of special design, worked out by experts permanently in the employ of the Saenger company. On the stage there are a string of foots and a border and in the ceiling of the auditorium five spots, each wired for five color circuits. All of these circuits, as well as every other light in the auditorium, are interlocked on the same dimming system and can be controlled by one man from either the stage or the operating booth. Color wheels on the ceiling spots work automatically when so desired. It is possible, too, to bathe any section of the stage or front of the auditorium in any desired color of light without in any way interfering with the general lighting effect.

The stage lighting equipment has been installed by the Kliegel Company of New York. A trough-like arrangement under the balcony and similar arrangements, smaller in size, along each side of the auditorium, to throw indirect light down over the heads of the audience, will be used to serve the simple purposes of lighting patrons to their seats. On the exterior the theater is brilliantly lighted by flaming arcs and by the most pretentious and expensive electrical sign which has ever been seen in the South. This sign, installed by the Thomas Cusack Company, stretches the entire 158-foot length of the Baronne street frontage of the building. Fleur de lis rosettes of red and blue, intermittently burning, are linked together by graceful curves of white light, this display leading from either end to a handsome announcement sign in the center and on top of the building, extending 13 feet out over the sidewalk. Equipped with easily interchangeable letters, this announcement sign will always call attention to the Strand theater and the particular entertainment it is offering from week to week.

THE STRAND'S MANAGING DIRECTOR

Ninety-eight Per Cent. Fireproof.

Provisions which seem ample have been made to keep the big theater cool throughout the warm summers which prevail in the South and warm when the winter breezes blow. The Typhoon Fan Company, of New York, directly supervised the ventilating sysand have installed two of their eight-foot "blowers" in fan houses on the roof of the theater. It is the function of these blowers to take the outside air, cool it, and discharge it in the theater through ornamental grills in the ceiling of the auditorium. A steam heating plant, with boiler room in the basement of the building, will heat the building during the winter. There is also a modern vacuum cleaning system, permanently installed, with connecting stations scattered throughout the auditorium both upstairs and down.

As to the reproof qualities of the new structure, a representative of the Saenger company made the statement that fully 98 per cent. of the materials which will be found in the theater are non-inflammable. The skeleton of the building is of steel and reinforced concrete, this feature of construction giving an auditorium 54 feet wide and 128 feet deep without a single column to obstruct the view. The floors are of concrete, with only a thin covering of hardwood, the chairs are mostly steel, and so on down the line. Exits from the main floor of the balcony make it possible to empty the house in less than four minutes.

"Our best proof that the structure is as safe as it can be made," the Saenger representative remarked, "is that we have already been assured by our insurance brokers that the underwriters have given us a ridiculously low insurance rate, saying that there seems to be nothing to burn."

As this descriptive article is being written some of the details of operation of interest to motion picture people have not yet been decided upon. The Seanger interests at the present time control the first run Triangle, Artcraft, Paramount and Vitagraph services for New Orleans, and it is presumed that an "open door" selection will at least have the call in service at the house.

The general statement at this time runs about this way.

"We're just going to give New Orleans the best photoplay entertainment we can possibly devise. We don't mind saying that in the construction of the Strand we haven't hesitated to copy every feature which we thought worth while, and, in the operation of the theatre we shall probably do the same, also introducing some of our own ideas which we think will be pleasing"

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto, New York City, made a special trip from the North to New Orleans, at the request of the Saenger Company, to stage the first performance at the new theater—"Wild and Woolly," with Douglas Fairbanks.

Mid-day Concerts of Good Music.

The music at the Strand will be featured fully as much as the pictures. As has already been noted, a thirty-five-piece symphony orchestra will play at every performance and, as a distinctive novelty in the field of photoplay entertainment, an hour and a half's concert program made up of instrumental and vocal music will be a feature each day. The house will open at 12 o'clock noon, and the concert, with no pictures, will continue from 12 o'clock until 1:30 p. m. An admission ticket calling for nothing but the concert program will be sold, as well as a combination ticket for both the concert and the photoplay entertainment which is to follow it.

Vieing with the big orchestra for honors will be the big Wurlitzer organ which has been installed. It will be played from a console in the orchestra pit at the right of the stage, its pipe openings at either side of the stage being concealed by ornamental plaster grills which have been used with splendid effect in the decorative scheme of the building. An echo organ, operated from the same console, has been placed underneath the balcony. A special Chickering concert grand piano, also placed by Philip Werlein, Ltd., sales agent for the Wurlitzer concern in the New Orleans territory, will be used.

Telephone Service a Distinct Novelty.

Another decided novelty in construction and operation which is being worked out at the Strand has to do with the careful and intensive extension work which the Saenger company has been doing in its territory for years. The controlling company already enjoys the distinction of being the only amusement organization with representation in the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce. In one feature at least it plans to operate the Strand theater as a semi-civic institution.

On the first mezzanine level in the new theater there has been established a private telephone exchange with trunks connecting throughout New Orleans and thence throughout the United States and Canada. Connected with this exchange are numerous telephone stations scattered throughout the house. A campaign will be conducted to influence out-of-town visitors to New Orleans to register with the switchboard operator at the Strand theater on easy index cards provided by the house management for that purpose. Advertising to this end is already being done in the newspapers in the South. Motion picture men in particular and the public in general are being invited to make the Strand one of their sure "ports of call" while in the Crescent City and to inform the Saenger people of their plans and whereabouts. The Strand management, in turn, contracts to give this information to such people as may desire it or, in other words, purposes to act as a clearing house of information to enable one person to find another in New Orleans.

There are almost countless other little details of management which the Saenger people have planned and worked out in a thoroughly practicable way for their new theater.

There are, of course, uniformed ushers observing a strict military discipline, and iced water for the patrons.

Withal it may be said that either the picture man or the layman who passes through the metropolis of the sovereign state of Louisiana without having investigated not only the theater that is "putting New Orleans on the moving picture map" but also the efficient and carefully-studied manner in which it is being done, will miss a splendid bet.

Triangle Program

"The Flame of the Yukon," With Dorothy Dalton; "Time Locks and Diamonds," With William Desmond, and a Keystone, "Dangers of a Bride."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Flame of the Yukon," by Monte M. Katterjohn, is a seven-reel story of gold-seeking in Alaska, with the dance hall of "Black Jack Hovey" as the principal background. The story is generally well constructed and filled with dramatic incidents of primitive passion, a powerfully pictured melodrama made notable by a most remarkable exhibition of types recently gathered in this type of production. The most impressive part of the story is the accurate presentation of a restless sea of humanity characterized by Robert Louis Stevenson as that "lifted by circumstances, as by a breaking wave, and dashed we know not where into the future." People are no longer masters of their fates, but they are swept this way and that, like mere driftwood, by the tides of circumstance.

Scene from "The Flame of the Yukon" (Triangle).

While Fortune is the sole divinity in such stories, there emerges from this one several strongly marked characterizations, due largely to the selection of types, presumably by Director Charles Miller. Dorothy Dalton stands supreme in her role, a helpless sort of waif until love kindles finer purpose in her soul and brings to her rescue the very qualities which made her a dominant personality in the mining camp. In this leading role there is very cleverly utilized an intensity affecting equally the good or the faulty in human conduct according to the influences of environment, natural love purifying a character of reckless passions. Her attempted sacrifices raises a condition of high suspense, which might have been more satisfactorily relieved had she chosen the hero of the great fight in her interest. This fight is one of the bitterest hand-to-hand conflicts imaginable. The whole play is blood-red melodrama, with some immutable truth injected.

"Time Locks and Diamonds" is the story of an intelligent man driven by injustice of the law to a lawless career, in which he amasses a fortune. He places his money in trust for himself and a young sister at school and lives the life of a country gentleman with a faithful but unreformed adherent from the underworld. Time comes when an old pal is in difficulties and "Silver Jim" is made to feel it incumbent upon him to "turn one more trick." He does this boldly and successfully, actually robbing the man who caused his downfall, but he is recognized at the wedding of his sister and brought to bay. Again his resourcefulness stands him good and he escapes to South America to begin a new life. The incidents of this melodrama are ingenious and cleverly put together—the story runs smoothly and interestingly straight through to the end, but there is a lack of sympathetic feeling in spite of the excellent acting of William Desmond, Robert McKim and others of the cast, and there is also a lack of definite purpose in the story. It is nevertheless interesting to watch and very much better told than most stories of its class.

"Dangers of a Bride" is very much better than its title, but it must be difficult to find a fetching title for Keystone farces. They depend very largely upon cleverness of mechanical device for their fun, and this element is abundant, treading on the realms of melodrama during the episodes of collision between a railroad train and an engine loaded with police officers. Most ingenious of the many devices is that showing what is passing in a private compartment on the train between a bride and groom, as demonstrated on a window shade. The farce will win and deserves to rank with other Keystone funmakers.

"A Touch of Nature" (K-E-S-E).

George Kleine announces that K-E-S-E will release July 30 the feature "A Touch of Nature," by Edison, instead of "The Barker," by Selig. It was written by Peter B. Kyne and made a great hit. It has to do with big league baseball matters and baseball celebrities are featured in the story.

"The Lone Wolf"

Eight-Reel Screen Version of Vance Story of Crime Rattling Good Melodrama—Presented by Herbert Brenon on Selznick Program.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A RATTLING good melodrama is something to be thankful for. The eight-reel screen version of "The Lone Wolf," the Louis Joseph Vance story directed and presented by Herbert Brenon on the Selznick program, is such a picture. It has a thief for a hero, who reforms and marries the woman detective who has been sent from Scotland Yard to run him down. A sentimental crook also figures in the story, a big-hearted expert at housebreaking, who adopts a little French waif out of gratitude for service rendered, and teaches the boy his own profession. The crook is killed over an affair with a woman member of his gang, and with his last breath begs the boy to always play the game alone. The boy, Michael Lanyard, becomes a thief with an international reputation, and is known as "The Lone Wolf."

The plot deals with the plans of an invention that will put a stop to German submarine warfare. The Central Powers are, naturally, anxious to get hold of the plans. The inventor has them photographed, destroys the original drawings, and is murdered by a German agent before he can place the film in safety. Lanyard steals it from the German agent, however, and it is this bit of film that enables him to start life anew, when he determines to go straight. Before this he makes a rich haul in the jewelry line, arouses the enmity of a band of crooks known as "The Pack," fights them single handed, and wins.

There are two murders, slides for life down ropes and across the roofs of houses, and a sensational auto chase that ends with one machine taking a drawbridge at dare-devil risk, and the other machine plunging from the end of the bridge into the water. There are also a realistic fire scene that burns a trifle too long, and a race and battle in the air that is the best thing of its kind to be shown on the screen.

At present the picture is about one reel too long. It is in two parts, and the first half is the superior piece of construction. The action moves forward at a steady pace. The second half may easily be remedied by proper cutting. The one glaring error in the entire picture is in making the French Minister of War a character out of a comic opera. The characters and their doings in a melodrama need not be taken at all seriously—that is why the plausible and the impossible are both accepted at the same value in this grade of work. But good taste is never out of order.

"The Lone Wolf" is full of excellent acting. Bert Lytell, who plays the crook-hero, is a new recruit in the silent drama. He has the right equipment for the work, and acts with the ease and finish of a veteran. Hazel Dawn is the detective-heroine. She is as attractive as ever, and does her bit in a quiet, clean cut fashion that is much above the commonplace. Other performances that are of distinctive quality include the waif of young Cornish Beck, the Burke of Stephen Grattan, Eckstrom by Alfred Hickman, Thibault by Ben Graham, Bannon by Robert Fisher, DeMoriban by William Riley Hatch, Popinet by Joseph Chailles, Wertheimer by William E. Shay and Madame Troyon by Florence Ashbrooke.

The production will add to Herbert Brenon's reputation for high class direction. George Edwards Hall has adapted the story skillfully, and J. Roy Hunt has handled the photographic efforts with equal success. "The Lone Wolf" is practically without cutbacks.

"Corruption"

Jack Gorman Writer and Director of Six-Reel State Rights Offering—Released by Popular Pictures Corporation.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

THERE is nothing worth while in "Corruption," a six-reel picture written and directed by Jack Gorman, and offered state rights purchasers by the Popular Pictures Corporation. The picture is uninteresting, unconvincing and cheap; it is poorly acted and under the surface is unclean. Even the titles are poor. It is certainly not a picture for the family circle.

"Corruption" is more drivel than drama. It opens with scenes in the offices of a doctor who makes a living by performing abortions. A side line is blackmail. The abortion stuff is "planted" more by inference than by offensive pictures, but the inference is unmistaken. With this as a startingpoint the author has brought his principal characters through a tale about on a par with the starting point. Just to mention one instance: the man who is forced to marry the girl he betrayed knocks her unconscious with his fist—and she about to become a mother! But even such an incident as this might be permissible on the screen if it were done dramatically and with cause; but, like other so-called "big" scenes in the picture, the incident brings a laugh instead of a tear.

The actor who plays the leading male role is funny instead of villainous; the leading female actress is camera-conscious and untrained. The support is about as good as are the leads. None of the members of the cast is well known.

"Man and Beast"

Five-Reel Butterfly Production Brings Out Diversified Selection from the Animal Kingdom in Screen Production.

Reviewed by Robert McElravy.

A WISE and able city editor once observed to one of his reporters that any newspaper story with an animal in it was almost certain to find a responsive public. Such is the universal interest in what we somewhat fatuously term the lower order of life.

But if this interest is genuine, and there is no reason for supposing otherwise, how much more eagerly must the public study a screen production in which lions, leopards, sheep, pigs, an elephant and a chimpanzee disport themselves as freely as the human members of the cast. In this production, the scenes of which are laid in the South African veldt, the animal features are an entertaining and entirely natural part of the story. The beasts perform their parts in a well trained, though no doubt carefully manipulated, manner.

Scene from "Man and Beast" (Butterfly).

Animals make good screen performers. Balzac was prone to trace a considerable analogy between animals and the human tribe, not always in a complimentary way to the latter. Certainly there are some things in which man may learn from the beasts, particularly in the matter of posing. There is an admirable simplicity and directness about them; they do not suffer from self-consciousness; neither do they threaten to shoot their cuffs or make a dash for the powder puff. They radiate a simple joy in being what they are and exhibit no envious crowding toward the spotlight.

The elephant in this number rescues a man from drowning in a slimy pool, carries a young woman to a clandestine meeting with her lover, and later brings home a lost child from the jungle. The chimpanzee has a lesser part to play, but does it acceptably. The lions and leopards provide exciting moments and the domestic beasts fill in the pastoral scenes in a pleasing way.

While the stellar honors go to the animals in this production, the human members of the cast are proficient. Eileen Sedgwick adds to her growing popularity in the part of Gretel, Park Jones plays the hero, and other roles are taken by Kingsley Benedict, Harry Clifton, L. M. Wells and Mrs. Witting. The scenario is by Reed Heustis and the production by Henry McRae.

"Luck of Roaring Camp" and "Skylarking on Skiis," With a Single Reel.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

THE first Conquest program begins with a four-reel feature, "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp." This tells the adventures of a schoolboy with an old lamp which has the same property as Aladdin's lamp, that of furnishing a genie to carry out the owner's every wish. This picture was reviewed in the issue of May 26, page 1301.

The second number on this program is Bret Harte's "Luck of Roaring Camp." This subject runs over a reel. The second reel is finished with "Skylarking on Skiis," showing a day's outing of a ski club. This is longer than the usual topical picture of this subject. It shows more than jumping on skiis. It shows how skiis are used to travel on the level, how they are used to go up hill as well as down, and it shows the unusual stunt of turning a forward somersault from a jump on skiis. It is a complete treatment of the subject.

Bret Harte's story is beautifully told. The scenes are taken in deep snow in a mining camp. The principal character is a gentleman gambler played by Ivan Christy in a costume of the Golden West. A baby comes to Roaring Camp, played by Eugene Feld. There are no women there after the baby's half-breed nurse dies. So the miners are forced to bring up the baby. This leads to their reformation. When the snows melt and the miners resume their search for gold, the baby is the means of their finding it. He is, therefore, the luck of Roaring Camp.

A single reel completes the program. It consists of a comedy, "He Couldn't Get Up in the Morning," 700 feet, reviewed in the issue of May 19, page 1141, and "Captains of Tomorrow," showing life at West Point. This is not long enough to show more than infantry manoeuvres and a little cavalry riding. The infantry looks splendid and is quite a relief from warlike pictures of soldiers. The cavalry is interesting because it is seldom shown. One is apt to forget that there is cavalry at West Point. We would like to see more of it.

This first program will entertain the whole family.

Franey's vehicle is a burlesque of the land of longhorns and alkali written by C. B. Hoadley and directed by William Beaudine.

The fourth episode of "The Gray Ghost," Universal's new mystery serial, will be released during the week. This will be shown as "The Fight," featuring Eddie Polo, Priscilla Dean, Emory Johnson and Harry Carter.

Kleine Reports Interest in Conquest

Announces First Release of Program as of July 14—Will Appeal to Families.

GEORGE KLEINE, distributor of Conquest Pictures produced by the Edison Studio, announces that his branch offices throughout the K-E-S-E organization report unusual interest by exhibitors in these pictures, especially the program feature of seven reels which Mr. Kleine is offering with the privilege allowed exhibitors of selecting any one subject from it.

The first program scheduled for publication, July 14, embraces a four-reel feature, "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp," written by Albert Stearns; "The Luck of Roaring Camp" and "Skylarking on Skiis," two reels; "He Couldn't Get Up in the Morning" and "Captains of Tomorrow," one reel.

There is a strong appeal to the whole family in Conquest Programs as arranged by Mr. Kleine—pictures appealing with the same force to adults and juveniles.

"The Luck of Roaring Camp" is adapted from Bret Harte's story, and like all that writer's productions has a strong Western flavor, with miners and frontiersmen in the foreground. Critics who reviewed the first Conquest Program at a private showing have nothing but praise for it.

WARREN MAKES A DISCOVERY.

Edward Warren claims to have discovered an entirely new picture star, and he predicts a great future for her. She is Helen Hayes Brown and she will appear in Mr. Warren's next production, now being rapidly completed at his elaborate studios at Grantwood.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

LOVE'S VICTORY (Selig).—This is a one-reel drama about a young physician who loses his reason when circumstances separate him from the girl he loves. His reason is restored when she visits him. The beginning of the story is slow and vague. The substance of it is artificial and unnatural.

THE MAGIC OF MOTIVE POWER (Selig).—This is a two-reel educational, showing the evolution of modes of travel by water and by land from the time of Columbus and the Indians to the present day. Some of the scenes have been cut from dramatic pictures. A fuller review will be found in "The Motion Picture Educator."

THE GHOST OF THE DESERT (Kalem).—The last of the "American Girl" series. Marin Sais wears the beautiful gown in which she appears in the illustration accompanying the review elsewhere in this issue. She also does some fine riding. She discovers a recluse who, twenty years before, bribed the then sheriff to let him go, accounting for his disappearance by a fake grave in the desert. The culprit is captured, Madge announces her engagement to Larry and leaves town in a shower of rice.

THE BOOT AND THE LOOT (Kalem).—A Ham and Bud comedy. Ham sells a trolley car to an Italian and takes his bootblack stand in exchange. He becomes so embarrassed at the sight of the ankles of a young woman patron, that he takes off the shoe and sock of the man he is attending to and blacks his foot. The reel ends with a chase and everyone winds up in a culvert. This is an amusing reel. Another good feature is the runaway trolley car after the Italian takes possession of it.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE (Kalem).—A two-reel episode in the "Further Adventures of Stingaree" series. Stingaree loses to a gambler who uses loaded dice. He gets even by holding up the stage on which the gambler is a passenger, makes him restore the money he has won by the same deceitful means from a young man, and arranges the marriage of the young man to the girl he is prevented from marrying by the debt on the homestead. Edythe Sterling is in this picture. Howie is played by a new actor in the part, Hal Clements, who appeared in the first of the present series as Howie.

A DOUBLE DECEPTION (Kalem).—Another two-reel eposide in the new Stingaree series. Stingaree changes clothes with a traveler and impersonates him as the new bank clerk. Edythe Sterling is the banker's daughter, who is very anxious to meet Stingaree. She meets both Stingaree and the man who is wearing Stingaree's clothes. Howie is played by Hal Clements.

A LAUNDRY MIX-UP (Ray).—This is a pointless comedy. Ray is an Irish bricklayer. When his union strikes, he buys a Chinese laundry. He cannot read the laundry tickets, so he gives the customers any package. When they come back to object, he gives them each two packages. He is so attached to his violin that he takes it with him to the laundry and tries to play the Chinese price-list.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

THE LITTLE AMERICAN, July 2.—The best picture of Mary Pickford's career, this six-reel drama is full of thrill and surprise production. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Butterfly Pictures.

MAN AND BEAST, June 25.—A five-reel number, written by Reed Heustis and produced by Henry McRae. The story is laid in the South African veldt and introduces many animal performers, including lions, leopards, sheep, pigs, an elephant and a chimpanzee. The plot is entertaining and contains many exciting moments. Trouble begins between two families over water shortage, there being but one fresh pool which does not dry up during the drought. Struggles with wild beasts, a fight with natives and other incidents of an adventurous type are pictured. The number holds the interest well throughout. In the cast are Eileen Sedgwick, Park Jones, L. M. Wells, Harry Clifton and others.

Bluebird Photoplays Corporation

THE CAR OF CHANCE (Bluebird), July 9.—This five-reel picture has a fair story but develops slowly. Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon are the stars. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

HIS FINAL BLOWOUT, June 25.—A sure enough lively comic film is "His Final Blowout," with Hank Mann and it has a number of things in it that this reviewer has never seen before. Of this we can be sure that it will put no one to sleep and that any audience will find plenty of good laughter in it. A good one to book.

PATSY (July 1.—A five reel picture with June Caprice in the leading role. She attempts to draw an ingenuous heroine with little success. The picture drags in places noticeably and has much unconvincing, thin action. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

Greater Vitagraph.

THE MESSAGE OF THE MOUSE (Vitagraph), July 9.—A six-reel photoplay written by George R. and Lillian Chester. There is much good entertainment in the picture. Anita Stewart is the star. A longer review is printed in this issue.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

CHRIS AND THE WONDERFUL LAMP (Conquest).—This is the four-reel feature on the first Conquest program. Other pictures on this program are: "The Luck of Roaring Camp," from Bret Harte's story, which, with "Skylarking on Skiis," makes two reels; and "He Couldn't Get Up in the Morning," a 700-foot comedy with "Captains of Tomorrow," showing the life at West Point, to fill out the reel. This program is reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

A PLACE IN THE SUN (Essanay), July 4.—A twenty-five minute episode in the "Do Children Count?" series. Little Mary McAlister's father is out of work and her mother and two little brothers are in want. Little Mary finds a wallet, buys what the family needs, is arrested for the theft of the wallet, but is discharged by the judge in the juvenile court. So far this is the best of the series for children. Of course it will interest adults. The bull pup deserves mention with the cast.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

LADY BARNACLE (Metro), June 4.—Viola Dana does excellent work in this five-reel screen version of Edgar Franklin's amusing novel. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

THE KISSING BUTTERFLY (La Salle), July 17.—A boarding school story, which is rather amusing in which the belle of the school wagers that she can make the professor of biology kiss her before a certain date. In accomplishing this some funny scenes take place in which the professor is found in the young ladies' dormitory and tries to disguise himself as a woman.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE CRUSHING WALLS, Week of July 15.—The second number of "The Fatal Ring," the new Pathe serial, featuring Pearl White, shows the heroine, and Tom Carleton, caught in a room with closing walls and are being crushed almost to death at the finish of the second reel. The action is brisk all through the number.

NIPPON'S NATURAL GLORIES (International), July 8.—A split reel, combining scenic with a Katzenjammer Kids animated cartoon. The scenic shows views in several Japanese villages; temples, parks, etc., and is interesting and instructive. An especially funny cartoon is seen on the last half of the reel. This time Der Captain, with the help of the Kids, discovers the North Pole.

THE LAST OF THE CARNABYS (Astra), July 22.—Gladys Hulette is featured in this five-reel drama. The picture is a good program offering. William Parke directed and William Parke, Jr., plays opposite Miss Hulette. The story tells of a girl who fights to uphold the traditions of her family. She takes blame for a murder that she did not commit. Her role is a quite appealing one. A longer review is printed in the review columns.

BORROWED IDENTITY (Astra), July 22.—Third two-reel episode of "The Fatal Ring" serial. Exciting fight scenes on board a yacht add interest to the story told in the film. The number increases the mystery of the story, and Pearl and Knox believe that they have the diamond and the setting. The close of the episode shows, however, that Carslake has the real stone.

A RECKLESS INDISCRETION (Balboa), July 22.—Eleventh episode of "The Neglected Wife" serial. The number deals with the theft of Kennedy's letters from Margaret Warner's apartment. Several fairly spectacular scenes show a fire, and excitement on the parts of the crowds when Kennedy is nominated. The Veiled Woman injects her presence with more mysterious effect in this number.

SOUTHEASTERN TEXAS (Combitone), July 22.—An entertaining industrial-educational reel. The film shows scenes of the Sabine Kennels, where fox terriers are bred; the oil fields and residences of Beaumont; the city of Orange—a Gulf port, and the lumber mills and shipbuilding that are its chief industries.

Selznick Pictures.

THE LONE WOLF, July.—The Herbert Brenon production of Louis Joseph Vance's novel makes a thrilling eight-reel photodrama. Bert Lytell and Hazel Dawn are the stars. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE FLAME OF THE YUKON (Triangle).—A big and strong story of the primitive passions and struggles in Alaskan goldfields, with a role of unusual power for Dorothy Dalton which she plays with exceptional ability. A seven-reel melodrama of high suspense.

TIME LOCKS AND DIAMONDS (Triangle).—The story of a reformed thief who leaves the security of wealth and established position to turn one more trick in order to save a former pal. Sensational and well acted by William Desmond in the lead.

DANGERS OF A BRIDE (Keystone).—An amusing farce with some incidents closely approaching melodrama. Much that is new along the popular Keystone lines.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 79 (Universal), July 4.—Servians leaving United States for the front, Junior Police in New York City, opening of municipal piers in Chicago and various other features of interest are included in this number.

THE FIGHT (Universal Special), July 23.—No. 4 of "The Gray Ghost" series. This number deals largely with the efforts of the Gray Ghost and his criminal band to waylay the Englishman Wade, in order to obtain the costly necklace. The character of Morn Light is revealed more fully; she tries to assist Wade in escaping the gang. Jean also begins to take a hand, collaborating with the police in an effort to save his master. None of the episodes are very exciting in this number, but are designed to carry the plot forward.

THE SIGN OF THE CUCUMBER (L-KO), Week of July 23.—A two-reel character comedy of the burlesque type. This deals with the efforts of Red Nose Pete and his pal, who is a double of the sheriff, to bunco a rural community. The characters are of the "rube" type and the humor at no time becomes very pronounced. Perhaps the best scenes are toward the close, where there is a chase on horseback and a burro ride in midair. This is just a fair subject.

A DARK DEED (Nestor), Week of July 18.—A comedy number, by Jack Cunningham, featuring Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Edith Roberts. Lee attires himself as a Hindu Swami at Eddie's request, and entertains a party of studio young ladies. Both young men are arrested as fakers, but escape and give the police a chase. The number makes quite a pleasing subject of the lighter type.

SURF SCANDAL (L-KO), Week of July 18.—A two-reel broad comedy depicting the troubles of a very strong couple. The janitor lives at the bottom of the swimming pool. His exits and entrances are very funny. When wife quarrels with husband because she wants to drive the comedy auto, she tears it apart bit by bit. The second part shows them at an outing at the seashore. This ends with a pie-throwing episode which is somewhat overdone.

THE WEB (Star Featurette). Week of July 18.—A two-reel subject, by Katherine Kingsbury and Harvey Gates, featuring Cleo Madison, Jack Nelson, Gretchen Lederer and George Pearce. The story concerns two men and a woman who are jewel thieves in polite society. They rob a house, but Gentleman Joe stumbles and is robbed of the jewels by another. This leads to complications and the general reform of all the crooks. This latter feature has been done so frequently that it has almost lost the punch. The cast and settings are pleasing, the story very conventional, but well acted.

HE HAD 'EM BUFFALOED (Joker), Week of July 18.—A comedy number, by C. B. Hoadley, featuring Milburn Moranti, William Franey, Lillian Peacock and Zasu Pitts. Franey gets a number of laughs in his representation of an itinerant fiddler, who invades a Western town and is shot up by the inhabitants. He retrieves his supposed cowardice by bringing in two stage holdups. The number contains some good laughs.

ONE BRIDE TOO MANY (Victor), Week of July 16.—A two-reel comedy subject, featuring Matt Moore, Jane Gail, Margaret McRae and others. This is an amusing offering of the broadly farcical type. The rich young man rents his apartments to a girl and her father. He is to be wed next day, but acquires a jag that night at a bachelor dinner and goes back to his apartments, enters his own room and finds the bed occupied by the daughter. The angry father insists on his marrying the daughter, so next day at the church he has two brides, but all is finally adjusted. This plot is breezy, but credit must be given the actors for keeping it really bright and funny.

SIX SHOOTER JUSTICE (Gold Seal), Week of July 16.—A three-reel number, by T. Shelly Sutton, featuring Harry Carey, William Gettinger and Claire Du Bray. This tells of a gambler who leads a prospector and his daughter into the desert and loses them. Water gives out and the father perishes after drinking of a poisoned spring. The hero later pits his wits against the gambler and saves the girl from an unhappy fate. This is picturesque in settings, though conventional in plot and rather drawn out. The story might have been told in two reels, but is quite entertaining as it stands.

SOME NURSE (Joker), Week of July 16.—A domestic comedy by Jack Cunningham, featuring Gale Henry and Milton Sims. When the visiting uncle comes the husband pretends his wife is a nurse and she cures the old man of his gout. Some amusing incidents occur and Gale Henry proves that she is not always "the ugliest woman in the world," as her press agent declares. Her transformation scene is quite surprising to some observers.

World Pictures.

THE BEAUTIFUL ADVENTURESS (Peerless), July 16.—Kitty Gordon is the star of this five-reel photoplay which tells a story of the home and the stage. It is dramatic and has been well produced. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

WHEN TRUE LOVE DAWNS (Brady-International), July.—The beautiful Susan Grandaise is the star of this French made photoplay directed by Louis Marcanton. The picture is finely acted and produced. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Kalem to Make "Yankee Musketeers"

Theme of Serial of Fifteen Episodes Suggested by Quartet Immortalized by Dumas.

THE striking title which Kalem has chosen for its new serial of fifteen two-part episodes written by Robert Welles Ritchie is "The Yankee Musketeers." In making this announcement Kalem gives out some interesting facts regarding its method of feeling the public pulse.

"Exhibitors and the public have come to regard us as 'The House of Series,'" said William Wright of the Kalem Company, "because we have specialized on this style of production. We aim to make each series better than its predecessor, and as we recently presented 'The Further Adventures of Stingaree' and 'The American Girl' we realized that extraordinary steps would be necessary to keep the pace.

"Frequently a series is based upon a timely topic. Such a theme, when dramatically developed, has many advantages—but at best there is nothing new under the sun, according to the ancient wise man. We believe, however, that in our new serial we have reduced to a science the perplexing problem of 'giving them what they want.'

"Several months ago Phil Lang, our editor and production manager, communicated with the public libraries in fifty cities, putting this query: 'For which of the standard works of literature do you have the most frequent call?' Naturally there was a variety of replies, but the majority answered 'The Three Musketeers,' by Dumas. Although the public taste constantly is changing, it appears that readers young and old are still thrilled by the whirlwind adventures of the trio of Frenchmen whose prototypes today are performing amazing deeds of valor and resource.

"With 'Yankee' on every tongue today," continued Mr. Wright, "and every red-blooded American looking to our youth to vanquish humanity's foes, how striking, we figured, will be the adventures of 'Yankee Musketeers,' who, embodying the characteristics of old musketeers, bring to the characters all that goes to make up the true American of today.

"Mr. Lang immediately got in touch with Robert Welles Ritchie, the author who has written several of our series, and they worked out the new serial idea. Mr. Ritchie has now nearly completed his work.

"The cast is being selected and will be announced with the name of the director in the near future. The stories are not strictly military, although many of the big issues of the day, incident to the war, figure in the plots. Much of the action is laid in the new West. The Yankee Musketeers are three distinct American types and, of course, are the champions of a woman—as were Dumas' musketeers on many occasions. Each episode will be a complete story and adventure—as in our former series—but the whole will be a serial in which the interest is cumulative, leading to tremendous situations in the final chapters."

LOIS WEBER TO FILM "K."

Upon completion of "The Whim," which is now nearing its final scenes, Lois Weber will begin a screen version of Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel "K" which created a big impression when published a season or two ago. This will be the second of the Lois Weber productions released under the new arrangement with Universal, film rights to the story having been secured from Mrs. Rinehart during the past week.

Herself one of the most popular authors now writing English, Mrs. Rinehart paid a generous and spontaneous tribute to Lois Weber when closing the deal for the presentation of "K" in motion pictures.

"I have refused other offers for 'K,'" she said, "because I have been loath to see my pet novel experimented with by companies that might wish to rework the story, according to their own notions. But when I learned that Lois Weber wishes to put it on the screen, I just shouted with joy, because I knew that 'K' would receive the most artistic and truthful presentation possible at her hands."

Some State Rights History

By Joseph F. Lee.

IN my humble opinion the Champion Prize Fight Pictures were the first films to be offered the public on the state rights, or territorial, basis. Pathe Frere's hand-colored Passion Play preceded the fight pictures and, I believe, established the practice of producing pictures of greater length than one reel. The latter pictures, however, were not sold on the territorial rights basis. These two pictures soon were followed by "Buffalo Bill's Wild West," produced by Pliny Craft, which was sold on the state rights plan. This picture was looked upon as a novelty in those days and, if I remember rightly, the length was about three thousand or thirty-five hundred feet. Many of the exchange men were afraid to purchase this picture because of its "extreme" length, and a class of men new to the picture game stepped into the field and exploited it.

I am almost certain that this was the first feature to carry a line of special lithographs, and the line was looked upon in amazement in those days. I think that the picture had five different lines of paper. That it was a success is well remembered, even by some of the houses that were at the time afraid to run independent films. The strenuous opposition of the so-called Motion Picture Trust did not stop these films from being a success both to the buyers and to the producers. This proved that the public was eager for pictures of greater length than those offered on the regular programs. "Cheyenne Days," "The Roundup," "Temptations of a Great City," "Dante's Inferno," "Homer's Odyssey," "Quo Vadis," each growing in length and improving in quality and merit, followed.

Joseph F. Lee.

Paul Rainey's African Hunt pictures were the first pictures that I remember that were exhibited at the top price of one dollar. To Blanche Walsh, deceased, belongs the honor of being the first American star from the legitimate stage to appear on the screen in an American - produced feature. She appeared in a five-reel feature adapted for the screen from Tolstoi's famous story, "Resurrection." Miss Walsh's success started the star craze. Producers claimed that the star fad would be short-lived, like roller skating and other novelties, but it continued to grow very rapidly. Many stars at first scoffed at the idea of appearing in motion pictures, but few of them could stand the temptation of the large salaries offered by producers of the silent drama, and today those who have not been seen on the screen can be counted on the fingers of one hand.

W. N. Selig produced "The Spoilers," the first smashing big feature produced, and on which a large amount of money was spent for production. William Farnum was the featured player and one of the sensations of that feature was the then unequalled man-to-man fight that was screened.

"Quo Vadis," "Cabiria" and other European features followed "The Spoilers." About this time managers of legitimate theaters in the smaller cities who had been offering New York successes with mediocre casts, charging Broadway prices for these attractions, felt a considerable drop in their receipts. Soon they began to drop the road companies and to book in their place feature pictures. The feature made such an inroad into the theatrical attractions that companies playing one-night stands and offering mediocre casts became unprofitable.

The buyer of state rights features can properly be called a specialist. Instead of hoping to realize his profits by selling a quantity of films at the same time, he gives his entire time to the exploitation of one feature. This seems to be the only method that can be employed in successfully handling those features which are too big to be handled by the regular program method. One of the difficulties that stood in the way of the buyer of state rights, or the investment of large sums in one feature film, was the short runs and bookings of these pictures. But does it not seem plausible that if a feature has merit it will do more business the third day than it did the first? The claim that mouth-to-mouth advertising has the greatest value of all advertising was clearly demonstrated in the success of "The Birth of a Nation." This feature remained in a theater in New York for more than a year. Runs of a week were increased to runs of a month. Runs of a month were increased to runs of three months. Even the small towns, where the exhibitors claimed that it would be impossible for any film to run more than one day, this feature ran a week to hitherto unheard of business. And this same feature was booked again and again at theaters throughout the country.

Much has been said about the scale of prices to be charged for feature films. Of course, that is purely a matter of opinion I firmly believe that "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" were actually worth the prices charged for them. On the other hand, someone has given the motion picture the classification, "the poor man's opera." Doesn't it owe its success to its large amount of amusement value for a small admission price? One of the ways that this might be overcome is to scale the prices of the theater according to the value of the feature. Another way is to give a greater number of shows during the day at a lesser price of admission. I am not aiming at the regular picture theater with its fixed price of admission, but to the theater playing the large feature for the first time. Did not "Traffic in Souls" turn in some wonderful receipts at an admission price of 25 cents, and have not some features that were offered to the public at from 50 cents to $2 turn in some woefully small receipts? On the other hand, features running at 25 and 50 cents, and giving a greater number of shows a day rely upon the volume of their business to get receipts. Would not Mr. Public be better satisfied if he feels that he has seen a $2 show for 25 cents than if he feels that he has paid $2 to see a 25-cent show?

State rights buyers rely on and are greatly influenced by the repeating value of the features. In this respect I think that "Tillie's Punctured Romance" is the best picture produced. I know some theaters which have booked this feature as many as eight times.

To use the "now-prohibited-at-banquet-phrase," some still believe that the state rights business is only in its infancy. But with the regular program manufacturers now allowing the exhibitors to market or play what he desires to run; with a number of big state rights features of merit ready for the market; with other big features ready to be released in the fall; with the entrance of showmen who once scorned this branch of the industry into the field, using their brains, ability, experience and money to exhibit feature attractions—men like Rothapfel, Patch and Clune making history by their wonderful staging of super features—it is my opinion that this year will be a banner one for the buyer, exhibitor and distributor of state rights pictures.

SHERMAN BUYS "LAND OF RISING SUN."

Announcement is made by Dwight Macdonald, general manager of the America-Japan Pictures Co., 15 William Street. New York, that the rights of their serial film-trip, "The Land of the Rising Sun," have been sold for the United States and Canada to Harry Sherman, 218 West Forty-second Street. The rights for the rest of the world are retained under Mr. Macdonald's control, and will be disposed of by him to foreign buyers.

"The Land of the Rising Sun" was a success at the Rialto Theater, New York, where it was shown serially. There are now ten distinct titles in the series, each of which has lithographs, and all sorts of publicity matter to make it independently bookable, if necessary.

As re-edited, the picture can be booked either as a ten-week serial, of one reel weekly; as a five-week serial, in two-reel episodes, or as a complete production. A big advertising campaign has been prepared and will be taken over by Mr. Sherman, who will offer the serial to state rights buyers.

The rights to China, Japan and Korea have been sold to the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

Edward Nelson Keen Executive

ANNOUNCEMENT was made some time ago of the change of officers in the Sherman-Elliott Company of Minneapolis, which is handling William N. Selig's masterpiece, "The Crisis," a picturization of Winston Churchill's novel of the same name. Edward Nelson, the new president, is another attorney to enter the motion picture field. Mr. Nelson has made a thorough and careful study of the motion picture business and has had practical experience with the buying and marketing of feature films. He is a live wire in every sense of the word, and since he assumed the exectiuve reins of the Sherman-Elliott Company, unusual prosperity has resulted.

Edward Nelson.

David H. Beecher, the vice-president of Sherman-Elliott, Inc., is an investment banker and is heavily interested in many North Dakota banks. F. H. Peterson, the treasurer, is president of the Union State Bank of Minneapolis. Both of the latter named men have been interested in some of the great film productions of the past few years.

Last fall the Sherman-Elliott Company purchased from the Selig Polyscope Company the rights for the United States and Canada to "The Crisis." To date all the United States territory east of the Mississippi has been disposed of, including Missouri, California, Arizona and Nevada, together with Canadian rights.

Some of the rich Middle-Western territories are still open and interested buyers should communicate with Mr. Nelson, president of the company, 854 McKnight Building, Minneapolis. Long and successful runs of this film have taken place in many of the larger cities of the country and the play has proven itself a great box office attraction. Many requests for bookings in unsold territory are on file at the company's office.

"DEMOCRACY" IDEA AIDS "ROBESPIERRE."

Plans are in process of execution by the Export and Import Company on behalf of their spectacular seven-reel feature, "Robespierre," a drama of the French Revolution. The production was shown to the representatives of several French societies and suggestions were made which materially strengthens the value of the picture.

It was pointed out that the bearing of the French Revolution on the momentous events of the present day force themselves prominently on the spectator's mind, and Ben Blumenthal has decided to add to the title a subheading designating "Robespierre" as "the Birth of Democracy." It has been settled that this shall be an auxiliary caption which will appear on all the lithographs and other advertising matter.

The campaign now being conducted from the offices of the Export and Import Company is reaching all the French centers in the United States and Canada, as well as educational bodies whose work pertains to the history of France. The names of these organizations and the correspondence will be turned over to the buyers in the respective territories.

RUTH MAC TAMMANY STAR IN "ALMA."

Ruth Mac Tammany, the star of "Alma, Where Do You Live?" is only in pictures because the war stepped in and spoiled her foreign operatic career. She was singing in Milan, Italy, when it broke out, and though she persisted in Europe for two years, she finally had to get back to America, after having been twice arrested as a spy.

In "Alma" she has found a part of great opportunity—and in it she displays varied accomplishments which, added to her beauty and splendid dramatic power, assure her triumph in the film field. She is the star of the Newfields Producing Corporation, who have now entered the state rights field, and will present her in six productions a year.

"WARFARE OF THE FLESH" SOLD FOR SOUTH.

D. P. Davis and James W. Edmondson, of the All Star Features Company, Jacksonville, has secured rights for virtually the entire South to Edward Warren's production, "The Warfare of the Flesh."

CIVILIZATION-PIONEER GETS TWO BIG FILMS.

The Civilization-Pioneer Film Corporation, of 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, has secured the New York rights to the Williamson Brothers' "The Submarine Eye" and also to the Fairmount Film Corporation's "Hate." Nathan Hirsch, president of the Civilization-Pioneer Corporation, represented his firm in both deals. The former was negotiated with the Williamsons and the latter with Gus Mohme, representing Fairmount. In addition to the two features just acquired the Civilization-Pioneer Corporation controls New York rights to "Redemption," the Evelyn Nesbit feature, and "Her Condoned Sin."

The Civilization-Pioneer corporation announces that it is in the market for big features for New York. Its officers, in addition to Mr. Hirsch, are Morris Rose, vice-president, and Louis Haas, secretary and treasurer.

TERRY HUMAN INTEREST REEL BOOKING BIG.

Reports from exchanges throughout the country handling the Terry Human Interest Reel are indicative of a prosperous future for this type of film. The series of pictures has been booked in some of the biggest theaters in the country not as "fillers," but as "features." The Short Features Exchange, distributors of the Terry films in the New York territory, reports that it has booked the Strand theater for the entire series.

Sidney B. Lust, of Sidney B. Lust, Inc., who is the distributor of the Terry Human Interest Reel in Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia and North Carolina, writes that he has been able to get the initial release of this series for a run in one of Washington's finest houses—Moore's Gardens. Mr. Lust continues to say in his letter to the exchange that he has also been able to secure for the premier showing in Baltimore a week's run at the Parkway theater. Many other reports have come in from the various exchanges, and they are just as enthusiastic about the pictures.

"IVAN THE TERRIBLE" READY.

The Export and Import Company, whose Russian production, "Ivan the Terrible," has been in preparation for several weeks, is now about ready with the finished product. At present the production can be seen in its final and finished form, with one of the most elaborate sets of pictorial titles ever devised for a production.

Ben Blumenthal wants to emphasize that "Ivan the Terrible" is an original production based on Raoul Gunsborg's opera of that title, which was produced before the royal court in Petrograd. At that time it was the cause of no little comment among the newspapers in Russia that in the person of Vladmir, the monk, there was a strong resemblance to the identity of Rasputin, the now notoriously powerfuly mystery of Nicholas' reign. In "Ivan the Terrible," however, the monk plays a part creditable to the cloth he wears. The Export and Import Company is preparing an advertising layout on "Ivan the Terrible" which includes twenty-four-sheet posters and two-color heralds, as well as large photo sets of a new and striking design.

PREPAREDNESS FOR THE EXHIBITOR.

While the supply business in certain parts of the country has suffered to a certain extent, due to the war scare, United Service stations report increased orders all along the line. It should be the duty of every exhibitor to have his motion picture apparatus and theater equipment carefully examined by someone competent to advise and suggest such changes or replacements as may be necessary. The managers of the United Service stations, located in the principal cities of the United States, have volunteered their services to advise exhibitors and assist them in getting their mechanisms ready for the big war-time trade, which is sure to come.

FOUR-SQUARE OFFICE FOR ST. LOUIS.

Offices for the distribution of the M. H. Hoffman productions over a wide territory embracing Missouri, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska, have been established in St. Louis. S. J. Baker will have charge of the new exchange, which is located at 301 Empress Theater Building, Grand Avenue and Olive street.

Mr. Baker says that only the bigger and better class of state rights productions will be handled. Mr. Baker is well known to the trade in the middle west territory. He came to St. Louis two years ago to manage the Wm. Fox offices, and left Fox to take the Bluebird exchange shortly after it was established a year ago last January. In each connection Baker made a fine record for courtesy, efficiency and the ability of using clever advertising stunts for the pictures he exploited.

"REDEMPTION" SUMMER DRAWING CARD.

"Redemption," with Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, is proving a summer drawing card, according to the announcements of the picture's sponsors. It is said to be playing to big business in every theater where shown, even at unusual prices for a photoplay attraction. From the time that it stayed five weeks at the George M. Cohan Theater in New York, when only scheduled for two, until the present, when it is doing well in Newark, Chicago, New York and various other cities, it has never failed as an attraction, it is reported.

UNUSUAL METHODS USED BY SENG.

An unusual manner of distribution of a states right product has been in operation since Frank J. Seng started to sell the territories on "Parentage." While requests for territory have been pouring in by the wholesale, due in large part to the unanimous opinion of all of the trade paper reviewers on "Parentage," Mr. Seng has not negotiated with any states right buyer and does not intend to until after the showings at the Rialto and the Colonial, both of which opened on Monday of this week.

Many buyers have commented on the unusualness of this procedure, but Mr. Seng believes that countless projection room showings never impress and never find the states right buyer in a receptive mood.

The psychological fact of having an audience see the picture, noting how it reaches other people, of the effect of the picture on them, of watching how the dramatic moments register, all make the state rights buyer realize more effectively than words just how the picture will be received when he shows it.

Immediately after the showings at the Rialto and the Colonial in Chicago, when it is hoped that all of the buyers will have had an opportunity of seeing "Parentage" in the proper atmosphere, Mr. Seng will open negotiations with those state rights buyers who have called on him and those who have written to him, giving preference in their order of receipt.

Mr. Seng is expected in New York the early part of this week from Chicago, where he has been actively engaged in co-operating with the Colonial theater for the showing during convention week.

CAPABLE CAST IN "THE CURSE OF EVE."

The Corona Cinema Company, producers of "The Curse of Eve," in stating their policy of production, have lined up with those other motion picture producers who have come out in favor of the system of making the story, with an all-star cast, the primary consideration in picture making as opposed to the practice of featuring a single star, and choosing roles to suit the talents of a particular player.

With this aim in mind the cast for "The Curse of Eve," which is the initial production of this company, was chosen with the idea of getting as many first-rate players as possible to play the various roles. The feminine lead in the production is played by Enid Markey, former Triangle leading woman. Miss Markey enacts the role of the modern Eve in the tense drama, which is appropriately introduced by a Biblical prologue. Opposite Miss Markey is Ed Coxen, another well-known player, who appears as the young hero. The heavy man is Jack Standing, one of the celebrated family of actors of that name. Together with these three in the leading roles are Clarissa Selwynne, who appears as the feminine heavy; Eugenie Besserer, Marion Warner, Elsie Greeson, William Quinn, Arthur Allardt, G. Raymond Nye, Jack Lott and George Kuwa, the last-named being a Japanese actor of known ability. It will be observed that nearly all of the players have done commendable work in other productions before "The Curse of Eve."

FOUR CENTURY COMEDIES READY.

President Julius Stern, of Century Comedies, announces that he now has four of the Alice Howell productions ready for state rights buyers. They are "Balloonatics," "Automatics," "Neptune's Naughty Daughter" and "Alice of the Sawdust." In producing these comedies J. G. Blystone gave personal attention to every detail from selecting and preparing the scenario to editing and cutting the completed product.

Every subject makes fun out of a different theme, and in every instance novel methods are employed to get the laughs, while the speed is maintained at top notch. "Alice of the Sawdust" is the newest feature and in this Miss Howell has opportunities for venturesome feats that have never been presented to her before. "Balloonatics" was the first of the series.

Miss Howell's popularity, established as a featured comedienne with other film-brands, is being capitalized by exhibitors in the comedies in which Messrs. Stern and Blystone have established her as a permanent star. Century Comedies have been found to stand the brunt of opposition with male comedians excellently well and state rights buyers are early realizing the fact.

"THE VILLAIN" (King Bee).

Billy West, in "The Villain," the sixth comedy bearing the King Bee trade mark, is assigned a highly contracted role of which he makes the most. He plays the part of a gaily villainous Lothario who, descending upon a peaceful village, makes love to the belle of that Arcadian spot. From this simple situation spring innumerable happenings of both a dramatic and a ludicrous nature. Billy and his confederates actually commandeer a jail which is swept away by a flood. In another part of the picture a new murder is committed in a saw mill. These horrors only serve to accentuate the droll comedy incidents which pervade the offering, in which, besides Billy West, Babe Hardy, Leo White, Bud Ross, others are prominent.

LESSER ENTERPRISE COMPLETED.

Since his promulgation of plans for the launching of a national organization of state rights buyers, Sol L. Lesser has been continually occupied with the development of his project, and it is now authentically announced that the organization will convene in New York City on August 7.

The organization, which is the result of a careful and prolonged study of general conditions, is in a position to purchase the rights to feature productions outright for the United States and Canada, and propositions will be considered at the time of the convention.

Virtually all of the United States and Canada are already covered, and the men identified with the enterprises are men whose keen judgment and financial success in the film industry determine unquestionably their desirability as members of the organization.

A tentative meeting of the organization has been held in San Francisco, attended by those already actively affiliated.

Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, who has been one of the most active workers in the organization work, will return to his Cleveland office from San Francisco the latter part of this month. He will then proceed to New York to attend the convention.

STREIMER TOURING EAST AND MIDDLE WEST.

In order to have fresh data for the National Convention, Moe Streimer, of Klotz and Streimer, Inc., is now on a tour of the Eastern and Middle Western territories and has arranged his itinerary so that he will close his trip at Chicago on July 14.

On his way West Mr. Streimer will pay particular attention to current conditions affecting the exchanges in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit, and in these cities he will investigate both the merchandising angles that effect the producer and the amusement conditions that are of vital importance to the exchange man as well as to the exhibitor.

BERNSTEIN STUDIOS BUSY.

The Isadore Bernstein studios in Los Angeles are at present working on a fourth production called "Justice." The first picture made by this company was entitled "Who Knows?" Following this came "Humility," which Mr. Bernstein had intended to be the first of a series of pictures to be known as the "Seven Cardinal Virtues." The second of this series was completed a few days ago, and is called "Loyalty." A wire from Bernstein, who arrived in Los Angeles this week, says it is a wonderful production, and ought to make a lot of money for state rights buyers. He has now started work on "Justice," with Betty Brice playing the leading role.

Whether Mr. Bernstein will release the series, as first intended, under the "Seven Cardinal Virtues," has not yet been decided. It is possible that each picture will be put on as a separate feature. This would be feasible, inasmuch as each story is complete in itself and carries a message with it which is conveyed in each picture. Then, too, there has been a tendency on the part of some buyers to purchase only certain pictures of the series, and, if the pictures are booked for the entire series, which was the original intention of the producer, he is liable to lose in certain sections where the exhibitors cannot afford the entire seven.

ALLEN PLANNING A CONSOLIDATION.

H. C. Allen, president of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, is planning an important consolidation that will do its own producing on a big scale. This consolidation expects to develop a class of films in addition to the "Motoy Comedies," which are meeting with success, that will be entirely novel; and the method of releasing will be along new lines.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"The Lost Express" New Holmes Serial

Mutual Will Release Signal Corporation's Fifteen-Episode Thriller Early in September.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the Signal Film Corporation, that Helen Holmes and Director J. P. McGowan have just begun work on a new fifteen chapter railroad serial entitled "The Lost Express," which will be released early in September through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation.

The new serial will have as its main theme a deep mystery plot in which an entire express train, loaded with valuable inventions, is lost. It is announced that a tremendous national campaign of advertising in newspapers, trade journals and other media will be used to launch the new serial.

"As for the story unfolded," said President Hutchinson, "I cannot say too much. It is one of the most sensational and yet logical tales conceivable. It is a mystery story of a most fascinating kind. It was written by Frederick B. Bennett. It is, I believe, the 'something different' for which the public has been ever clamoring. It abounds in action, thrills, sensations and mystery. An intimate knowledge of science, chemistry, physics and biology is revealed by the author as the tale progresses. Every chapter of the story has to do with some profound scientific fact which is demonstrated on the screen to the edification, entertainment and delight of all who behold it.

"The Signal Film Corporation is a specialist in serial productions. It has three successes to its credit—'The Girl and the Game,' 'A Lass of the Lumberlands' and 'The Railroad Raiders.' Helen Holmes was featured in them all. J. P. McGowan directed them all. All three of them are acknowledged successes. Both Miss Holmes and Mr. McGowan are known to the public and steadily increasing in popularity. The very fact that 'The Lost Express' is their fourth serial production means that it will benefit by the accumulation of advertising, publicity and popularity scattered over all their previous efforts."

"THE GOLDEN IDIOT" (Essanay).

Trade showing of "The Golden Idiot," which presents Bryant Washburn as a happy-go-lucky wanderer who takes a thousand-to-one chance for a fortune and wins it as well as the love of a beautiful girl, are on at all branch offices of the K-E-S-E. Many of the luxurious homes in Lake Geneva, the lake and surrounding Wisconsin hills provide beautiful settings for the action. Virginia Valli, who enacted the role of Roxana in Mr. Washburn's latest production, "Filling His Own Shoes," appears as his leading woman in "The Golden Idiot." The supporting company includes "Bobby" Bolder, William Brotherhood, Helen Fergusion and others, not to mention "Pod," a three-legged canine actor.

Scene from "The Golden Idiot" (Essanay).

"The Golden Idiot" has a screen time of sixty-seven minutes, approximately. It will be released July 23.

"JACK AND THE BEANSTALK" (Fox).

A person who is likely to be of enormous interest in the near future is a certain giant, who has leaped into fame by reason of his taking a very prominent part in the first of the Fox Kiddie Features, "Jack and the Beanstalk." This man, whose name is Jim Tarver, has the very "big" part in the production of this famous tale for the screen.

Of course he looks to be tremendous among the children, but in any community he would still be immensely prominent, for the tip of his head is eight and one-half feet above the ground, and he is built in proportion. He plays the part of the monster, who eats delicate little people with a great relish, and he plays it well.

Scene from "Jack and the Beanstalk" (Fox).

Nothing can minimize the Giant's terrible appearance when he gathers a child under his arm, and starts off with him across the hill towards his castle, where the eating process takes place.

It may be well imagined that this giant is no simple or easy person to keep in food and to house. Wherever he went special buildings had to be put up for him, and a great bed carried.

In traveling it was necessary to have a special car built for him.

"THE QUEEN OF SPADES" (Russian).

A unique phase of the history of this missionary campaign in America from the youngest republic in the world was the sanction given by the Czar to permit the great actors and actresses of Moscow to appear in the productions of the Russian Art Film Corporation, and then in the overturn of the government to the Russian people the added sanction came with a whole-heartedness that knew the immense good the showing of Russian art in America would do for the new republic.

"The Queen of Spades" will be one of the first pictures which will be shortly released by the Russian, and will be followed by others from the works of Tolstoy, Sienkiewicz, Ostrovsky, Andreef, Turgenieff, Dostoevsky and Pushkin.

STRONG TO SUPPORT LOIS MEREDITH.

Back in Chicago, some years ago, playing with the Marlowe stock company, Eugene Strong, as leading man for that combination, played 104 consecutive weeks. This in itself was a record for any stock organization. Mr. Strong has just finished a seven-reel feature to be shortly released by Metro. Mr. Strong now has accepted a contract from Lois Meredith Pictures, Inc., which calls for his services to play opposite Lois Meredith in seven-reel productions to be released through Superlative Pictures Corporation.

"Girls You Know"

James Montgomery Flagg Creates a New Series of Single-Reel Comedies.

THE first two releases of a comedy series to be known as "Girls You Know," by James Montgomery Flagg, produced by Town and Country Films, Inc., are completed. Pretty girls, humorous situations and titles in satire make these comedies something different from anything else that has been produced.

The first is the story of "The Screen Fan," the typical small town girl who is camera-struck. Her experiences as an extra and her dream as a film star make a story of honest fun. The second, the story of "The Vacation Girl," is a humorous character study of the business girl who eats, sleeps and talks vacation from April 1 until her week is over. The next in line will be "The Romantic Girl," "The Blase Miss" and "The Patriotic Girl." Each production is a humorous story of a different type of American girl. A different pretty girl is starred in each picture, a type for each story.

Mr. Flagg's national reputation as an illustrator and humorous writer prompted him to write this series of comedies. He is personally writing the scenarios, the titles, and making an exceptionally attractive water color poster of the girl in each story, which is to be used for the exhibitor's advertising, one-sheets, etc. James Montgomery Flagg is the newest big writer to enter the motion picture field, but he is known to the American public through his numerous short stories and artistic illustrations and has established himself in their minds as a writer of clean, interesting wit. Evidence of the popularity of Mr. Flagg's posters is that they may be seen on city and country billboards, posts and pillars throughout the country as a puller in the many recruiting stations. These posters have all been the personal donations of Mr. Flagg.

Mr. Flagg is completing scenarios and production plans to cover a series of not less than twenty-five comedies.

UNIVERSAL'S PERSHING PICTURES MAKE HIT.

Universal's big news feature, showing the arrival of General Pershing's advance guard in France, is scoring the greatest hit of any news picture in months. When it was released, Friday, June 29, practically every first run theater in New York demanded a print.

A special showing was given to representatives of the press and several of the daily newspapers carried stories telling of the pictorial scoop put over by Universal.

Enlargements of the reel negatives were ordered as special pictorial features by the biggest dailies in the country. At the same time a print was shipped to the company's branch manager in Washington, and the following day was shown to Government officials in the War and Navy Building, under the supervision of General Weaver. This was the first motion picture ever shown in the offices of the Government's fighting headquarters and was the occasion of considerable official comment. During the projection of the unusual scenes incident to the landing of the first army chief who has ever set foot on the continent of Europe on a mission of warfare many of the high dignities present broke into cheers.

LINCOLN CYCLE NOW "THE CALL TO ARMS."

The Benjamin Chapin "Lincoln Cycle" continues its noteworthy run at the Globe Theater, and has passed its 200th performance. From now on the entire cycle of four features—"My Mother," "My Father," "Myself" and "The Call to Arms"—will be shown under the one title, "The Call to Arms," the other three features retaining their designations, however, as parts of the whole.

"I have long felt it advisable to take this step," said Mr. Chapin, in announcing the name selected for his production. "While 'The Lincoln Cycle' identifies and designates the picture, I have never intended it as a title. What to select as a name for the group of pictures has, however, presented a good deal of a problem. The answer came to me through the stirring national events of the past few weeks. 'The Call to Arms' is the biggest thing in this country today. It is the soul of this picture—not only in its episodes now classed under that title, but all the way through. It may well include all the rest."

MISS MARTIN IN STORY OF HUMBLE LIFE.

"A Kiss for Susie," which has been scheduled for release by Paramount on August 2 with Vivian Martin in the stellar role, is remarkable for its extreme simplicity. The story, which was written by Paul West, centers around such a homely and everyday occurrence as the construction of a building, and the people who play the most important parts in the story are the simple commonplace members of a bricklayer's household. It is a romance such as might occur in any house in any community.

The photoplay was arranged by Harvey Thew and directed by Robert Thornby. Among the cast are Tom Forman, John Burton, Chris Lynton, Jack Nelson and Pauline Perry.

"COUNTRY LANES AND CITY LAIRS" (L-Ko Comedies).

Phil Dunham and Myrtle Sterling will be featured in an August L-Ko, entitled "Country Lanes and City Lairs." Vin Moore directed the piece under the supervision of J. B. Blystone, director general of all L-Kos. The comedy, as its title would suggest, deals with a trip to the city where the untutored country girl is shown the "high spots" in metropolitan life. Like all L-Kos the tempo is high speed from start to ending, with a large company indulging in the two-reel frolic.

Scene from "County Lanes and City Lairs."

"HIGH SPEED" (Butterfly).

The second Butterfly production to be issued on a separate schedule by Universal will be "High Speed," featuring Jack Mulhall and Fritzi Ridgeway, released July 16.

The story deals with the tangled family affairs of a prosperous and straight-from-the-shoulder pork-packer who tries to live like a regular American, despite the efforts of his ambitious wife to foist a titled son-in-law upon him. His daughter, Susan, played by Fritzi Ridgeway, has been pretty well spoiled by a course at a high-priced finishing school, where she has gained very little knowledge, but a blase view of life and people. This is a sore trial to father. In desperation he introduces "Speed" Cannon, a rapid-fire young business man, to Susan, in hopes that Speed will succeed in taking the girl's attention away from trivialities. Living up to his name, the Mercury-footed one proceeds to lead Susan and her mother a lively chase, and incidentally cures both of them of their shallow notions of existence.

Both Jack Mulhall and Miss Ridgeway succeed in creating telling characterizations. A feature of the production is an attempted elopement between the young folks, aided and abetted by father, which falls through at the last moment because of Susan's lackadaisical methods, much to father's disgust. The story was written by Helen Starr and Leo Sargent, while George Sargent was responsible for the direction.

Essanay Forms Investigation Department

Looking Into Requirements of Exhibitors—President Spoor Reports Increasing Business.

OUR pictures must be salable, is the order which has gone forth at the Essanay plant following an extensive investigation into the requirements of exhibitors in every part of the country. This does not apply so directly from the standpoint of selling to the exhibitor as to the public. Every subject will be selected and produced with the idea of ultimately suiting the audience before which it is shown.

This policy is the outgrowth of the discovery that hundreds of subjects are being produced without the requirements of the distributing and exhibiting ends of the industry being taken into consideration. Accordingly, Mr. Spoor, president of the Essanay company, installed an investigation department. The object of this department was to discover not only what the sales organizations and theater managers desired, but to keep a record of critics' reviews and secure all available information from the public direct.

As soon as this mass of material had been collected and condensed a series of weekly conferences was started in which members of every department were asked to take part. Talks were delivered by exhibitors and members of the distributing companies handling Essanay products, with the result that every member of the large force now employed at this plant knows just what is expected of the department in which he works in order to produce motion pictures which will have the strongest appeal.

The conferences are still being held weekly. Two hours are devoted every Saturday to the discussion of subjects in preparation and those to be selected for future use. In taking a new scenario under advisement it is looked at from every angle. Its possibilities from the standpoint of the plot, photography, cast, advertising and public appeal are thoroughly gone over. If for any reason it does not come up to the standard set, even as regards one detail, it is rejected.

One department is allowed a half hour each week to explain what co-operation from the other divisions is required in order to increase the efficiency and quality of the work it does.

With two or three companies on the floor all of the time, and the Western studio working at top speed, Essanay is as busy as at any time in its history, and President Spoor reports that the releases of the past six months have shown greater returns from the distributing companies than any other subjects in the same length of time.

"A RAG BABY."

"A Rag Baby," the famous farce comedy written by Charles Hoyt and produced by the Selig Polyscope Company, is a K-E-S-E release for Monday, July 9.

The Hoyt two-reel farce comedies so far released by Selig in K-E-S-E have been almost universally praised by the film critics, and it is said that "A Rag Baby" upholds the standard of merit, and is full of originality of funny episodes.

Charles Hoyt's famous plot of American atmosphere is retained, but Director J. A. Richmond has introduced a large number of funny suggestions which bring the story strictly up to date. The all star cast of comedians, including William Fables, James Harris and Amy Dennis, appear in "A Rag Baby."

THREE UNUSUAL SINGLE-REELS FROM GAUMONT.

The first Gaumont release of the week of July 22, through Mutual, is the entertaining single-reel "Tours Around the World" No. 38. It reaches the screen July 24. Prague, Bohemia, is the leading section of this reel. The reel is completed with pictures of the Dauphines, France, that section of southeastern Europe which runs into the Alps.

The second release of the week is Mutual Weekly No. 134, released July 25. This contains news of all the world which can be secured in pictures. Because of its world-wide Gaumont connections pictures are secured for release in America at the earliest possible date.

July 26 Reel Life No. 65 will reach the screen. It shows the new National Sylvan theater at Washington, D. C., the first government-owned theater in America. A dangerous eagle hunt is next pictured. Then follow views of the poultry farm of Mme. Schumann-Heink, and these in turn are succeeded by pictures of children at work in a polytechnic school. There are the customary "Leaves from 'Life'" also.

MARY GARDEN WOULD DO WAR SUBJECT.

Mary Garden, internationally famous operatic prima donna and star of Goldwyn Pictures, having been informed by cable of the Goldwyn offer to the United States Government of its plays and players for the recreational activities of our soldiers in France, has cabled from Paris requesting that the second play be of a patriotic type suitable to inspire the United States soldiers who will later be in France.

It is possible that in the near future a special request to the scenario writers of America will be sent from the Goldwyn executive offices asking for plays of the type Miss Garden suggests.

Brady Stands Squarely on Program

Says It Is Gaining Strength and Momentum Every Minute—Says It Is Insurance to Exhibitor and Public.

I DERIVE considerable amusement," said William A. Brady, director-general of World-Pictures, "from reading a statement that finds its way into print at rather regular intervals to the effect that the program system is slowly but surely dying off and that there is no hope for the future excepting through the specials. But for these, we are assured every month or so, the whole motion picture industry would be cast up on the rocks and dashed to splinters in no time at all.

"As the manufacturing and distributing corporation with which I am connected is the only concern in this country adhering absolutely to the program in principle and action, I suppose its members are in a better position than other persons to know just how the situation stands. I am therefore able to say positively that the program, so far as reflected by the business of World Pictures may be regarded as an indication, is vastly better off than at any time since the first animated photograph was taken.

"Instead of being in a forward state of decomposition, as the disciples of the specials would have us believe, the program is gaining strength and momentum every minute. It is in no spirit of boastfulness whatsoever, but merely as a matter of actual record, that I say the demand for the World Pictures program is enormously greater at this time than ever before.

"This is important not only in the personal sense (for it is but natural that we should be very much gratified at the existence of such a condition for our own sakes) but as justifying our stand for the program in the face of constantly arising opportunities to wildcat for large immediate profits. I have said before now that our principle is not a matter of philanthropy or benevolence, but a plan to build up a structure which will stand the test of time.

"We are out for business that will be here next year and ten years hence, instead of trying to grab everything at once and let the future take care of itself.

"Meanwhile a careful survey of the conditions surrounding the specials will indicate that the time is rapidly approaching when the market must inevitably be glutted. The public, quite obviously, is growing more and more exacting as the promises of the producers increase in glow and emphasis and the number of these productions increases.

"The recurring publications of the impending dissolution of the program really mean nothing. There will always be a healthy, solid demand for dependable pictures, which are an insurance before hand to the exhibitor that he will make a profit and to the public that it will not be disappointed.

"I should like to be as certain of everything in life as I am of the steadily and permanently increasing volume of demand for World-Pictures Brady-Made, which are as true to the program principle as the magnetic needle is to the north pole."

PATHE WAR PICTURES STIR MILWAUKEE.

Through co-operation between Manager Aschman, of Pathe's local office and the Whitehouse theater, Milwaukee, the two-reel special subject, "Our Fighting Forces," created a sensation.

The Whitehouse theater, with a fifty foot front, has the biggest open lobby and the greatest number of lights of any theater in Milwaukee. This afforded a splendid opportunity for display. Manager Aschman got busy and secured from Naval and Military authorities stationed there a display for this lobby which included a two thousand pound torpedo, several rapid fire guns, and the services of naval and marine guards.

In co-operation with Mr. Meister of the theater, Aschman arranged to march the Spanish War Veterans in uniform, headed by their own Drum and Bugle Corps of twenty-four pieces, through the entire house just at the beginning of the picture, and it is impossible to describe the sentiment expressed by an audience which filled the entire seating capacity of two thousand. Street cars and all other traffic were blocked for nearly an hour until special police cleared a passage way.

MISSES LOVE AND BENNETT IN TRIANGLE.

Triangle's long-heralded story of circus life, "The Sawdust Ring," starring Bessie Love, will be released July 15 on the same program with "The Mother Instinct," in which Enid Bennett is starred.

As the little barefooted girl who runs away and joins a circus, Bessie Love has given a portrayal that is said to have more accurately measured her ability than any role in which she has hitherto appeared. The charm of this story by J. V. Jefferson lies in its faithful depiction of younger life.

Enid Bennett will further demonstrate her versatility in the part of a French peasant girl, the daughter of a Brittany fisherman, in "The Mother Instinct." She goes to Paris and finds romance in the Latin Quarter. Her sister Marie, played by Margery Wilson, joins her and the two enjoy the revelries of studio life.

The play was picturized by Lambert Hillyer from the story by Maude Pettus. R. William Neill directed. Among the players are Rowland Lee, Jack Gilbert, Tod Burns, Gertrude Claire and Carl Ullman.

Names Openers for Star Series Plan

Paramount Lists Nine Players and Productions That Will Start Off New Releasing Scheme.

FOLLOWING the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's announcement of the twenty-seven productions to be completed for release by Paramount on the new "Star Series" Selective Booking plan, Paramount issues the titles of the first productions in which each of the stars is to appear when the new plan of distribution is put into effect on August 5. The actual release dates of these several productions have not yet been determined, but the present announcement designates which photoplay has been selected as the first vehicle for each of the several stars under the new arrangement.

For Marguerite Clark's first appearance, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's great comedy, "The Amazons," has been chosen. It was staged under the direction of Joseph Kaufman. Pauline Frederick will star in "The Showdown," an exceptionally powerful story written by Hector Turnbull. Robert G. Vignola directed.

For Billie Burke, Gelett Burgess' "The Mysterious Miss Terry" has been chosen. "Mrs. Raffles' Career" has been selected as the medium for Julian Eltinge's photoplay debut. The story was written by Gelett Burgess and Carolyn Wells.

For Mme. Petrova, the company has selected "The Law of the Land," an adaptation of George Broadhurst's stage success of a few years ago. Maurice Tourneur directed. Vivian Martin will first appear under the direction of Robert Thornby in "Little Miss Optimist." Jack Pickford and Louise Huff will be seen in "The Varmint." This picture was directed by William H. Taylor.

Sessue Hayakawa will first appear as "Hashimura Togo" in an adaptation of Wallace Irwin's inimitable stories of the adventures of the Japanese school boy. This version was especially written for the screen by Mr. Irwin himself. Margaret Loomis is a member of the cast. William C. De Mille directed. Wallace Reid will first appear in "The Hostage," an original story by Beulah Marie Dix

All departments are being conducted on a business-like basis

THRILLS IN MRS. CASTLE'S SUBJECTS.

Thrills and tense dramatic situations mixed with light laugh-touches mark Mrs Vernon Castle's two Pathe features so far completed. One is a Secret Service photoplay directed by George Fitzmaurice with Elliott Dexter, Suzanne Willa and T. Wigney Percival supporting, and the other a murder mystery directed by Frank Crane with a cast composed of Elliott Dexter, Ethel Grey Terry, Frank Sheridan and Helene Chadwick.

A tense and interesting scene in the first named picture occurs when Mrs. Castle and the head of the Secret Service trap the man who has been double-crossing them

Probably the most daring feats yet accomplished by Mrs Castle in making her Pathe features are shown in the second picture to be completed.

Mrs: Castle is now working on her third feature under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, with Antonio Moreno as her leading man, while Frank Crane is busy arranging the details for the fourth of the Pathe-Castle series.

BEN TURPIN IN A "BLACK CAT."

An innovation in the Black Cat series of 25-minute features released through General Film is the appearance of Ben Turpin, comedian, in an out-and-out comedy. All of the Black Cat pictures have been comedy-dramas, but Essanay, the producer, made room for the Turpin comedy in this series because of its splendid fun. Turpin has never appeared to better advantage, is the verdict of General Film, than in this release. It is called "Two Laughs," which is completely a misnomer, by reason of the laughs numbering many, many times that.

A heart-interest comedy-drama that is considered not only timely but which is another innovation in that it features as principals an old man and a little boy is "Seventy and Seven," the Black Cat feature following "Two Laughs" and "A Corner in Smiths." Julien Barton plays Hiram Beatty, an impoverished Grand Army veteran, and Buddie, his little grandson, is interpreted by Ellis Paul.

"Maciste" in a New Production

Unintended Star of "Cabiria" Is to Be Seen in "The Warrior," a Story of Italian Mountains.

THE successor to D'Annunzio's "Cabiria," which is now in its third year of success, is "The Warrior," a new and timely battle story of the Alps, in whch the famous "Cabiria" star "Maciste" makes his reappearance at the Criterion theater Monday, July 16, for an engagement of four weeks.

The story of "The Warrior" was built around actual conditions on the Italian front in the Alps. Two years were spent in its making, and hazards of border warfare in the mountains are shown for the first time.

The popularity of "Maciste," already established throughout the world by his appearance in "Cabiria," is greatly enhanced by the fact that in "The Warrior" he is more than an actor, as he is serving his colors at the front and was performing military duty when the production was being staged.

"The Warrior" is shown in seven episodes and six hundred and ten scenes. A symphony orchestra will be used for its presentation. Harry Raver, who introduced "Cabiria" to America, will sponsor the new production.

"BETTY BE GOOD" (Mutual).

Miss Jackie Saunders is happily placed in her latest offering, "Betty Be Good," released by Mutual July 16. It is a play that permits full display of Miss Saunders' fascinating frolics of the tomboy type. She is supported by Captain Leslie T. Peacocke.

"Betty Be Good" is a Mutual-Horkheimer feature written by Will M. Ritchey, one of the best known scenario writers in the United States, author of "Who Pays?" "Sarello," "The Unseen Hand" and many other screen dramas. The play was directed by Sherwood MacDonald.

Miss Saunders portrays the character of Betty, madcap daughter of Jonathan Browlee, a retired capitalist—a role that suits her admirably because it calls for full display of her prankish tricks and keeps the supporting company in fast action.

A distinguished member of the "Betty Be Good" cast is Arthur Shiely. Mollie McConnell is Mrs. Sarah Lenox, the woman of society.

"SUDDEN JIM."

Triangle announces the release on July 22 of a production of "Sudden Jim," the popular novel and Saturday Evening Post story, in which Charles Ray will appear as star.

It is understood this feature was originally intended for one of the special releases which Triangle planned to make the first of each month, but since the reorganization of the company it has been determined to devote the producers' entire efforts toward making each program feature the equal of any special production.

"Sudden Jim" is by Clarence Buddington Kelland, and is ranked among the five best-sellers of current fiction. The production was directed by Victor L. Schertzinger, who won first place among directors with his initial production, "The Pinch Hitter." The excellent co-operation of star and director has caused the producers to keep them together.

In "Sudden Jim," the star is surrounded by an exceptional cast of players, all of whom have been selected because of particular qualifications for their roles. Sylvia Bremer has the leading feminine part. Joseph J. Dowling has brought to life the whimsical character of the judge, who is the political tyrant of the mill town where Sudden Jim makes his fight for success. Georgie Stone, the Triangle kiddie, is also of the cast. Among other players are Lydia Knott, William Ellingford and Frank Whitsen.

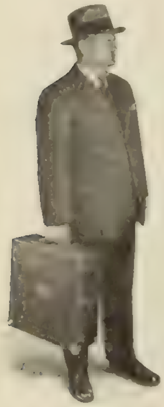
New Portable Projector on Market

It Is Built by the Simplex Photo Products Company and Set Into Small Suitcase.

OUR readers will be interested in a new standard portable motion picture projector, being placed on the market by the Simplex Photo Products Company, Richmond Hill Long Island, N. Y.

This projector, although containing a high grade Geneva movement and claimed by the makers to project an image more steadily than many of the large machines, is built into a small asbestos lined suitcase, measuring 18 by 17¾ by 6¾ inches. The case is covered on the outside with handsome grain leather, and it can be easily carried anywhere.

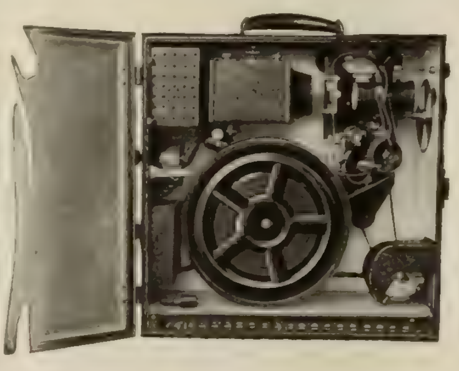


The Precision portable projector accommodates 1000-foot reels of standard motion picture film. It is so constructed that all of the sprockets are accessible from the side and the film may be set in place without any "threading."

The projector is supplied in two models, either hand or motor driven; the price of the hand driven model is $150, and that of the motor driven $175.

An outstanding feature of this projector is its lighting systems. No liquid condensers or light screens of any sort are used, yet the illumination—although exceeding in brightness that given by a 400 watt nitrogen filled lamp—is of such a nature that inflammable film may be exposed for any length of time without any possibility of fire. It is therefore possible to stop the film at any point during projection and hold the image on the screen on the manner of a steropticon slide whenever the operator so wishes.

Although the entire mechanism of the portable projector is permanently built into a suitcase, it is so arranged that all adjusting and regulating is done from the outside of the case without any necessity whatever of opening the door. Once the film is inserted, the door of the case is closed, when the touch of a button on the outside of the case starts the projector, and a slight turn of another button regulates it to any speed desired. The focusing of the lens, the framing of the picture, and all other adjustments are made at will without stopping the projector and without opening the case. Every attachment is conveniently located and can be instantly reached. The projector is supplied with cord and standard socket which can be attached at a moment's notice to the ordinary standard house socket.



A complete illustrated catalog describing the projector fully and illustrating its different features has been published by the manufacturers.

THE LATEST KINKS IN CANNING.

One of the first purposes of the food commission newly appointed by President Wilson is to show the housewives the necessity of conserving. Every bit of food material that is wasted is just that much more food taken from the mouths of not only our men at the front, but of the millions of inhabitants of our allies. With that in mind, the Woman Suffrage Party of New York, as its share of war service is motoring through the farm districts to teach women the scientific preservation of food; and their methods form a highly interesting and important subject to the seventy-sixth release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph.

PICTOGRAPHS GIVE KEY TO BEAUTY.

The subject entitled "Key to Beauty," originally scheduled for the sixty-ninth release of Paramount-Bray Pictographs, has been deferred and will be included in the seventy-sixth release of that popular screen magazine.

This subject is sure to find favor among the gentler sex, for it is an exposition of methods adopted by some of our famous stage beauties in preserving and developing their charms—and these methods can, if milady is ambitious, be used by her in her boudoir to her great advantage.

Paramount's Issues for July

Pauline Frederick and Sessue Hayakawa and Vivian Martin Are the Featured Players.

PAULINE FREDERICK'S latest success, "The Love That Lives" and Vivian Martin and Sessue Hayakawa in "Forbidden Paths" are the two releases Paramount will issue the week of July 9. The former is a Famous Players production, the later comes from the Lasky studio. Surrounding these two features, will be three single reel releases, the seventy-fourth edition of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the "magazine-on-the-screen;" the seventy-fifth of the series of weekly trips around the world, personally conducted by Burton Holmes in which he takes his fellow-travelers "In the High Sierras," and a Black Diamond single reel comedy entitled "Wits and Fits."

. Pauline Frederick's production "The Love That Lives," is a distinct change from anything she has ever done and a novelty in every sense of the word—in that this exquisite actress takes the part of a scrubwoman, and portrays it in a wonderful manner. The story was written by Scudder Middleton and the picture was directed by Robert G. Vignola. The cast includes John Sainpolis, Pat O'Mally, Joseph Carroll, Violet Palmer, Frank Evans and Eldeen Stewart.

Vivian Martin and Sessue Hayakawa have an extremely strong dramatic story in "Forbidden Paths," in which both stars are given an opportunity of displaying their best talents. The story has to do with the great love which a Japanese has for an American girl, and who gives up his life to give her her happiness.

In the seventy-fourth edition of Pictographs there are four interesting subjects dealt with, including "Sports and Pastimes of the American Cowboys," "War Time Economy," "Mechanical Operation of the British Tanks," and another Picto puzzle. While a number of motion pictures have been exhibited recently showing the now famous British tanks, it remains for the Pictographs to give motion picture audiences a first hand glimpse into the actual operation of these remarkable ingenious devices.

Burton Holmes takes his fellow-travelers "In the High Sierras." Mr. Holmes bids you follow him "Westward, Ho," through wonderful scenery, past miles of snowsheds to lovely Tahoe Tavern on Lake Tahoe.

"Wits and Fits" is one of the cleverest Black Diamond comedies that has ever been issued by Paramount. It is filled with exceptionally clever trick scenes which make it particularly attractive as one of the releases for the week of July 9.

"GRAY GHOST" GETS AWAY WITH RUSH.

"The Gray Ghost," Universal's new mystery serial, was successfully presented in various parts of the country outside of Greater New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts, beginning last week. The story gets off with a rush in the first two episodes, "The Bank Mystery" and "The Mysterious Message," with Harry Carter, Priscilla Dean, Emory Johnson, Eddie Polo, Richard La Reno and Gypsy Hart in leading roles.

"The Gray Ghost" will be released in fifteen episodes of two reels each. Based upon a widely read serial novel, "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche, the story was adapted to the screen and dircted by Stuart Paton. The camera work is by Eugene Gaudio.

PATHE-COMBITONE EXPEDITION IN COLORADO.

A. L. Westgard, director of the Pathe-Combitone expedition which is combing the United States for motion picture material out of the ordinary, is now in Colorado, engaged in filming the most interesting scenic and industrial phases of the state. The expedition has now thoroughly covered southern California, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas. With the arrival of summer, therefore, Colonel Westgard has gone into the Rocky Mountains in order to secure his film at the season of the year when the mountains are most beautiful and when, also, many places can be visited which are impassable in winter.

TRAVEL 3,000 MILES IN PRODUCING PICTURE.

Different sections of California and Arizona, entailing three railroad trips from Los Angeles over a total distance of three thousand miles, were covered by Fred J. Balshofer's Yorke-Metro company in producing the Harold Lockwood feature, "Under Handicap." After returning from a long trip through the Arizona cattle country, the Yorke-Metro players engaged a special train, operating over the California end of the line which extends from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City.

CHINESE ACTOR IN "THE JURY OF FATE."

Following his success in "The Great Secret," Metro's master serial, and "The Slacker," Charles Fang, well-known Chinese actor, has been engaged by Director Tod Browning to support Mabel Taliaferro in the forthcoming wonderplay, "The Jury of Fate," adapted for the screen from Finis Fox's story by June Mathis.

Saunders Leads Mutual Week of July 16

"Betty Be Good" the Feature Release—Rounded Out by Thrillers, Comedies, Etc.

JACKIE SAUNDERS, star in a series of successful productions for Mutual release, heads Mutual's schedule for the week of July 16 in "Betty Be Good," a five-reel comedy drama. "Betty Be Good" was produced by E. D. Horkheimer. It marks the return to the screen of Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, veteran motion picture writer and actor. He plays one of the leading roles in the production. "Betty Be Good" is a story of love and politics.

Scene from "Betty Be Good" (Mutual).

"The Mystery of the Counterfeit Tickets," the fifteenth and final chapter of "The Railroad Raiders," Mutual-Signal photonovel, is scheduled for release July 16. Helen Holmes, heroine of the serial, and the secret service force of th K. & W. railway, run down the raiders. Helen's father, convicted for the crimes of the gang, is freed from prison.

There are two comedies on the week's schedule—"Jerry's Star Bout," a one-reel Cub featuring George Ovey, and "The Kissing Butterfly," a one-reel La Salle. "The Kissing Butterfly" is released Tuesday, July 14, and "Jerry's Star Bout" is on the schedule for Thursday, July 19.

"Mutual Tours Around the World," Gaumont's reel of travel, scheduled for release July 17, goes to Avignon, a beautiful and historic city in southeastern France. It shows the ruined palace of Tiberius, takes the motion picture traveler to the mysterious Timbuktu and to a city of the Sudan.

Reel Life, the weekly film magazine, released July 19, initiates the spectator into the mysteries of the construction of the incandescent lamp, shows a novel bicycle race, the raising of cocoanuts, pictures the Boy Scout Signal Corps, and contains animated cartoons from life. Mutual Weekly No. 133 is released July 18 and will contain pictures of the latest news.

"CLEOPATRA" (Fox).

A riot of gorgeousness and Egyptian splendor that outrivals the time of the real Cleopatra is the predominant feature of the William Fox Theda Bara super-picture, "Cleopatra," in which Miss Theda Bara plays the title role of the enchanting Siren of the Nile.

The costumes worn both by Miss Bara and her support throughout the photodrama are creations, especially those of Miss Bara.

No expense has been spared by William Fox in making this great photodrama. The entire world has been combed by Mr. Fox's assistants to embody every accurate historical detail accredited to the time of Cleopatra. Detail, the keynote of an artistic production, has been the point uppermost in the mind of the producer.

"THE SQUAW MAN'S SON" (Paramount, July 26).

"The Squaw Man's Son," an adaptation of the sequel to Edwin Milton Royle's "The Squaw Man," has been scheduled for release by Paramount on July 26. Wallace Reid and Anita King are the co-stars of this exceptional production, which numbers in its cast Dorothy Davenport, Donald Bowles, C. H. Geldert, Frank Lanning, Ernest Joy, Lucien Littlefield, Mabel Van Buren and Raymond Hatton.

It will be remembered that "The Squaw Man," which proved a tremendous success both on the stage and on the screen, told the story of an Englishman of high birth who devoted his life to the American Indian, and married Nat-u-rich, an Indian squaw.

"The Squaw Man's Son" relates the romantic history of their son, Hal.

"WHERE IS MY MOTHER?" (Essanay).

Little Mary McAlister, Essanay's famous child star, appears in one of the most appealing roles of her notable screen career in "Where Is My Mother." It is a short production and a unit of the "Do Children Count?" series. This picture presents a striking problem growing out of the divorce courts—what happens to the children? Carefully avoiding distasteful reference to birth control or sex problems, a point has been driven home which will touch the hearts of every adult, as well as children. The whole has been clothed in a pleasing romance. The production was excellently staged and photographed, and Miss McAlister's support is all that could be desired. "Where Is My Mother?" has a screen time of 25 minutes. The series is being released through the K-E-S-E Service.

"ON-THE-SQUARE GIRL" (Pathe).

What, in the opinion of those who have seen it, is the most strongly dramatic and sumptuously produced feature Mollie King has yet appeared in, is the Pathe Gold Rooster play, "The On-the-Square Girl," to be released July 29. The scenario was written by Ouida Bergere, who has written a number of Pathe successes, and the picture was directed by George Fitzmaurice of the Astra.

A fine cast, composed, in addition to Miss King, of L. Rogers Lytton, Aime Dalmores, Donald Hall and Ernest Lawford, by its splendid acting gives the picture a noteworthy finish and brilliance.

REALISM IN "THE WHIRLPOOL."

If the success of a picture depends upon realism, "The Whirlpool," the forthcoming Metro wonderplay written and directed by Lionel Barrymore, in which Ethel Barrymore is starred, will be a phenomenal success. Mr. Barrymore photographed a fight scene at the Metro studio last week that called for the upsetting of a lighted lamp, the breaking of the globe and chimney of the lamp, and the destruction of two chairs.

The fight is staged between John Martin, played by Reginald Carrington, and Dirk Kanset, portrayed by Frank Leigh. While the scene was being rehearsed and taken seven lamps were smashed and fourteen chairs put out of commission.

"THE CLEAN-UP" (Bluebird).

Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, who have established themselves with exhibitors and their patrons as purveyors of particularly novel and amusing comedies, take their monthly place in the Bluebird program, August 6, to present "The Clean-Up," a comedy-drama, prepared for the screen by Waldemar Young and directed by William Worthington. This is the last Bluebird Mr. Worthington supervised for the Farnum-Vernon combination, Elmer Clifton becoming their director when this work was done.

Mary Talbot, Martha Mattox, Claire McDowell, Mark Fenton, William Human, Clyde Benson and Albert McQuarrie are principals in support of the stars of "The Clean-Up," with unusually large "mobs" assembled in several of the scenes. Sensations will be furnished in the realistic portrayal of an attempted bank robbery, but apart from this element of excitement "The Clean-Up" will run a straight course of comedy-drama to a surprise finish.

SEE THE GIRL AND THE GARTER

Scene from "The Clean-Up" (Bluebird).

Its theme will appeal to citizens of cities and towns where "reform leagues" attempt to control social conditions, the fun of the thing being emphasized in this Bluebird when an advance agent for a theatrical company successfully combats a movement to prevent his show fulfilling its engagement. The manner in which "The Girl and the Garter" frustrated the designs of the reformers constituted the "clean-up" indicated in the title of the comedy.

Five Art Dramas for July

Joe Welsh, Famous Actor, Will Lead Off the Month in "The Peddler."

FIVE productions of merit are promised for release by Art Dramas, Incorporated, during the month of July. The productions are "The Peddler," U. S. Amusement; "Miss Deception," Van Dyke; "When You and I Were Young," Apollo; "The Millstone," Erbograph, and an untitled feature from the U. S. Amusement. "The Peddler" was originally intended to be a special, but the demand from exchanges persuaded the producers to make it a regular program release. This picture will mark Joe Welch's first important screen appearance. This famous actor, who has been in vaudeville and on the legitimate stage for over thirty years, has done practically no photoplay work. Catherine Calvert is chief in support of the star, this being her second picture appearance. In the role of the peddler's son is Sidney Mason. In other roles are Kittens Reichert and Sally Crute. Herbert Blache directed.

The second picture is Van Dyke's "Miss Deception," from the pen of Joseph Franklin Poland. This script gives Jean Sothern an opportunity to portray a role different from anything she has hitherto attempted.

Following comes "When You and I Were Young," from Apollo. Alma Hanlon is featured and Harry Benham is leading man. Robert B. Mantel, Jr., has an important role. The story and scenario are by Frederick Rath.

The Erbograph drama, "The Millstone," follows. It is a picturization of Albert Payson Terhune's story of the same name, and is a narrative of strength and intensity. The fifth production of the month will come from the U. S. Amusement Corporation studios.

AT THE FOX STUDIOS.

JANE and Katherine Lee, William Fox's baby grands, have completed their first starring picture, "Two Little Imps." It will be released on July 8. The film is a regulation five-reel feature and is crammed full of that rougish mischief which has given all film fans who have seen the Lee kids so much pleasure.

June Caprice has begun work on a new picture under the supervision of a new director, Harry Millarde, a well known director. The story is laid in Holland and is a beautifully happy tale of childhood in the land of the dikes. Harry Hilliard plays opposite Miss Caprice. Mr. Millarde succeeds Director John G. Adolfi, who is to direct another famous Fox star.

R. A. Walsh has started a new production for William Fox with Mirian Cooper in the leading role.

"THE WRONG MR. FOX" (Klever).

Victor Moore will release on July 16 his newest single reel comedy, "The Wrong Mr. Fox." It was written by Mr. Moore, and it deals with a funny adventure of an actor and a minister. In this picture Moore gets away from the "family series" for the time being.

Scene from "The Wrong Mr. Fox" (Klever).

The author plays Jimmy Fox, a "not so good" actor who starts out to join a troupe. En route he gets mixed up and is taken for a minister. He has to "pull" the Billy Sunday stuff, and he nearly gets away with it. He would have, if he hadn't forgotten his trousers, for they play a very important part in the end of the story.

The idea of this comedy is distinctly different than anything Moore has yet produced, and the fun that is in it comes out of the funny situations. They keep Moore hopping all the way to the finish, with the result that make it a genuine laugh producer.

GAUMONT SHOWS CAPITAL OF BOHEMIA.

Prague, Bohemia, is likely to become the capital of an independent nation of Bohemians after the war. The Gaumont Company is taking advantage of this fact to show pictures of Prague in "Tours Around the World" No. 38. Prague was the ancient capital of Bohemia, and is rich in historic lore. The architecture has a quaint look to our New World eyes. Exhibitors who show these pictures may be sure that they are offering views which will hold the interest of their patrons with the same effectiveness that rules when a gripping photodrama is on the screen.

HISTORICAL PICTURE COMING.

"The Spirit of Seventy-Six," a ten-reel feature film based upon authentic historical characters will be shown in New York the second week in July as the initial offering of the Grapin Amusement Company, which recently opened offices in the New York Theater building. Incidents in the lives of George Washington, George III, Benjamin Franklin, William Pitt, Hannah Lightfoot, Walter Butler and many others are faithfully portrayed and scenes depicting the warfare during the period of the Revolution ought to be of particular interest just now as a contrast to modern methods. "The Spirit of Seventy-Six," was written by and directed by Robert Goldstein.

FAIRBANKS AT WORK ON "THE OPTIMIST."

With three large automobiles loaded with players Douglas Fairbanks and Director John Emerson started in search of a mountain peak to resemble the Alps. They discovered the object of their quest sixty miles from the Westcoast Artcraft studio. "The Optimist," an original story by Douglas Fairbanks, shows the latter, who is of a roaming disposition, in the Alps, Africa and South Sea Islands. Director Emerson has been fortunate in finding the desired atmosphere in California. The play deals with a theme that comes under the heading of "highbrow," but the treatment is along elemental lines.

ALASKA GIRL IN METRO PLAY.

Dee Dorsey, the young woman who makes her debut on the Metro program in "The Jury of Fate," is the daughter of the librarian of the farthest north public library under the Stars and Stripes. Miss Dorsey was educated in Fairbanks, Alaska. She was graduated from the Fairbanks High School, and then spent a year in the North mining.

Miss Dorsey left Fairbanks six years ago and went to Alabama to finish her education. After four years in the South she came to New York and started her career on the screen as an extra girl. Her ability, her ambition and her beauty soon won her recognition.

JUANITA HANSEN TO SUPPORT WILBUR.

David Horsley has just announced the leading woman for Crane Wilbur, whose features are to be released on Art Dramas program, will be Juanita Hansen. Shirley Huxley has also been added to the cast.

These two players will make their first Art Dramas appearance in a Western drama, which is tentatively called "Devil May Care." Lorimer Johnston has been engaged to direct this and other Wilbur plays.

UNCLE SAM PURCHASES A MINUSA.

The Minusa Cine Products Company is rejoicing over the receipt of an order from the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, for a specially constructed Minusa Gold Fibre screen. This order was placed through Representative J. F. Dusman, of Baltimore.

Uncle Sam purchased a screen with a surface 12 by 16 feet.

THE LEES TOOK THE MONEY.

Jane and Katherine Lee have shown the big stars how to do things. Their latest stunt was walking off with the first prize at the Automobile Fashion Show held on June 23 at the Sheepshead Bay Speedway, Brooklyn, in a snappy eight cylinder touring car. The awards were a blue ribbon for the makers of the car and a $200 Liberty Bond for the Kids.

Gladys Hulette Leads Pathe July 22

Pearl White and Ruth Roland Follow Her in "The Fatal Ring" and "The Neglected Wife."

GLADYS HULETTE, Pearl White and Ruth Roland are the stars appearing in the features of Pathe's bill for the week of July 22. Gladys Hulette is seen in "The Last of the Carnabys," a five-reel Gold Rooster play, produced by Astra under the direction of William Parke. The story was written by Samuel Morse and the scenario by George B. Seitz. It is in many respects the most pretentious picture in which Gladys Hulette has yet appeared, being strongly dramatic throughout and yet furnishing her with the kind of role in which she appears at her best, one of innocence, youth and sweetness. William Parke is the director.

Pearl White is seen in the third episode of "The Fatal Ring" entitled "Borrowed Identity." A thrilling succession of scenes and a great fight are features of this episode, in which Carlslake traps Pearl and Knox in a diabolical manner. The cast includes Warner Oland, Earle Fox and Henry Gsell.

Ruth Roland is starred in the eleventh chapter of "The Neglected Wife" entitled "A Reckless Indiscretion." The episode deals with an attempt on the part of Doyle, the disbarred attorney, played by Neil Harding, to steal compromising letters written by Kennedy (Roland Bottomley) to Margaret (Ruth Roland) and the brave attempt of Margaret and Norwood (Philo McCullough), who is ignorant of the nature of these letters, to recover them. The scenario is the work of Will M. Ritchie.

"Southeastern Texas" is the title of the sixteenth "Know America" Combitone scenic. The picture shows the oil fields, lumber mills and shipbuilding yards of southeastern Texas. Particular interest attaches to it at the present owing to the activity in shipbuilding.

An International cartoon and scenic, split reel release and Hearst Pathe News No. 60 and No. 61 complete the program.

ADMIRAL FISKE SEES TORPEDOPLANE SCREENED.

Admiral Bradley Fiske and Allen R. Hawley, president of the Aero Club of America, were guests of honor at a special demonstration of a motion picture at the Paramount Pictures Corporation projection room July 2, where animated drawings showing the theory and operation of the torpedoplane were shown on the screen for the first time. The torpedoplane is the invention of Admiral Fiske, and the Government is considering the adoption of this remarkable combination of weapons for use in the present war.

The work of preparing the motion picture demonstration of this remarkable contrivance was done at the Bray Studios from plans and specifications furnished by Admiral Fiske, but the inventor himself had not seen one of the 19,200 drawings which comprised the completed picture. Admiral Fiske was warm in his praises of this remarkable demonstration of the practicability of the motion picture in giving vivid representaton of complex inventions.

The subject will be released by Paramount as part of the re[illegible] [illegible]graph service.

TRIANGLE BUYS ANOTHER PULVER STORY.

The great interest aroused by the announcement that Triangle is soon to present a picture version of "Sudden Jim," has prompted the company to purchase other popular stories, among the number being "The Man Hater" by Mary Brecht Pulver. Winifred Allen, the Allan Dwan "discovery," has been cast for the star role in the play, which is already in the first stages of production at the Triangle Yonkers studio.

Little Anna Lehr, the eight-year old daughter of the emotional actress recently engaged by Triangle, will appear as the star's young sister. This child actress is already known to the public as the baby in "Ramona."

MINUSA ALMOST REACHES NORTH POLE.

The Minusa Cine Products Company has sold to A. R. Thorne, proprietor of Thorne's theater, Fairbanks, Alaska, a Minusa screen. The letterhead of this enterprising exhibitor tells us that Thorne's theater is farthest north, and it has the reputation of being one of the most up-to-date show houses in the arctic zone.

Cuff Installs Two Symphonic Orchestras

Colonial and Palace Theaters of Orange, N. J., Invest $30,000 in Musical Equipment.

ONE of the most important sales of musical instruments was closed recently by M. J. Samuels, vice-president of American Photoplayer Company, 62 West Forty-fifth street, New York, who signed a contract to deliver two Robert Morton Symphonic Orchestras for the sum of $30,000 to George C. Cuff, president of the Mutual Theaters Company, Orange, N. J. These two orchestras will be installed in the Colonial and Palace theaters, in Orange. The American Photo Player Company has just announced a new division of its business, devoting itself entirely to the manufacture of a new intrument—the Robert Morton Symphonic Orchestra.

George C. Cuff Signing Contract in Office of M. J. Samuels.

The construction department heads of the company have been devoting the last two years in the planning and erection of this orchestra, working toward an ideal. This instrument is designed especially to represent and duplicate the tones of a symphonic orchestra, in addition to the results to be obtained from a cathedral organ and an orchestral organ.

The orchestra is all under the control of one man; the instrument may be played by hand, but is also equipped with an emergency device operated by means of rolls, putting all the resources of the instrument at the disposal of even an operator without technical skill; the instrument also contains a piano of highest artistic merit.

SELIG SHOWS GROWTH OF TRANSPORTATION.

"The Magic of Motive Power" is the title of the Selig feature film to be released in General Film service on Monday, July 9. This production is said to be intensely interesting, presenting as it does the evolution of transportation from the coming of Columbus to the epoch of the deadly submarine. We see the exact replicas of the ships of Columbus approaching the new Continent. Then comes the dragpole used in travel by the American Indian. The old days of the prairie schooner are rehearsed, the days of the sailing vessels, the steamboat, the stage coach, the steam locomotive, the trolley cars and elevated systems and finally the hydroplane and the submarine.

PATHE DOUBLES ON "LONESOME LUKE."

Prompted by the success of the two-reel "Lonesome Luke" comedies and by requests from the various exchanges and exhibitors, Pathe announces that beginning with August 5 there will be two of these comedies each month instead of one. The title of the release for August 5 is "Lonesome Luke, Messenger," and that of August 19 is "Lonesome Luke, Mechanic."

With Harold Lloyd and Toto, the Hippodrome clown, now busy at the Rolin studios, Mr. Roach believes he has an unequaled pair of comedians under his direction.

"FEATURES" AS "ALSO RANS" IN ADS.

It appears as if instances multiply to make good the words of Harold Bolster, of General Film, that the day of the short-length picture of merit has indeed dawned. The latest example of confidence in a two-reel picture as the overshadowing drawing card of a show comes from Seattle.

At the same time that the Liberty theater of that city played a five-reel feature with a conspicuous star, it played also General Film's "Past One at Rooney's," the two-reel O. Henry story. The Liberty, which is always a generous user of newspaper space, gave its ad to "Past One at Rooney's," with incidental mention of the five-reel feature.

Bluebirds Set as Far as August 10

"The Clean-Up," "The Showdown" and "Mother of Mine" Already Named for Next Month.

HAVING fixed the program until the week of August 20 with a half dozen features completed and ready for schedule, Bluebird directors have turned their attention to producing issues for the regular season. The August announcements include Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon in "The Clean-Up," August 6; Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez in "The Show-down," August 13, and Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford in "Mother of Mine," August 20.

Jack Conway has completed "Little Miss Fix-It," with Ella Hall. Lynn F. Reynolds has finished "Mr. Opp," in which Neva Gerber and George Hernandez will be the featured ones. Joseph De Grasse has ready for release another Dorothy Phillips feature, "Triumph," and Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, under the direction of Elmer Clifton, have turned out "The Fourth Glove"—all these attractions awaiting only the necessary formality of being dated up for distribution.

Ella Hall is now working under the new director, Harry Salter, in preparing "Bitter Sweet," with Claire Du Brey and Charles Mailes chief in her support. J. Grubb Alexander furnished the story and scenario. Rupert Julian is directing "The Face of Prentice Tiller," a scenario furnished by E. J. Clawson, in which Mr. Julian and Ruth Clifford will be co-stars. Others in the cast will be Lloyd Whitlock, E. A. Warren, Frank Brownlee, Wedgewood Nowell and Wilbur Higby.

Ida May Park is creating another Dorothy Phillips Bluebird entitled "Bondage," with William Stowell and Lon Chaney, as usual, chief supporters. There is a prospect of Louise Lovely returning to the Bluebird program in an Allan Holubar production, "Sirens of the Sea," with Mr. Holubar sharing the stellar honors. It will be observed that Bluebird is making ample provisions for the new season.

PLAYER WILL CENSOR HER OWN PLAYS.

Upon renewing her contract with the Van Dyke Film Corporation, releasing through Art Dramas, Inc., Jean Sothern insisted on the insertion of a novel clause, whereby it is understood that she will not appear in any productions whatever which are concerned with unwholesome subjects. Under the new arrangement Miss Sothern will read every story submitted for her use and pass on it before it is purchased from the author.

BARRYMORE HOME IN METRO PLAY.

The exteriors for the forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Whirlpool," written and directed by Lionel Barrymore, in which his sister, Ethel Barrymore, is featured, were taken at Taylor Point, near Mamaroneck, the beautiful summer home of the star. The grouds and house are appropriate for the settings called for by the script, and Lionel Barrymore persuaded his sister to allow her house to be used as the background for the exteriors of the picture.

"IN THE AFRICAN JUNGLE" (Selig).

"In The African Jungle" is the title of a Selig wild animal drama released July 2 in General Film service, featuring Kathlyn Williams supported by other favorites, including Baby Lillian Wade. The many admirers of Kathlyn Williams will welcome her return to the screen in one of her former dramas of the jungle, for it was in photoplays of this character that she first achieved fame. Her work in "The Adventures of Kathlyn" has never been forgotten by lovers of motion pictures. "In the African Jungle" is a drama of African wilds in which a father and daughter are made prisoners by savages and thrown into a pit of wild beasts. How they escape affords occasion for many thrills.

Extends Open Market on Old Pictures

Paramount Releases to Its "Preferred" Class Fifty-two Additional Subjects.

PARAMOUNT, through its executive office, announced to exhibitors last week that it had placed its third set of Paramount pictures upon the open market, available to all exhibitors irrespective of the franchise clause in program contracts. This makes a total of 156 Paramount pictures that have been offered. The list contains some of the greatest productions that have ever been made by the Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas producing companies.

The first 104 Paramount pictures were placed on the open market about two months ago. These additional pictures include such successes as "The Cheat," Mary Pickford in "Esmeralda," "Madam Butterfly," "The Girl of Yesterday" and "The Foundling"; Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters," "The Prince and the Pauper," "Mice and Men" and "Out of the Drifts"; Pauline Frederick in "Zaza," "Bella Donna," "Lydia Gilmore" and "The Spider." In this set of fifty-two pictures will also be found the first productions in which Geraldine Farrar appeared, "Carmen" and "Temptation."

In hundreds of communities it had been impossible for more than one exhibitor to use the pictures because of the restrictive and protective franchise that had been issued in connection with the Paramount Pictures at the inception of this distributing corporation. This is now entirely elminated in regards to these first 156 pictures. These are classed as Paramount Preferred Pictures. New prints have been supplied, and new paper, additional advertising and publicity material of high class has been prepared for these open booking pictures.

HOLMES WELL INTO FIRST ESSANAY.

Taylor Holmes has said goodbye to the speaking stage. He is in the pictures to stay. At least that is the present state of his mind and he doesn't think it's going to change.

The actor who led "Bunker Bean" to footlight fame is half filmed in his first Essanay production. It will be his screen debut practically, since the only other experience along this line he has had was in a one-reel picture for the old Bioscope about eight years ago. As he expresses it, "that does not count," for filmland then was still a wilderness of undevelopment.

Mr. Holmes' first Essanay production will be "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," a screen version of the story of that title by Clarence Buddington Kelland which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. He has contracted to star in three pictures for Essanay and, it is understood, that organization holds an option on his services for further productions. It is possible that he may appear in a film version of "[illegible]"

EXHIBITORS TO SEE GOLDWYN CIRCUS A CHICAGO.

A village designed by Everett Shinn, famous Amer[illegible] illustrator, and executed by the mechanical staff of the Goldw[illegible] Studios, a race track with a real horse race in Hohokus, N. [illegible] chartered for two weeks, and a complete circus with 2,0[illegible] "extras" employed as spectators comprise three separat[illegible] features of the current Mae Marsh-Goldwyn production which is generally conceded to be one of the biggest photodramas ever to be attempted among metropolitan studios.

As a photodramatic spectacle it is claimed the Goldwyn play now in process of making will rival "The Birth of a Nation." This third of the Mae Marsh productions will be finished the second week in July, and by the night of July 13th it will be sent to Chicago to be shown to the trade at the meeting of the national exhibitors.

VIRGINIA PEARSON HAS NEW DIRECTOR.

Patrons Complain of Too Many Slides

Portland Screens Are Crowded With Patriotic and Semi-Patriotic Announcements—Result Is Speeding of Films—Exhibitors Glad to Co-operate, However.

By Abraham Nelson, Majestic Theater Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—From the occurrences in the Portland photoplay field during the past few months it is apparent that the motion picture will play no small part in the conduct of the details of our great war that concern the home communities.

The Portland exhibitors have not been backward one bit in giving their screens gratis for patriotic purposes. Innumerable slides have been shown. The result has, however, been detrimental to the pictures. In order to please the patriotic societies by showing their slides, and at the same time get in the regular number of shows during the day's running time, the films have been speeded beyond all reason, and complaints have resulted.

The number of demands on Portland picture shows to show semi-patriotic slides have become so great that exhibitors have been compelled to refuse some of them. The Exhibitors' League, to which all slide requests are referred, is daily called upon to sanction the showing of slides for benefit dances given for soldiers' mess funds, Honor Guard Girls' outings and Red Cross benefit entertainments, besides the regular recruiting slides.

The patriotic societies which the exhibitors are favoring by running their slides are inadvertently working against their benefactors. For example: a benefit performance is arranged by one of the societies, and a war film constitutes the program; instead of selecting a regular picture theater, that has heretofore been favoring the society, in which to show the film, the benefit is staged at the Eleventh Street Playhouse, a theater that is dark most of the time; the society disburses money in rent and expenses to people who are not in the photoplay industry; a mediocre picture is perhaps projected because the theater's equipment is in such condition as benefits the spasmodic occasions at which it is used; the attendance is slim because of all these things; however, what business is done is business drawn away from the regular photoplay theater which is entitled to it as against the usually dark house.

During the recent Red Cross "drive" the photoplay attendance fell off very markedly after 6 p. m. during the eight days of the campaign. The Portland exhibitors did not complain of this condition, but maintain that they can get more money for the patriotic societies if they will give their photoplay benefits in the regular photoplay theaters upon whom they are continually calling to give their screens to show slides gratis.

Lee, aide de camp, has prepared an official memorandum on the uses of "The Star Spangled Banner," the national anthem. It is pointed out that the anthem is entitled to the deepest respect and that it should never be played at a motion picture performance nor as a medley or march, nor for a dance. It should be played through once without repetition and without alteration of any sort. It may be properly played at the beginning or close of a program or concert. Attention is directed to the careless use of the anthem and a plea made for ceremonial respect for the official national anthem. Why the national anthem should never be played at a moving picture theater, from whose patrons more recruits are drawn, than any other place of amusement, is not explained.

City Council Forbids All Vampire Motion Pictures.

Dalton, Ga., June 25.—Dalton will see no more of the beautiful vampire in films as the result of an ordinance adopted by the City Council, which becomes effective Monday, July 1. The Council passed an ordinance tabooing certain classes of motion pictures, among them being the vampire plays. The ordinance, passed to raise the standard of motion pictures here, will be rigidly enforced, three violations of the ordinance being sufficient to revoke the business license of an offending theater.

Atlanta, Ga.—Harry K. Lucas, manager of the Lucas Theater Supply Company, has returned from Wrightsville Beach, N. C., where he attended the big meeting of the North Carolina Exhibitors' League.

Atlanta, Ga.—Big patriotic pictures were featured at the Atlanta moving picture theaters this week. The first of a series was "The Star Spangled Banner," an Edison feature, telling a story of life in the United States Marine Corps. Another patriotic picture shown was "Fighting for France," five reels of thrills taken on the battlefields of Europe.

Greenwood Takes Charge of Rialto.

Atlanta, Ga.—George B. Greenwood has just returned to Atlanta from an extended trip east on business, and announces he will take charge of the Rialto theater on July 15, having subleased it from Jake Wells.

Atlanta Business Notes.

The Grand theater is this week showing a feature picture to supplement the patriotic spectacle of the Fifth Regiment. On the eve of what is the last appearance of the Fifth before its own departure for France, the Grand is showing the first picture to get to this country of the epochal arrival of General Pershing and his staff in France.

B. Lee Smith, former Atlanta movie theater manager and advertising man, is now an editor. "B. Lee," as he is known to his many friends in Atlanta, is directing the destinies of the Fitzgerald New Era, a new weekly paper being published at Fitzgerald, Georgia.

Britt Craig, feature writer for the Constitution, and press representative of the Grand theater, left Atlanta this week for Allentown, Pa., where he will go in training with the Ambulance Corps for early service in France.

E. F. Dardine, manager of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., of Charlotte, N. C., returned a few days ago after a visit to Virginia and reports business good.

Chattanooga Shows Open Sunday

Signal Company Operates Four Houses on Sabbath—President Lindsey Said Action Was Not Taken to Commercialize Industry, But to Co-operate With Government in Providing Entertainment for Soldiers—Move Endorsed by Ministers.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—Playing to capacity houses, which aggregated during the day eleven thousand people, four of Chattanooga's leading moving picture theaters opened their doors to the public on Sunday, July 1, and ran through the day and night performances without interruption or interference by local authorities. The theaters participating in the Sunday exhibitions were the Alcazar, Fine Arts, Alhambra and Bonita, operated by the Signal Amusement Company, of Chattanooga, a half-million dollar amusement corporation, of which William H. Lindsey, of Nashville, is president, and Frank H. Dowler, Jr., Chattanooga, general manager. Three of the four houses in operation had to put out the S. R. O. sign early in the day, while the fourth, a much larger house, was filled throughout the entire run. A feature of the Sunday opening was the fact that all the theaters closed during the hours of church service 7:00 to 9:00 o'clock, in order that they might not interfere with religious gatherings over the city.

President Lindsey in discussing the matter with the Moving Picture World correspondent at Nashville pointed out that the reopening of the theaters on Sunday in Chattanooga was not an attempt to defy the law, nor was it merely an effort to run the houses on that day for profit, but by reason of the fact that the United States Government was actually in favor of Sunday opening of moving picture shows as a means of providing quiet and genteel entertainment for its many thousand soldiers in camp at the army post in Chattanooga, and at the divisional training camp at Fort Oglethorpe. Hundreds of requests have come to the Signal Amusement Company from army and camp officials asking that the shows be allowed to run on the only day that the men have to themselves. Army officers have demonstrated this point to both the city and county officials and to the theater men, resulting in the opening of the shows on Sunday.

The Monday following the first Sunday opening brought over five hundred letters of approval to officials of the Signal Amusement Company. The pastors of the city were in favor of the movement as a whole, and a few of those holding the opposite view were appealed to by the chaplain of the army, who showed them that the hours spent in a moving picture show provided rest and recreation for the men. As a result of this explanation many of the preachers who were against the opening of theaters on Sunday came over to the side of the theater men. Supplemented by the approval of the church comes a strong endorsement from the leading commercial, industrial and labor organizations in Chattanooga, who strongly favor the Sunday opening policy.

When questioned as to what he thought of the matter, Attorney General Whitaker stated to the press that he had nothing to say at the present time, adding that if he decided to take any action he would make it known later. The sheriff has made no statement for publication, but it is thought that his action will be harmonious with the Government's wishes toward leaving the shows open on Sunday.

The Chattanooga shows have been closed on Sunday for some time, and were ordered permanently closed following the decision of the Tennessee Supreme Court in the case of Howell Graham, et al, of Chattanooga. At the present time, however, the shows are running in Memphis, although the receipts are turned over to charitable institutions.

While the soldiers probably derive the larger part of the benefit from remaining open on Sunday, the citizenship of Chattanooga in general is in favor of remaining open seven days a week, and with the theaters closing during church hours it is indeed a hard matter to find an excuse for closing them.

Richard Travers in Nashville.

Nashville, Tenn.—Richard C. Travers, Essanay star, spent Monday, July 2, in Nashville, where he appeared at the Strand theater in person. Mr. Bradford, manager of the Strand, was instrumental in bringing Mr. Travers to Nashville, where he gave an interesting talk, especially with regard to the war. Travers has been assigned a commission in the reserve army, and urged all men of fighting age to join.

"Joan" Presented on Big Scale.

Nashville, Tenn.—"Joan the Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar, ran for four days at the Knickerbocker, with prices set at fifty cents, general admission, and 75 cents and $1 for box seats. A special orchestra was used for the production. Manager Wassman uncovered what stands as probably the most pretentious piece of theater advertising ever seen in Nashville by using a double page black-and-white cut in Sunday's morning paper, followed up for several days with half page ads in red and black, running in both afternoon and morning papers, as well as extensive bill board advertising. Great crowds were present at the performances, and repaid the management for the trouble and expense undertaken to give the picture a big send-off.

Memphis Orpheum to Redecorate.

Memphis, Tenn.—Manager Arthur Lane, of the Orpheum, has laid plans for redecorating the house. Owing to the fact that the Orpheum will remain open all summer, with vaudeville and pictures, the decorating work will have to be done at odd times. This house is enjoying an exceptionally successful season under the summer operating plan.

"In Again, Out Again" Wins in Nashville.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Knickerbocker played to capacity business during the three days run of Douglas Fairbanks in his first Artcraft production, "In Again, Out Again." The first night was Monday, June 25, at which time the mammoth Red Cross celebration was in progress uptown, and it seemed with the dismissal of the Red Cross gathering half the city made a rush for the Knickerbocker, where they clamored for admission. Fairbanks is undoubtedly Nashville's favorite son of the screen.

TO EXHIBITORS.

Co-operation Overcomes Drastic Regulation

By Working in Harmony the Exhibitors of Manhattan, Kan., Are Successful in Removing Objectionable Clause in Local Welfare Board Measure.

By Kansas City News Service, 206 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

MANHATTAN, KAN.—A great many moving picture exhibitors fume and stew unnecessarily over local restrictions, when a little cooperation would remove all their difficulties.

Here's an instance of cooperation from Manhattan, Kansas. There are two exhibitors here, and they get along fine together. They engage in the hottest sort of competition, in that each tries to secure attractions that will draw a crowd, and each advertises and pushes his attractions to the limit. But there has never been any of the nasty competition that tries to checkmate the other fellow's stunts, or pull from him trade that he has spent money to get, and is entitled to.

The result of this condition was that when the local welfare board proposed some drastic regulations the two exhibitors tackled the situation together, and acted in harmony. The board insisted that the exhibitors should sign a sort of contract, and declared that permits for showing would not be issued unless the papers were duly signed. One clause in the paper said that the representatives of the board should be admitted at any and all times to the shows. This clause was objectionable on its face; since it seemed to be merely another of the free-admission arrangements.

So they visited the board, and quietly announced that they did not intend to sign. There was no fuss or argument about it. They didn't sign. So they did not get permits; but they were not closed.

A few days later the board sent word to the exhibitors that evidently they had misunderstood the purport of the order. There was no intention of demanding free admission at any and all times for the board's representatives; but the board wished it clearly understood that there would be no effort to keep the representatives out of the houses—they would pay their way in, of course. This and other explanations of the contract made it plain that the board was not far out of line with the exhibitors' ideas after all—and since the board did not again ask the exhibitors to sign any papers, all is running smoothly in Manhattan.

With the local exhibitors fighting each other, such a nice solution of the difficulty could not have been reached.

Here is how pleasant things are in Manhattan. When the Marshall pays a stiff price, splurges a little on advertising, and plays up to a crowd, the Wareham lies low, and lets the Marshall have it. And so when the Wareham gets a big feature, and goes after business, the Marshall runs along quietly, and does not try to queer the Wareham by getting a big feature of its own for those dates. The net result is that each theater frequently has the big ones, and makes some money on them—because it is sure of a good crowd, and sure that it will not be hampered by that mean sort of opposition that would rather cut a big loaf in two than see the other fellow have a whole loaf all at one time.

One never hears one of theaters "knocked" by an employee of the other, in Manhattan—it's always "the Wareham is a good theater—has fine attractions," or "The Marshall is all right, well run."

Altman, Theater Manager, Dead.

Kansas City, Mo.—F. G. Altman, owner of the New Center Theater at Fifteenth street and Troost avenue, died June 21. Mr. Altman had been prominent in business circles for many years, engaging in many different lines, including shoes, women's wear, and recently musical merchandise and pianos. He had considerable property on Fifteenth street, and decided that a first-class moving picture show would be the best factor in building up the values of the community. He built one; and it is indeed first class. He sought long for a manager, and finally leased it. The undertaking was not successful, though Mr. Altman poured into the venture all the money asked, and lost several thousand dollars.

Then he decided to run the house himself, which he did. He was so impressed with his purpose to give the best entertainment that he frequently met losses cheerfully, with the satisfaction of knowing that people who came long distances by automobile and street car to his theater had seen the best any theater could offer. The theater is said to have been progressing in business nicely when he died.

Reese New Manager of Universal Exchange.

Kansas City, Mo.—D. O. Reese is one of those regular fellows you've heard about. Business from the word go—and popular as they make 'em. Reese started out in middle youth with a fine tenor voice, and a capacity for entertainment. His talent got free rein, as well as the coin of the realm, on the vaudeville stage, where for five years he worked single and double, and in quartettes—mostly single, for he could carry his own act tip top. Reese has been an exhibitor, serving at Fort Madison, Ia.; and Chanute, Kan. His first film exchange service was with the Kansas City Feature Film Co. Thence he went into the Bluebird office as salesman, making good with some to spare. After service as assistant manager of the Universal office at Kansas City, he succeeded R. C. Cropper as manager, upon the latter's resignation. If anybody knows what audiences—and spectators—want, it is surely Reese; and his experience as an exhibitor is only one more factor in his pronounced success.

Soldiers Increase Theater Patronage.

Junction City, Kan.—"Bob" Roberts, manager of the Cozy, the Airdrome, and the opera house here, is doing a good business, with seven thousand soldiers only eight miles away at Fort Riley. And when 40,000—or some say it will be 80,000—more are quartered at the fort, maybe the business will be even better. Saturday afternoon and evening the picture shows have been reaping more of a hervest, for on most Saturdays, so far, the soldiers in some of the departments have got away for the week-end. This applies especially to the officers' reserve camp.

Richardson Company Opens Offices.

Washington Exchanges to Have Building

E. K. Fox Obtains Permit to Make Extensive Alterations in Structure at Eighth and G Streets, N. W., to Meet Needs of Film Men.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—It looks very much as though Washington would actually have a film exchange building, although the exchange managers are unwilling to agree to such a statement until they see everything in readiness for them to move in. A letter has been sent by Edmund K. Fox, of the A. F. Fox Company, telling them that he is at work on such a building at Eighth and G streets, Northwest. As has been noted in these columns from time to time, there has been a great deal of controversy, agitation, and discussion concerning the film exchange building, which the new fire regulations, now held in abeyance by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, will make necessary.

Mr. Fox, in addition to his real estate business, has been intimately associated with the motion picture film business in the District of Columbia, controlling the Penn Gardens Theater and the airdome adjoining, and having had a large interest in the Hy-Art Masterplays Company, an organization that handled State Rights propositions. His letter to the exchange managers in full is as follows:

"A permit has been granted and work is in progress for the creation of a film building on the northeast corner of Eighth and G Streets, Northwest, in the very center of everything.

"We will arrange the space desired to suit your needs, each suite according to plans to contain business office, manager's office, film vault and shipping room.

"A number of single rooms will be available at reasonable prices for those promoting one or two films.

"The building which is fireproof, will be nicely furnished throughout, and will contain screen room, telegraph, mail and express offices, shower baths, toilets, steam heat, electric lights, etc.

"If interested our Mr. Welch, office Main 989, will make an appointment with you to show you the plans and go through the building. Most truly yours, A. F. Fox Company, by E. K. Fox."

The exchange managers are very much interested and hope that something will come of Mr. Fox's activities. The building is the one formerly occupied by the Bureau of Mines. A line of cars pass the door, while three other car lines are each a block away, east, west and south.

This building is just as Mr. Fox says, "in the center of everything," and inasmuch as the building is already in existence, and needs but the various changes, such as the installation of the film vaults, etc., to bring it into compliance with the proposed film regulations, if it is then passed by the authorities there is little more that the exchange folks can ask.

At the Triangle Exchange.

Washington, D. C.—Ed Price, who for a considerable length of time was with the Mutual Film Corporation in Baltimore, and lately has been connected with the Washington office of the Triangle Distributing Company, is receiving the congratulations of his many friends upon his promotion to the position of manager of the Minneapolis, Minn., branch of the latter organization

Talking about congratulations one must not overlook Manager Butner. He's all smiles these days and there is a possibility that his elation may bring about a drop in the H. C. F. That means "high cost of films," which have not as yet taken a drop, even for the warm months. The reason—just plain baby. It's a boy that father says will enter the film business as soon as possible, from the distributing end, starting in as an inspector (and a good one at that) and working up to president of the biggest combination of film companies that could be imagined. His name is James Whitley Herron Butner, and he's a great kid.

It really is not necessary to mention the fact, since everyone has been watching the moves in local film circles, but this letter would not be complete without reference to the fact that George M. Mann, foremrly manager of the local Paramount office has become general representative of the Triangle Distributing Corporation with headquarters in New York City.

Goldwyn Opens Washington Exchange.

Washington, D. C.—By the time that this issue of the Moving Picture World reaches its readers the Goldwyn exchange will be a reality in Washington for Mr. Bradley, who is to be its manager, states that he is on the point of signing a lease for permanent quarters.

Mr. Bradley is an old time film man, well known to the older men in the business in Washington.

Lust Arranging Affairs for Chamber of Commerce Outing.

Washington, D. C.—Sidney B. Lust has been appointed chairman of the entertainment committee for the outing to be held by the Washington Chamber of Commerce on July 17. It is expected that this will be the biggest event in the history of this organization, and Mr. Lust has been instructed to go ahead with elaborate plans. The affair will be held at Chesapeake Beach and Mr. Lust has arranged for a motion picture and a vaudeville show as a part of the evening's entertainment. He has planned for a parade of some four hundred of the members from the quarters of the Chamber of Commerce at 1202 F Street to the special cars that are to carry them to the Beach resort. A number of other film and vaudeville men, members of the Chamber of Commerce, have agreed to assist Mr. Lust in this work.

Eiseman Receives Promotion.

Washington, D. C.—A promotion has come to Clarence Eiseman, who for some little time past has been feature representative for the Mutual Film Company's office in Washington, for he goes to Baltimore as manager of the branch there of the Washington office. He succeeds O. D. Weems, who has accepted a position with the Paramount Pictures Corporation as Baltimore representative.

Hutchinson Visits Capital City.

Washington, D. C.—Among the visitors in town last week was S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company. Mr. Hutchinson came to Washington en route to New York in his Packard automobile. He made the trip from Chicago via Frederick and Baltimore, coming all the way over the Lincoln highway. After a short stay in New York, he returned to Chicago in his machine.

R. V. Phillips Now With V-L-S-E.

Washington, D. C.—Paul V. Phillips, who for some time has been associated with R. D. Craver as manager of the Broadway theater in Durham, N. C., has joined the sales force of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, and will travel through North Carolina and a part of Virginia. Mr. Phillips is one of the best known film men in the Tarheel State. He has been active in the work of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina and was its vice president up to the time of becoming associated with the V-L-S-E exchange. He was active in staging the several conventions of the League in his home state.

Kunsky Enterprises Move Into New Offices

Now Located in Handsome Quarters in New Madison Theater Building—Suite Occupies Two Floors.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—John H. Kunsky has moved his offices from 2206 Dime Bank building to the fourth and fifth floors of the New Madison building, which he erected some time ago, at the corner of Broadway and Grand Circus Park, which also contains the Madison theater—the whole realty proposition representing over a million dollars. The removal represents the following Kunsky enterprises: John H. Kunsky and George W. Trendle, personal; Madison, Washington, Garden, Alhambra, Strand, Columbia, Royal, Empress and Liberty theaters, as well as the Adams theater, which is a new house to open soon; the Casino Feature Film Company; the Madison Film Exchange, and the Metro Pictures Corporation. For a while Metro will remain at 75 Broadway, the removal being postponed for a few weeks.

Mr. Kunsky and Mr. Trendle will have elegant private offices on the fifth floor; the fourth floor will contain the offices of the Madison and Metro exchanges.

Mr. Kunsky is a pioneer exhibitor of Michigan, starting about thirteen years ago with a small nickelodeon on Monroe avenue. Today his various enterprises represent pretty close to two million dollars.

Mr. Kunsky, being a member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., will get future Chaplin comedies for Michigan distribution under the new contract. First they will be shown at his chain of nine theaters, and then sold to the other exhibitors.

Vendome Theater Changes Hands.

Detroit, Mich.—William Klatt, proprietor of the Rosedale and Regent theaters, two of Detroit's finest motion picture houses, has sold the Vendome theater on Grand River avenue to Jack Matthews, who recently purchased the Gratiot from Mr. Klatt. Having disposed of his other houses, Mr. Klatt will give his personal attention to the Rosedale and Regent.

Mr. Mathews is a live wire, and is already planning a number of worth while changes to both the Vendome and Gratiot.

Many Exhibitors Raise Prices.

Detroit, Mich.—As a result of a recent trip through the territory, H. A. Ross, sales manager at Detroit for Paramount-Artcraft, has signed up first and second runs in nine towns of over 50,000 population. He also assisted the exhibitors in readjusting their prices for the new Paramount-Artcraft pictures. "Most of the exhibitors under the new booking plan are going to establish 25 cent prices," said Mr. Ross. "It was hard to convince some of the exhibitors that it was best for them to slightly advance prices, but the more they thought the proposition over the better it appealed to them."

Garson-Selznick Hearing Postponed.

Detroit, Mich.—The court hearing between Garson-Selznick on the injunction suit by Selznick to restrain Garson from operating in Michigan with Selznick pictures was scheduled for Saturday, June 30, but was postponed until Saturday, July 13.

Fox Manager Visits New York.

Detroit, Mich.—Joe Kaliski is spending the current week in New York at the convention of Fox managers. Joe promises to bring back the new Fox booking policy —complete details—so that his return is very much anticipated by Michigan exhibitors. Joe came to Detroit recently from Cincinnati, and says he likes Michigan.

Horwitz a Hustler.

Detroit, Mich.—Joseph Horwitz, of New York, who recently came to Detroit as Universal city salesman, is proving a whirlwind. He is "cleaning up," to use a slang expression. Joe calls on at least a half dozen exhibitors every night, and seldom fails to sign them up. He's a real hustler.

General's Vice-President Visits Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—Harold Bolster, vice-president and general manager of the General Film Company, was a Detroit visitor on June 28. He spent a great portion of the day with Dave Prince, Detroit manager, and also conferred with Manager Flynn, of the Cleveland office, who came here purposely to see Mr. Bolster. This makes the second General official to come to Detroit in the past month, S. R. Kent, general sales manager, being a visitor early in June. Both officials were pleased with trade conditions, and spoke enthusiastically about the future.

Matt Plans New House.

Detroit, Mich.—Lester Matt, of Flint, has incorporated the Lester Matt Photoplay Company for $115,000. He is the principal stockholder. Mr. Matt operates the Strand theater in Flint, and is planning the erection of a new theater in the Vehicle City.

Detroit Dots.

The Duplex theater, Detroit, has closed again, and will probably not reopen until fall. It has two beautiful auditoriums, but the jinx seems to have been there since it was opened.

C. Howard Crane, of Dime Bank building, Detroit, is letting contracts for a new theater to be erected on Fernadale avenue, Central and Springwells avenue, for Jerome Selling, 217 Jefferson avenue. It will seat 1,100 people.

The Liberty theater, 1981 Gratiot avenue, Detroit, closed for a few months, has reopened under new management.

A. J. Gilligham has returned from his four weeks vacation spent at Atlantic City looking much better. Mr. Gilligham owns the Empire in Detroit and a chain of theaters in Grand Rapids.

Bert Whitney, of the Detroit opera house, has selected a site on West Columbia street, near Woodward, for his new theater. Work will start probably in the fall, so as to be ready in 1918 when his lease on the present opera house expires. The new location will be north of Grand Circus Park.

Edward Geller has started a feature film exchange under the name of the Holland Feature Film Company, at 97 Woodward avenue, Detroit.

The Drury Lane theater, Detroit, has established summer prices, 10 cents at matinees, and 10 and 15 cents at night.

First Run Paramount for Nirdlinger Houses

Contract Involving $300,000 Covers Strand, Colonial, Nixon, Leader, Frankford, Coliseum, Cedar, Tioga and Jumbo Theaters.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Fred G. Nixon Nirdlinger, local vaudeville magnate and theater manager, has acquired the Paramount pictures for his string of local theaters. This gives him the first run of this line of feature films in nine theaters. The Strand, at Germantown avenue and Venango street, one of the finest theaters in America devoted to high-class pictures at high admission scale, is to have the first run on this service north of Market street. The Colonial, the palatial house with a high-class vaudeville policy, will have first run Paramount in Germantown. The Nixon, the popular west Philadelphia vaudeville house, will have first run in that section of the city. The Leader will have first call in its neighborhood on Lancaster avenue. The Frankford will show them first in Frankford, and the Coliseum, Cedar, Tioga and Jumbo will show them under the Nirdlinger direction in their respective neighborhoods. The contract just signed represents $300,000. The Paramount-Nirdlinger contract has been negotiated by Harry A. Smith, general manager of the Nixon Nirdlinger theaters, and Columbus Stamper, booking manager for Mr. Nirdlinger. The Paramount interests were represented by William E. Smith, Oscar Morgan and Edgar Moss, of the local Paramount offices.

Mr. Mastbaum has been so busy with his manifold interests in the amusement industry, opening new theaters, assuming direction of the established houses, booking one hundred and six theaters and arranging for the production and presentation of new picture masterpieces, that he has not had time to take a real rest since the summer of 1913, but this time he hopes the unexpected will not happen, and that he will be able to recuperate and be ready for another year of work. Mr. Mastbaum is going to the Canadian wilds for hunting and fishing. He expects to return to Philadelphia in August.

Daily Change in 56th Street Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. McCready, of the 56th Street theater, announces a policy of a daily change of program during the months of July and August. In view of the coming hot weather it was thought that the additional number of shows to be presented would offer a more attractive bill to the photoplay enthusiasts instead of three productions with a two days' showing.

Broadway Theater Closed for Alterations.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Saturday, June 30, the most successful season in the history of the Broadway theater terminated. During the months before Managers Sablosky and McQuirk presented to the thousands of residents of south Philadelphia the highest class of vaudeville acts in conjunction with photoplays. Theatres Enjoying Big Patronage—Billy West Comedies in Standard—Other Items.

CLEVELAND, O.—For midsummer, the Cleveland theaters are certainly "putting on some shows." The Mall and Alhambra theaters, with Douglas Fairbanks in "Wild and Woolly," played to big business during the week of June 24. The surprise of the week, however, was the booking by the Standard theater of the Billy West comedies. The Standard has a double bill for the first week in July of the first Billy West entitled "Back Stage," and Valeska Suratt in "The Siren."

Another distinct surprise was the opening of Bluebird and Butterfly features in the Priscilla theater, which is a vaudeville house. The first picture shown was Franklyn Farnum in "The Car of Chance." The local Bluebird office is spending $500 a week in newspaper advertising which is attracting much attention.

The Liberty theater had first run on the big Universal feature, "The People vs. John Doe," while the Stillman played the latest Mary Pickford picture, "The Little American," to unusually good business.

Phelos Operating Strand Theater.

Elyria, O.—Milton Phelos, well-known Ohio moving picture man, is now operating the Strand theater here. This was formerly the People's theater, and was owned by C. Neufer.

Mr. Phelos formerly ran theaters in Columbus, Springfield and Dayton. He also was at one time in the independent feature film business.

Boehringer Theater Deal Nets Big Profit

Sells for $130,000 Option on Triangle Theater Secured for $100,000—Later Relinquishes Lease for $50,000—Boehringer to Open 2,000 Seat House in November.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Ernst Boehringer, manager of the Triangle theater and head of the Boehringer Amusement Company, effected a deal on Monday, July 2, which will keep him in spending money for some months to come. Some time ago Manager Boehringer secured an option on the Triangle Theater building, which was owned by Mrs. Greenwall, widow of an early New Orleans theatrical manager, for a purchase price of $100,000. Then he sold the building to A. D. Adolph, of New Orleans, representing the Empire Theatrical Company of New York, for a consideration of $130,000. The Boehringer Amusement Company's lease on the Triangle theater has a little over two years to run yet, and the new purchasers wanted immediate possession of the building, therefore Manager Boehringer relinquished the lease for $50,000. All of the transactions were for cash.

A little over a year ago he leased the old Greenwall theater, which was in a poor neighborhood and was a discredited play house. He refitted the interior and put in Triangle pictures. His venture was laughed at. He was the first exhibitor to introduce an efficient orchestra, and music with pictures became a necessity. He established popular prices and refused to play special pictures if the demand to raise his admission price was a part of the contract. After the first few weeks of operation the Triangle theater became a profitable institution, and the Boehringer success induced other exhibitors to copy the Boehringer methods.

Not content with the success of the Triangle theater, Mr. Boehringer organized the Boehringer Amusement Company for the purpose of building the Liberty theater, and the structure is now well under way in St. Charles street. It is to be opened in November, and will have a seating capacity of about 2,000. It is to be as perfect in appointments as it is possible for modern builders to make it. For the next few months Mr. Boehringer, in company with the head of his publicity department, Leon Grandjean, will make a tour of the principal cities of the country in order to pick up the latest ideas in exhibition and theater fittings, and they promise a perfect photoplay house upon the opening of the Liberty.

Istrione Sold to Kensington & Cook.

Jackson, Miss.—A motion picture deal that will put a different complexion on the field here was consummated June 28. J. C. Landen, owner of the Istrione theater, disposed of his property to Kensington & Cook, owners of the New Majestic theater, and hereafter both theaters will be operated under the management of New Majestic owners. The New Majestic has recently been reopened after being practically rebuilt since the fire which damaged it a few months ago. The Istrione is also a modern theater, and under the management of Mr. Landen has attained a wide reputation for clean shows. What policy is to be pursued by Kensington & Cook in the operation of the two theaters has not been announced.

Fireproof Theater for New Orleans.

New Orleans, La.—The Sobel-Richards-Shear Enterprises have added another attractive suburban theater to their list of amusement places in this city. On June 30 this company closed the lease for the ground upon which the Pastime theater is located, and they will proceed at once to erect a modern iron and stucco theater which will be architecturally in keeping with the high class of buildings in the neighborhood. The Pastime theater, now under the management of Jack Levy, will be closed on July 15, and Mr. Levy will be made the managing director of the New Pastime. The new structure is to be fitted with all of the latest appliances for the best projection of pictures, and every convenience for the patrons will be installed. The Sobel-Richards-Shear Enterprises announce that they will not build or negotiate the purchase of any additional theaters for the present.

Potoliano Opens Spacious Airdome.

Natchez, Miss.—Manager Tom Potoliano has just opened a spacious new amusement place in this city, which will be known as the Airdome. It is located in the center of the city opposite the post office, and the best feature service that the market affords will be shown.

Convention of Saenger Theater Managers.

New Orleans, La.—Incidental with the opening of the Strand theater on July 4 the Saenger Amusement Company arranged for a convention of the resident managers of their theaters in the various towns in which they operate in the South and West. These conventions are annual affairs, and this is the first one to be held in New Orleans. The meetings were held in the executive offices of the Saenger Amusement Company, and many subjects of interest to the organization were discussed.

On account of the heavy business of the National Holiday demanding the presence of many of the managers in their home theaters the attendance was not as large as it otherwise would have been, but among those who were present were: Harry Vandemark, of Houston, Texas; Eva Vernon, Texarkana, Texas; Johnny Jones, Pensacola, Florida; L. T. Pico, Vicksburg, Miss.; Howard Swain, Shreveport, La.; John Manning, Alexandria, La., and Henry P. Sterne, Monroe, La.

Perolle Resigns From Mutual.

New Orleans, La.—Albert Perolle, assistant manager of the Mutual Film exchange, has resigned his position to take charge of the Art-Drama department of the J. Pearce & Sons exchange, and commenced his new duties on July 2. Upon his departure from the Mutual offices his fellow employees presented him with a diamond studded stick pin. Walter Pons has succeeded Mr. Perolle as assistant manager of the Mutual exchange.

Milwaukee, Wis.—"The Barrier" started into its second week at the Davidson theater.

Marinette, Wis.—The Bijou and Ascher theaters gave performances for the benefit of the Red Cross.

Hot Wave Stimulates Business in St. Louis

This May Seem Incredible, but the World Correspondent in His Perambulations Among the Exchanges Says the Unanimous Opinion of Managers Was "Business Is Helped by the Hot Wave."

By A. H. Giebler, 4123 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—It was a hot day in St. Louis—98 in the shade, and very little shade.

The boarders at the Plaza Hotel ornamented the sidewalk on the east side of the building feebly waving palm leaf fans and exuding perspiration and profanity.

The only sign of anything like violent activity to be seen anywhere was exhibited by a small boy who made futile efforts to extricate a tomcat which had got stuck in the melting asphalt of the street, by pulling at the animal's tail.

We stood in the Triangle office gazing out upon this peaceful scene, and hot as it was, we had an idea.

"What effect," we asked Ed Dustin, "does this weather have on business?"

"No bad effect. Good business and optimism are synonymous terms," he answered in his well known classical style. "We're optimistic here. The people want good films. The Triangle make good films. We distribute them with promptness and despatch, and the result is that the hot weather does not hurt our business a bit."

And he used some more language, and began to draw a parallel, about one angle of a Triangle representing quality, another desire, and another supply and demand, but when he began to get pretty deep into mathematics and used the word hypothenuse we begged him to desist and asked for a cigarette, and beat it down stairs to see if other exchange managers said business was good, or if Dustin's remarks were mere heat ravings.

We crawled into the K-E-S-E office, and there Jack Burhorn sat like a wilted lily at his desk.

"Hot?" he said, adjusting a wilted collar and mopping his brow, "why, we hadn't noticed it around here."

"But you see we keep so busy all the time—move around so lively we create a little breeze all of our own, and business is actually better than it was before the hot wave struck us. We are getting ready to release our Conquest Pictures, the Hoyt comedies are drawing well, and prospects are just about as bright as this sunshine."

"More heat madness," we said to ourself. "Business can't be good this kind of weather."

But as we moved down and out into the highways of Filmdom we heard the same story everywhere we went until we came to believe it ourself. In fact, after two or three more stops we got so many invitations to "Come on and look at the books," or "Go back and talk to the shipping clerk," and things of that sort that we no longer had any doubts.

We went to Pathe's from the "Keys" office and found R. K. Evans, the new manager, who told us practically the same thing as the others, and he didn't know we were coming, so had no time to frame up a story to fit the other reports.

"I hope it gets hotter," said Evans, "if such a thing is possible. June showed a fine increase, and July is starting out with the same promise."

Mr. Evans is from Chicago, and he admits missing the Lake breezes, but not to any great extent, and when we walked away he was just finishing a remark about thinking more of business than breezes any day.

D. E. Boswell is another newcomer to Film Row.

"Of course it's hot here," he said, "but not as hot as Kansas City, where I came from, and business is good with the Vitagraph."

We accepted Mr. Boswell's story about business being good, because we were becoming converted to the idea ourself by this time, but we rejected with scorn his statement that it never got as hot in Kansas City as it does in St. Louis. We simply won't allow that little upstart of a town to have anything on us at all! We're a bigger town and a better town and a hotter town than Kansas City any day in the year.

After this we talked to H. E. Elder, who came on here a few weeks ago to look after the General Exchange. Elder is from New York, where he managed the Fourth Avenue branch of the General Film Company. We thought maybe he might have something to say about St. Louis being a small town, like so many easterners do. But no, he said he liked our town, and he even liked our weather, because it seemed to be increasing the demand for film.

"Some of my wise New York friends told me St. Louis was a lemon," said Elder, "but if it is, it's a mighty juicy lemon as far as business is concerned. I like the town and I like the people."

Praise like this is praise indeed. We swelled with pride for our fair city, and did not subside until we got outside in the heat again, where we found that we needed all the room in our bosom for gasping purposes.

On the third floor of the Empress Building, Dodson of the Art Dramas confirmed the report that business was good and that the hot weather did not count. And S. J. Baker stopped superintending the furnishing of new Four-Square offices long enough to say:

"I never saw things look brighter, and as for the warm weather—it's nothing but a hot wind, that drives the people to the airdromes and the scientifically cooled houses, and that drives the exhibitors to us for films."

On the second floor, Charley Werner of the Metro, added to the general clamor.

Downstairs his brother Sam said, "Well, it's hard to explain, because it's unexpected, but it's a fact."

Jack Weil of World Features, stated the same thing in no uncertain terms, and Thomas of the Fox exchange pointed to a busy office as evidence of his statement to the same effect.

T. L. Morse of Selznick productions has found the weather such a stimulant to his activities that he is just making ready to take over the eastern half of Missouri as an addition to his territory in order to keep busy.

Joe Levy, yclept "Live Wire Joe," grew eloquent over the past and enthusiastic about the future of his Bluebirds, and said the hot weather didn't amount to a tin peddler's malediction.

Barney Rosenthal, seated in his office which has just been finished by the decorators with new paint, curtains and carpet until it looks like a bridal chamber, pushed the electric fan into high speed and claimed that he hadn't noticed the hot weather, "at least as far as business is concerned," he said. "The only effect it has had is to make business better. Butterflies always thrive in hot weather, you know."

G. W. McKean of Paramount added his quota of praise to business, and a statement to the same effect from Fred Keller of the Mutual exchange on Pine street, made it unanimous.

Barbee, Musician, Dies of Heart Trouble.

Louisville, Ky.—Edgar Barbee, 25 years of age, well known musician, who for the past three years has played large mechanical moving picture orchestras in leading local theaters, having been connected with the Strand, the Mary Anderson and other theaters, died last week following an attack of heart trouble.

Minneapolis News Letter.

Changes in Exchange Management.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—R. E. Bishop (the biggest film exchange manager in the West, 6 feet, 4½ inches, and still growing) resigned June 29 as boss of the local Triangle offices, and on June 30 Mendel "Manie" Gottlieb left the Favorite Feature Films Exchange for other world's to conquer. Mr. Bishop came to Minneapolis last fall from Escanaba, Mich., to succeed W. H. Stafford as manager of the Mutual exchange here. He came to the Triangle from the Mutual when R. E. Bradford left the later exchange. Mr. Bishop has not definitely decided his future, but it is expected that he will join the sales force of the local Greater Vitagraph exchange. Mr. Gottlieb, the youngest exchange manager in the Northwest, who has been in charge of the Favorite exchange for over a year, will probably open his own state rights exchange here within a short time.

City Council Bans Sunday Pictures.

Granite Falls, Minn.—Due to energetic efforts on the part of local ministers and women's clubs the city council has put a stop to the showing of photoplays on Sundays in the future. Baseball remains a big attraction on Sundays here, however.

Minnesota Business Notes.

St. Paul, Minn.—Manager George Granstrom, of the Strand, has contracted for first run Paramount in the future. He began his new policy Sunday, July 1, with Fannie Ward in "Her Strange Wedding."

St. Paul, Minn.—Manager Campbell, of the Blue Mouse, has extended the run of "Enlighten Thy Daughter" from one week to ten days. The first week's business far exceeded expectations.

St. Paul, Minn.—The New Princess, a Ruben & Finkelstein house, has booked Metro pictures for future showing, and began a four day run of Emmy Wehlen's "Sowers and Reapers" on Sunday, July 1. The New Majestic, after ousting pictures and putting in light musical comedy for one week, has returned to "pix" and reopened Sunday, July 1, with "Shackles of Truth," featuring William Russell.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager James A. Keough, of the Strand, has booked Mary Pickford's latest, "The Little American," for a week run, beginning July 15.

St. Paul, Minn.—Henry J. Breilein, owner of the Faust, Verdi and Victoria theaters here, celebrated his 34th birthday with a party of friends at Lake Josephine, near here, June 27. Mr. Breilein was presented with a stick pin by his guests. Everything from swimming to eating was on the program.

Miss Hazel Marie Wise, moving picture editor, has returned from a ten days' vacation in Chicago. Miss Wise admits she SAW the city.

Ben Rosenberg, former manager of the E. L. K. exchange, spent several days in the city last week visiting Manager Guy Crandall, of the Premier exchange.

Weldon Larabee, former booker of the Metro exchange, Minneapolis, has joined the Royal Flying Corps division of the Canadian Army.

J. J. McCarthy, Laemmle-Universal roadman, has brought his flivver into use in traveling through western Minnesota. With Messrs. Maas, Horn, McCarthy, Solly, Bryan, et al, traveling around by vehicle it certainly looks as if the film business is falling flat (?).

Sandstone, Minn.—J. S. Jacobson has taken over the management of the new United theater here.

Russell, Minn.—"The Deemster," Hall Caine's great story in film, broke all box office records at Grand opera house here, according to Manager R. E. Benson.

Indiana Items of Interest.

By Indiana Trade News Service 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

Speers Awarded Damages in Starland Suit.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Mr. and Mrs. Oscar V. Speer, of Seymour, Ind., were awarded $1,000 damages against Charles O. McNulty, formerly owner of the Starland theater, 114 West Market street, by a jury in Superior Court, Room 1, in Indianapolis, recently. The damage suit grew out of a deal involving the sale of the motion picture house a few months ago.

According to the testimony, the Speers owned a $4,000 equity in a large farm in Jackson County, and when shown the crowds that streamed into the Starland theater here they traded the equity for the theater. They testified in court that the apparently universal business they saw the place was doing at the time they made the trade was aggravated by complimentary tickets given by McNulty. They said the profits suddenly dropped from $60 a week to $10 a week.

Gem Theater Closed Except on Saturday.

Plymouth, Ind.—The Gem theater, a long time popular motion picture house here, closed its doors last week, and hereafter will be open only on Saturday nights and special occasions. As a result of this Plymouth is left with only one picture show, the Orpheum.

The managements of the two shows say there has been such a slump in patronage that they thought it best to serve the public with only one theater, rather than lower the standard of pictures, which they say would be necessary if both houses were opened nightly.

Reagan Closes Gem—Will Open House in Greencastle.

Columbus, Ind.—W. A. Reagan, owner of the Lyric theater, has closed down the house, and will remove all the fixtures to Greencastle, Ind., where he intends to open a moving picture theater within the next few weeks. He predicts that the future of moving pictures in Columbus promises no great returns, and gave this as his reason for closing the place. It is not known as yet whether or not the theater will be reopened under new management, but it is thought that it will not remain vacant long. This leaves only two motion picture houses in Columbus now.

Other Indiana News.

Montpelier, Ind.—The Star theater, which has been owned for the last eight months by H. L. Kelley, has been sold to W. E. Abshire, of Keystone, Ind. The consideration was $1,000. Mr. Kelley has been running the show on Saturday evening only, but Mr. Abshire will have it open each evening. J. N. Wilmore, of Montpelier, will manage the house for Mr. Abshire.

Newcastle, Ind.—The new Lyric theater was opened Saturday night in the Burr block, in the room formerly occupied by the Strand, under the management of J. D. West and his son, George. The interior has been prettily decorated, and a new projection machine installed.

Bristol, Ind.—The Mosier opera house will be converted into a motion picture theater for the summer months. The town officials have been invited to be the guests of the management at the first performance.

Churubusco, Ind.—J. S. Thompson, proprietor of the Busy Bee lunchroom, has purchased the Palace theater here from George Underhill, of Fort Wayne, and will take charge immediately. Mr. Thompson contemplates making several improvements.

Fluke Tax Law in North Carolina Holds

State Supreme Court Decides Law Must Be Operative as Signed—There Was an Error in Draft Given for Governor's Signature.

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—By an error of the engrossing clerk during the last session of the state legislature, North Carolina exhibitors are again compelled to pay county taxes under Schedule "B," although it was the intent and purpose of the legislative body to exempt them from such taxation. An amendment to the Machinery Act exempting theaters from taxation by the several counties when located in an incorporated town, passed both houses of the legislature, but through clerical error was ommitted from the engrossed copy which went to the printers. Appeals have been made to both the governor and the attorney general, the former recommending that individual managers ask for exemptions from their Boards of County commissioners, and in several instances this relief has already been granted.

The attorney general suggested that a test suit be brought to the Supreme Court, where relief was refused but it has since developed that the Supreme Court has previously settled this question in a similar case, where it was ruled by a vote of three to two that a law shall be effective as finally printed. In view of the fact that a strong minority report was filed by two of the members of the Supreme Court in this previous case, it is likely that another ruling will be tried for in the case of the picture theaters.

Universal Exchange Opens Temporary Office.

Charlotte, N. C.—The recent disastrous fire which completely destroyed the building in which the Universal Film Exchange was located has kept Manager E. F. Dardine busy for the past three weeks, but announcement is made that the exchange now has new supplies and accessories in full at the temporary offices in the McAden building over the Pathe offices. The big fireproof film vault, constructed two years ago under the direction of Manager Dardin, saved the films, the building having burned completely down, leaving the vault standing with all films intact. The fire originated in an adjoining building, and the books and records were saved before the exchange caught fire.

Princess Theater at Charlotte Reopens.

Charlotte, N. C.—The old Princess theater on West Trade street, one of the theatrical landmarks of Charlotte, reopened June 28 under the managership of Otto Hass, who also operates the Ottoway theater on Tryon street. The Princess has been remodeled at a cost of $10,000 by the new proprietor, and will play the largest motion picture attractions, opening with "Womanhood" for a three day run.

Greensboro, N. C.—Manager George W. Pryer has installed a $10,000 pipe organ in the Bijou theater and dispensed with an orchestra.

Raleigh, N. C.—The handsome Strand theater, erected a year ago and operated by the Aronson and Browne Amusement Enterprises, has been closed and turned back to the original owners after a somewhat fitful and unsuccessful run during which time feature picture, tabs and finally Keith vaudeville had had a try-out to poor business. The theater is probably the handsomest and best equipped in the state, but location on a side street kept it from being the success as a feature picture house that it otherwise would have undoubtedly proven.

Army Cantonment Stimulates Business.

Fayetteville, N. C.—This town, which up to thirty days ago, provided but poor encouragement for two picture theaters, bids fair to have at least a half dozen within the next sixty days, since its selection as one of the Cantonment training camps, with the expectation that it will house the largest bunch of recruits of any camp in the South, approximately fifty thousand in all, besides the officers, friends and families of the soldiers and other transients which the camp will attract here. Two hours after the announcement that Fayetteville would get a camp, H. T. Drake, owner of the Strand Theater, had closed a contract for the lease of the old LaFayette Theater, which will be converted into a combination feature picture and tabloid house to open within the next two weeks. Other parties have closed deals for several vacant stores in the down town section and even for vacant lots, on which tents will be erected to provide amusement for the thousands of soldiers which will throng the place along about August or September. The old Lyric Theater will also probably be re-opened upon the starting of work on the camps, which will immediately bring a small army of workmen to the town.

Royal to Change Its Policy.

Wilmington, N. C.—Announcement is made by the Howard-Wells Amusement Company that its Royal Theater on North Front Street, which has been playing tabloid since last October, will close these attractions on July 21 and after closing a week will re-open on July 30 with two and three day runs of big feature productions for the Summer months.

Will Attend National Convention.

Wilmington, N. C.—Percy W. Wells, president of the Exhibitors' League of North Carolina, with Messrs. D. M. Bain and B. H. Stephens, all of this city, left Tuesday, July 10 for Chicago to attend the National Convention and Exposition. Messrs. Wells, Bain and Stephens went ahead of the other delegates in order that all arrangements can be made before the opening of the convention, for the presentation of Henry B. Varner, secretary of the North Carolina League for National President.

Great Atlantic Exchange to Move.

Wilmington, N. C.—Marx S. Nathan, manager of the Great Atlantic Feature Film Exchange, announces that within the near future he will move into larger and more conveniently situated downtown offices to take care of his rapidly growing business throughout the Carolinas and Virginia.

Membership of New Organization Increasing

All But Two of the Large Film Exchanges in San Francisco Are Affiliated—These May Join—Many Exhibitors File Applications—Organization Rapidly Becoming Representative.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The recently organized United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California is making rapid progress in securing new members, and it is stated that all but two of the large film exchanges of this city have become affiliated with it, with these in line to join. Many exhibitors, both local and out of town, have filed applications for membership, and the organization is rapidly becoming a representative one. Many new members from the country districts are expected as soon as the warm weather comes to an end and exhibitors commence to come to town to arrange for fall and winter service.

A number of efforts along the line of organization have been made here during the past few years, but the only effective one was that maintained by the film exchange interests. Both distributors and exhibitors have come to a realization that in the end their interests are identical, and the leading men in both branches of the business are the organizers of the new movement. The first meeting since the election of officers took place on the second Wednesday in July.

Tableau and Pictures Combined.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Imperial theater recently presented an interesting combination of tableau and moving pictures that has proved to be an attractive drawing card, notwithstanding the fact that it is also an advertisement for a local mercantile firm. The novel staging and use of pictures made the act seem more like a regular theater attraction than a showing of merchandise.

The act opened with moving pictures showing models on the local beach in bathing costumes, and at intervals several of them stepped through concealed doors in the screen and apeared in person on the stage. The climax was reached when two of them appeared in the picture to be starting down a long chute headed for the audience, each breaking through the screen, through a hole covered with paper, when they reached the bottom, and advancing to the front of the stage. Another scene showed the breakers on an Hawaiian beach, while in the foreground the live models sported on the sand in the latest of beach costumes, the feature of this being the clever merging of the stage setting with the moving picture. The models sang and danced, and later paraded the aisles.

Colored Pictures at Red Cross Benefit.

San Rafael, Cal.—The natural color moving pictures made by Leon F. Douglas were shown at a Red Cross benefit at the Elks' Club on the evening of June 27, about seven hundred persons being present. The pictures included scenes in the Yosemite Valley and in some of the gardens of Los Angeles, in which were shown several moving picture stars, including Mary Pickford, Louise Huff and Douglas Fairbanks.

New Manager for General Branch.

San Francisco, Cal.—Harry Schmidt, who has been connected with the local branch of the General Film Company for several years, has been appointed manager, succeeding H. H. Hicks, who recently retired. He states that in spite of unsettled conditions the business of this exchange has shown a fine increase during the past two months. Emmick Advocates Open Market Policy.

E. H. Emmick.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. H. Emmick, head of the Peerless Film Service, 100 Golden Gate avenue, and 802 South Olive street, Los Angeles, is one of the pioneer distributors of moving picture films on the Pacific Coast, having entered this field more than seven years ago. Coming from Denver, he opened an office for the National Film Distributing Company, the third organization of this kind to engage in business here. Of those who were engaged in the film rental business when he opened an office but one is still actively identified with the industry, Morris L. Markowitz, of the California Film Exchange.

From the beginning Mr. Emmick has been a staunch supporter of the open market policy, and has never handled anything except independent goods sold on a state rights basis. At times, when he first entered the field, there was but very little for an independent buyer to secure, and for quite a period a single reel a month was all he could hope to buy. He feels that the market is becoming an open one, and that after it becomes such in reality it will remain that way.

One of the first to engage in the purchase of state rights, Mr. Emmick is now blazing a way in the distribution of comedy films, and is one of the first to make a specialty of handling comedy offerings. He has bought most of the comedies offered on the open market in this territory, and his exchange is now popularly known as the "House of Comedies."

Mr. Emmick has an unusually wide acquaintance among exhibitors, for in addition to his long experience in the business he divides his time between the local exchange and the Los Angeles branch. Realizing that the business is getting down to a commercial basis more and more he has striven to build up an efficient organization, and has made many innovations in the distribution of film to prevent waste. He expresses the belief that with so many productions now on the market competition will continue to be keen, and that the organization equipped to do business on the lowest margin of profit will be the one to survive.

Written by a Cincinnati man, it is said to have been produced in its original form several years ago in Chicago, as a play, under the name of "The First Brother." At that time it was condemned because it portrayed a Russian revolution similar to that which took place recently, and was not considered proper in its reflections on a friendly nation. As rewritten, however, it is said to be of a highly patriotic nature, and it is to be presented to the Government for official approval.

SELIG.

IN THE AFRICAN JUNGLE (Two Parts).—The cast: Robert Wayne (Edwin Wallock); Edith, his daughter (Kathlyn Williams); Capt. Jones (Wm. Stowell). Written and produced by E. A. Martin.

Robert Wayne, dazed by a blow, loses his identity and becomes a wild man in the African jungle. His wife and daughter seventeen years later in England think frequently of the husband and father, whose life they believe was taken by savage natives in South Africa. Wayne, wandering in the jungle, becomes possessed of a strange power over wild animals. Captain Jones, a British sportsman, encounters the wild man and the photograph Jones took is recognized in England by Edith Wayne as that of her father. A rescue party is formed.

Savages capture both Wayne and his daughter, Edith, who has returned to Africa. Knowing of Wayne's influence over beasts, the Chief determines to throw him into the wild animal pit. The girl is marked for a like fate.

Captain Jones, who has led the party into Africa in search of Robert Wayne, discovers that Edith has been taken prisoner by the savages. With a party of English hunters he rushes to her rescue. They defeat the savages and arrive at the African village in time to witness the domination of Robert Wayne over jungle beasts. Wayne recovers his intellect when he sees Edith and recognizes her as his own beloved daughter.

CHECKMATE (One Reel).—The cast: John Strong (Guy Oliver); Vivian Carew (Stella Razeto); Hal Dana (Alva D. Blake); William Clark (Jack McDonald). Written by Wallace C. Clifton. Directed by Edward J. Le Saint.

John Strong and his adopted son, Hal, are inveterate chess players. Hal, en route to a summer resort, meets Vivian Carew, an unscrupulous woman. Discovering that Hal is the adopted son of John Strong, a man of wealth, the woman resolves to fascinate the boy. John Strong arrives on the scene. The woman has progressed with her wiles.

William Clark, a friend of Strong's, tells him that Miss Carew has had an unsavory past. Strong does all he can to persuade his adopted son to cast aside the woman, but the boy is too infatuated with the woman to listen. Then Strong takes a hand in life's chess game. He visits Vivian Carew and when she refuses to listen to his pleas to throw over the boy, he tells her of his knowledge of her past. It is Checkmate for the woman, who immediately takes passage for Japan. Then it is that Strong and the boy resume their chess games.

RAY COMEDIES.

"MUGGSY IN BAD." The cast: Muggsy (Johnny Ray); Mrs. Muggsy (Emma Ray).

Muggsy Spiffles, a kindhearted chap, who is physically a weakling, is bullied by his two hundred pound spouse. He takes Lydia Pickens medicine for weak men while his wife eats a dozen eggs at a sitting. Mrs. Spiffles learns that rolling will reduce her weight. She forces Muggsy to roll her until he collapses. He flees from the house only to be struck by an auto. Bill, a brawny cop, carries the stricken Muggsy to a hospital. In order to save his life the cop volunteers to give his blood and the transfusion takes place. The effect is wonderful. Muggsy becomes a veritable Hercules. The cop sinks into a semi coma and is just able to drag himself about. Muggsy licks several rough necks, only to be greeted by a flat iron from his wife. After several attempts with a poker, stick and other weapons, his wife discovers she is afraid of the new "Muggsy." In the meantime Bill the cop seeks the aid of a brother officer. They go to Muggsy's home and the friend demands that the borrowed blood be returned to the weak policeman. A doctor is called, and the blood is given back. Mrs. Spiffles, who has watched the operation with much interest, suddenly becomes "wise." She seizes the now once more half dying Muggsy and leads him by the ear to the kitchen where he resumes his usual washing of the dishes.

"A LAUNDRY MIX UP."—Casey is employed as foreman of a gang of bricklayers. On his way to work he meets his friend the cop and sergeant in front of Won Lung's laundry. Smoke is coming from over the transom and all suspect the place is an opium joint.

At noon Casey starts to eat lunch seated between a "Dutchman" and an Italian, and between the odor of cheese and garlic, Casey promptly faints. A walking delegate informs Casey to strike. Casey calls his men and tells them to leave the job. He goes home and sees a "for sale" sign on the Chinese laundry. Casey tells his wife and they purchase the laundry. To keep up appearance both Casey and his wife don Chinese apparel. Customers enter and Casey and his wife give them any old bundle that comes to hand first. Mrs. Casey sends her husband out on an errand. A gang of roughs mistake Casey for a real Chinee and start to have some fun. A cow boy throws a lasso around Casey's neck. Suddenly the rope breaks sending Casey and the gang sprawling. Casey returns to the laundry just as patrons to whom he has given the wrong laundry return and demand that he rectify the mistake. Casey in disgust turns over the entire stock, bidding them find their own.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

"A DEPARTMENTAL CASE" (One Of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Luke Standifer (Charles Kent); Benton Sharp (Carlton King); Amanda Colvin (Mary Cunningham). Directed by Martin Justice.

Luke Coonrod Standifer, a stern but warmhearted old pioneer Texan, has been appointed Commissioner of Insurance, Statistics and History, and though his knowledge of these subjects is meager, he sets about his task conscientiously. One day Luke is surprised in his office by the visit of a young but faded woman who came for state relief. Luke discovers she is the daughter of an old friend, Amos Colvin, and that her husband is the notorious "bad man" Benton Sharp. Benton had insured his life, paying a year's premiums in advance. Amos Colvin had died, meanwhile, and Sharp had immediately sold and gambled away the small holding Colvin left. Afterward he struck Amanda because she could not comply with his demand for more money.

Luke becomes agitated and righteously indignant. Leaving Amanda he enters the office of the Treasurer, "Uncle Frank," a great friend of his. Luke learns none of the state appropriation can be secured for Amos Colvin's child without a lot of red tape. He returns and asks Amanda to call in two days. He learns before he leaves that Sharp is in San Antonio. Taking from a locker a curious holster and revolver, he sits down to think.

Two days later Luke is smoking in his office when the Treasurer hustles in with a newspaper, and calls attention to a paragraph which states Benton Sharp has been shot in a restaurant by Luke Standifer, who had clumsily dropped his hat on Sharp's head, Sharp at once becoming ugly and reaching for his gun. The paper says such a wonderful exhibition of quick gun play as Luke's had never been seen in the South West. Luke modestly admits the adventure and a few minutes later Amanda calls and receives the $5,000 insurance and the assurance of having obtained a noble friendship. Luke remarks, "You see, Amanda, Statistics and History were so bound up in red tape that missed fire, but we came out particularly strong on insurance."

JAXON COMEDIES.

"THE PEARLS OF PAULINE" (Pokes and Jabs Comedy).—Pokes is quite a pool shark, and at the club gives a demonstration of his skill to the amazement of the other members. Jabs, the newly appointed Chief of Police, puts his wife and two daughters into an auto and starts them off on a motoring tour. Before going Mrs. Jabs leaves her valuable pearl necklace with her husband for safe keeping. During the pool game, Billy Berlin, one of the members, rushes in with a copy of the daily paper and shows the members, including Pokes, the defy the new chief has published for the benefit of honest people and the downfall of the crooks. Pokes takes it as a joke, and discounts the ability of Jabs to do what he has promised. Pokes wagers Jabs a cold twenty that he can get anything any time, any place. Jabs goes at once to the club where he meets Pokes. Producing the pearl necklace Jabs wagers that he will place the necklace in a certain house and defies Pokes to find it and bring it to the club.

The necklace is placed and Pokes starts out to get it. After thrilling experiences and hair breadth escapes Pokes is cornered in the cellar of the house by the chief and a squad of officers. They search him, but fail to find the necklace. Pokes, with a smile, leads the chief back to the club followed by the others. There Pokes takes off a wig which no one knew he wore, produces the necklace, and claims the reward. Much to Pokes' surprise the "chief" removes a false mustache, and remarks calmly, "I am not Jabs." Pokes, nonplussed, tries to sneak away when Jabs appears from behind a chair, where he has watched the whole affair, and meets Pokes.

The laugh is on Pokes, and while he stands there ashamed and thinking that honesty is the best policy, Jabs, with the necklace in his hand, gives him the laugh. A great metamorphosis takes place, which causes Jabs to remark, "Darwin was right."

KALEM.

A DOUBLE DECEPTION (An epside of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree"—Two Parts).—The cast: "Stingaree" (True Boardman); Howie (Hal Clements); William Wilshin (Frederick Vroom); Rita Wilshin (Edythe Sterling); Albert Deana (Richard Carlyle); Vernon Blackshawe (Tom Walsh).

Having held up a stage and intercepted mail, "Stingaree" learns that the Branch Bank at Yallarook expects a new assistant cashier, Blackshawe. "Stingaree" and his pal, Howie, hold up the stage upon which Blackshawe is arriving, and Stingaree captures the man and changes clothes with him, intending to impersonate him and rob the bank.

At the bank he finds Manager Wilshin's daughter, a romantic girl, who had made an imaginative hero of "Stingaree." He attempts to get her out of her foolish fancy. Out riding, the girl, Rita, meets Blackshawe, who has escaped from Howie dressed in "Stingaree's clothes, and she supposes him to be the outlaw. The latter, amused, decides to carry off the part. Going to the bank with Rita, he pretends to hold it up. He might have succeeded in thus making an accidental capture of the real "Stingaree" had not Howie made an appearance in the guise of a mounted policeman and undertaken the responsibility of taking "Stingaree" to jail.

The two actual outlaws lock up Blackshawe in a cell. Rita pleads with the "captors" to let the prisoner go since she is in love with him. The real "Stingaree," seeing that she is in love with Blackshawe for himself and not merely because she believes him to be the gentleman bandit, undertakes to do this. It is close work, since they are surprised by a returning posse of troopers. Yet "Stingaree" makes himself known, gets away in spite of it, and leaves the young pair a note directing them where to find money he had abstracted from the bank vault while posing as the new cashier.

THE POISONED CUP (An episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree"—Two Parts). —The cast: "Stingaree" (True Boardman); "Howie" (Paul C. Hurst); Fred Spurling (Hal Clements); Alice Spurling (Edythe Sterling); Harry Coutherton (Tom Walsh); Patrick O'Mara (G. A. Williams); Ah Sing (Ah Wing).

Tired of bachelor meals cooked by his pal, Howie, "Stingaree" dons his best attire and announces he is going out to dine as an uninvited guest wherever he can find the best cover. He chances upon the home of Spurling, wealthy squatter and amateur taxidermist, and enters. His reputation for daring awes the household, but he makes them feel at ease, and Alice, the wife, sees that he is set a place at table, and has a social evening with music and chat.

Coutherton and O'Mara, attaches of the ranch, return, and are forced at pistol's point to become meek members of the party. Coutherton has brought arsenic from town for the treatment of furs and he plots with the Chinese cook to poison "Stingaree's" tea, but the latter becomes aware of it. "Stingaree" causes a fright by changing cups with Mrs. Spurling, but prevents her drinking it when the others rise to overpower him. Coutherton in the confusion manages to get away to call the mounted police. They arrive only to be surprised by "Stingaree" and locked in a room. The Sand Dow family are at breakfast. The janitor, called by his alarm clock, to which he had attached a feather which tickled his feet, slept undernearth the tank in the gym and had a trap door through which he emerged. Gladys was the belle of the ladies' department, and Al of the men's. Sand Dow flirted with the girls, and Mrs. with the men. At last each had an idea. They called the janitor and told him to bring disguises in which they would look like each other. When they emerged even the janitor was completely fooled.

It was too hot so they closed the gym and went to the beach. San Dow had a wonderful time with the girls, and Mrs. had a lovely time with the men. But the sweethearts were each planning a chance to get together. Each party got into swimming suits as quickly as possible. The men had brought a lunch, but the girls had none, so San Dow decided to go fishing. He used his own carcass for bait, and came up with fishes hanging on his person. The janitor was instructed to cook the fish, and the girls sat down to wait. The other party was lunching, and the janitor got mixed and threw the fish to the men instead of the girls. San Dow went to remonstrate and recognized his wife. He snatched Gladys and ran. Mrs. decoys Al. He opens a sandwich and puts sand in it, giving it to her. As she sputters he makes a getaway and rejoins Gladys. San Dow comes up and fights Al, while Mrs. fights him for Al. The husband and wife recognize each other. Dan beats it with Gladys and Mrs. follows. After a chase, the picture ends in a pie fight.

has its Movie Houses in harmony with the surroundings. The progressive management of the Turner and Dahnken Circuit were convinced that the best results from the film could not be secured by using alternating current. They installed a Westinghouse Motor-Generator Set to transform the alternating current into direct current and are getting satisfactory results. These sets enable the operator to project clear, steady pictures.

Westinghouse Motor-Generator Sets are easy to install. There is nothing complicated in their construction or operation. They give constant voltage over a wide range of load, which is very important for "fading in," as it enables the operator to "warm up" his second arc without affecting the brilliancy of the first.

THE CAR OF CHANCE (Five Parts—July 10).—The cast: Arnold Baird (Franklyn Farnum); Ruth Bennett (Brownie Vernon); Mrs. Bennett (Helen Wright); Wanda Heimstone (Molly Malone); James Bennett (Mark Fenton); Wm. Mott-Smith (H. J. Bennett); Israel Heimstone (Walter Belasco): Tom Nolan (Harry De More). Story by Waldeman Young. Directed by Wm. Worthington.

Only a seven-passenger motor and $100, to be spent exclusively for gasoline or repairs, was Arnold Baird's share of his father's property. Light-hearted by nature, Baird made the most of his legacy and started a "jitney bus" line.

When James Bennett, general manager of the Consolidated Traction Co., learned Baird had been practically cut off in his father's will, he informed Baird that his daughter would never marry a pauper and to go out and make his fortune. Bennett's decision suited Mrs. Bennett, who was eager to shine in society and planned to gain her ends by marrying Ruth to Wm. Mott-Smith, who controlled the traction company.

When Ruth got the chance to tell Mr. Mott-Smith what she thought of him, she left no room for doubt. Ruth met Baird secretly and she was first to know of Baird's jitney-bus plans.

Israel Heimstone, leader of organized labor, decided that the employees of the Consolidated Traction Co. deserved an increase in pay. Bennet refused Heimstone's demands and the labor leader called Baird into consultation. Heimstone's daughter, Wanda, employed as stenographer by Mr. Mott-Smith, furnished inside information that showed the weakness of Bennett's defense.

The car strike was called and traffic paralyzed. The next morning the "Social Rapid Transit Company" sprang into operation. Mott-Smith, Bennett and their associates were filled with consternation. Baird's pals in society entered their cars for public patronage and "jitney bused" the traction company to its knees.

When strike-breakers were called in there was nobody to ride—for the public preferred the limousines. When Bennett cried for mercy, Baird was the intermediary. Fate decreed that Baird should be the one to rush to Mott-Smith's office to rescue Wanda Heimstone from the clutches of the drunken society leper.

Settling with Bennett was no hard matter for Baird. His terms were $10,000 a year for becoming assistant general manager and six months' vacation to enjoy a honeymoon on which Ruth was to be the bride.

THE MESSAGE OF THE MOUSE (Five Parts July 9). The cast. Wynn Winthrop (Anita Stewart); Marcia Elmore (Julia Swayne Gordon); Paul Adams (Rudolph Cameron); Hallam Varrie (L. Rogers Lytton); Henry Winthrop (Franklyn Hanna); Daniel Concord (Robert Gaillard); Valet (Bernard Seigel). Written by G. R. and Lillian Chester. Directed by J. Stuart Blackton.

Five foreign ambassadors, representing as many bankrupt nations, formulate a plan to divert capital from America for use in rebuilding their countries. The conspirators' hopes lie in winning Henry Winthrop and his associates over to an international steamship trust, offering unprecedented concessions as bait. As a preliminary, they seek to learn the plans of the American syndicate and employ an unscrupulous intriguer, Hallam Varrie, known as "The Lily."

Varrie has spies obtain employment as servants in the Winthrop household. He then contrives to be invited as a guest, using Marcia Elmore, a woman confederate for his sponsor The last night of the house party, Varrie has a Winthrop shipyard, nearby, blown up and, under cover of the excitement, obtains the plan.

Part of a message Varrie had written to his confederate was picked up by a mouse and carried into the room of Wynn. It bore the sign of the lily and words that were a mystery.

Varrie and the ambassadors proceed with their scheme and to win Winthrop and his associates, who begin withdrawing their capital from scores of institutions they control. Panic, labor riots and bank runs ensue. Wynn pleads with her father to check the disaster. He refuses, believing he is performing a patriotic duty.

That night the mouse appears again and it recalls to Wynn the mysterious paper and the explosion. She goes to the secret service and tells the chief of suspicion that the explosion was connected with the economic disasters. At his suggestion she has another house party. By watching Varrie and the woman, she learns they are the conspirators, and, to get proof, pretends to fall in love with Varrie. She goes to his home and while hidden sees him manipulate a secret wireless.

When Varrie goes out she gets her proofs. Winthrop and his associates, told of the plot just as they had been about to sign over their money, then learn of the great service the girl has rendered her country.

One day at the club father came in contact with "Speed" Cannon and was so impressed with the effect his presence had upon people, that he determined to try an experiment.

The alternations of the current in an alternating current arc cause the light to flicker. This flickering is made more noticeable on the screen if the shutter is not working properly.

Better projection means pleased patrons; pleased patrons mean increased profits.

The direct current arc can be arranged so that maximum amount of its light always passes through the lens, while it is impossible to do this with an alternating arc. Any operator who has used both will tell you that the best results can only be obtained by using direct current.

It produces that steady, restful light so much desired. A Westinghouse Cooper Hewitt Mercury Rectifier will change your alternating current into direct, thereby producing the desired results.

gets him to his palatial home. As they arrive a burglar has terrorized its women occupants. "Speed" proves a hero, but Susan evinces only a passing interest. "Speed," however, is smitten with the languorous Susan, and welcomes the opportunity of seeing her again.

"Speed's" courtship is as fast as he is himself. After two weeks he manages to smuggle Susan away from a reception in honor of Count Englantine. He secures her consent to their marriage, but she shows so little interest "Speed" is nonplussed. She is discovered by mother, who whisks her to the Count, who proposes. Susan puts him off. "Speed" again finds her and proposes that they elope. Susan thinks that would be romantic. Father lends his aid; but it is unavailing, for Susan is so slow that mother discovers her. "Speed" is all broken up, but father has a tip on the market, and his woes are forgotten as he talks over the details with "Speed."

Next day "Speed" starts father's stock movement. Susan dismisses the Count and writes "Speed," declaring her love. The maid gets the notes mixed. "Speed" is broken-hearted and sends an attendant for a gun, while the Count dashes to Susan. She quickly disillusions him and dashes in search for "Speed." She finds him in time to prevent his killing himself—with an empty gun. She whisks him back to the office. Father hikes to the office with a minister. Mother, becoming suspicious, visits the office where the ceremony is being performed. Father holds her long enough to have Susan and "Speed" married. Mother is sore until she learns father's fortune has been augmented and accepts "Speed" because he made it possible.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymont L. Ditmars—The Pigmy Circus—July 2). —In this picture the very small types of wild creatures figure as the performers, but they appear as large as trained elephants. The capers of the "On-and-Off-Again Brothers"—two tree-toads on a slack wire, which first demonstrate eccentric rope climbing feats—are screamingly funny. There is an insect quadrille and Oriental dancers from the beetle legions of tropical India. Human acrobatic feats are paralleled by Nature's performers and the scenes incidentally teach a lesson in the display of strange types of animal life.

WORLD PICTURES.

THE BELOVED ADVENTURESS (Five Parts—July 16).—The cast: Juliette La Monde (Kitty Gordon); Robert Nicholson (Jack Drumier); Mrs. La Monde (Inez Shannon); Francine (seven years old) (Madge Evans); Francine (seventeen years old) (Lillian Cook); Doctor Stewart (Robert Forsyth); Jan Moritz (Edward Elkas); Morgan Grant (Frederick Truesdell); Philip Stewart (William Sherwood); Martha Grant (Pinnna Nesbit); Critic (R. Payton Gibbs). Directed by Wm. Brady.

Juliette La Monde, the musical comedy star, admired by men, loves Morgan Grant, who has grown weary of married life. Grant demands a divorce from his wife, Martha, but her religion prevents her giving him his freedom. She leaves, promising he will never see her.

Mrs. Nicholson, Juliette's mother, always dreams and prays for her. Robert, her husband, a stern Englishman, is not in sympathy with his wife where Juliette, his stepdaughter is concerned. Francine, his seven-year-old daughter, has no knowledge of her grown up sister. Mrs. Nicholson becomes ill. Dr. Stewart divines the reason for her sinking health.

On the opening night of a new review, Dr Stewart calls Juliette to be present at her mother's death. At her mother's home her cruel stepfather denies her right to be there. Francine has decked herself in the cloak left by Juliette. A week later he sails for England. Juliette recovers from a severe illness.

Ten years pass. Juliette is constant to Grant. She expresses gratitude for having made her happy, but his ardor is beginning to cool. In England Francine attends a convent. Martha, a teacher in the convent, has never spoken of her sorrow. She becomes friendly with Francine. Juliette writes her stepfather asking him to send Francine to her so that she may make amends by her devotion. Amy Barker, an American girl, gives accounts of gay life that awaken in Francine a desire to "really live." Arriving at her father's home she finds him dead from a stroke of apoplexy brought on by his fury at Juliette's daring to write. Reading the letter, Francine realizes Juliette is her sister, and decides to go to her.

Juliette makes radical changes in her mode of living. She sends Grant away. When Grant revolts she reminds him Francine is only a little girl. Amy Barker introduces Francine to the younger smart set as well as to the ritual of cocktail drinking. Juliette awaits Francine. She is happy in her ability to be kind to her.

Dr. Stewart's son, Philip, who has won honors at West Point, becomes interested in Francine. Several months later Grant comes upon Francine. He introduces himself as an old friend of Juliette, and is surprised to find her a beautiful girl, instead of the noisy gawk he had expected. When Grant complains to Juliette of her changed behavior she tells him the responsibility of bringing up a little sister has changed her. When she intimates that she is looking forward to a match between Francine and Philip he calls Juliette a fool. She tells him marriage is the sweetest lot of a woman, for then she can have children.

A few days later Juliette is shocked to find that Francine has been smoking, but Francine responds that Amy and all smart girls smoke and drink. Francine thinks herself far above the love of such men as Philip. Philip is heartbroken. Juliette comes upon Francine puffing at Grant's cigarette. After sending Francine to dress, Juliette embraces Grant, and is shocked to find that he is indifferent to her caress.

Amy tells Francine about Juliette's past. Juliette sees Morgan kissing Francine. She intercepts a note from Morgan saying he expects Francine at his apartment at four. Francine tells Juliette she has no right to advise a young girl, in view of her own past.

Grant dismisses his servants for the day. Juliette locks Francine in her room and goes to Grant's apartment. When Grant accuses her of jealousy she tells him love for him and duty to Francine prompted her action. Juliette is willing to let Grant marry Francine if he will secure a divorce, but he says a man of his type could never remarry. She wants him to write Francine that he will never see her again. When he refuses, she shoots him. Overcome by remorse she pleads for forgiveness.

Realizing his love for Juliette, Grant writes a confession indicating that he is tired of living. Before he dies Grant asks Juliette's forgiveness. Juliette tells Francine of Grant's death, and though she seems overcome, sorrow leaves but a slight scar on her heart. She later accepts Philip. Somewhere in France is Juliette. As a Red Cross nurse she has occasion, at the sacrifice of her own life, to save Martha. Before she dies Juliette is forgiven by Martha.

CHRIS AND THE WONDERFUL LAMP (Conquest Program No 1 Edison—Four Reels—July 14).—Chris, a student, ambitious in his own way but resisting tutors, was always in trouble until, at an auction sale, he purchased an old Oriental lamp because of its odd design, not dreaming that it was possessed of magical powers which he discovered when he began polishing it. A huge slave appeared, told him the lamp was his master and that he was prepared to obey any command that its owner, Chris, might give.

As a test Chris bade the slave to transform himself into another Chris. He then sent the double of himself to school, where he was made to take the thrashings intended for Chris and to serve as the butt of many jokes and experiences meant for the real Chris.

When the genie finally decides that he does not relish serving as Chris' double, the real trouble and fun begins, involving Chris' father and mother, teachers, family doctor, and farcical mix-ups develop with great rapidity.

The doings of "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp" in the days of the Twentieth Century rival the best of Arabian Night tales.

THE LUCK OF ROARING CAMP (Conquest Program No. 1—Edison—Two Reels—July 14). —A half-breed woman, ill, totters into Roaring Camp, a mining settlement where no woman had ever been. In a few hours she was dead, but left a reminder, an infant, who in a few years dominated these gold seekers. Her childish affections, however, went out to a gambler of the mining camp and from that grows a stirring tale such as only Western mining camps can provide and as only Bret Harte could describe.

SKYLARKING ON SKIIS (On Same Reel as Foregoing).—A rare sport in countries where steep hills and much snow make this dangerous game possible.

HE COULDN'T GET UP IN THE MORNING (Conquest Program No 1--Edison—July 14).—Jonah Morpheus liked his bed so well that it was almost impossible to get him up in the morning. The schemes utilized to get him out of bed provide a laugh in every foot of this film. In the finale Jonah is for once landed at his work on time, but in a most unusual unnatural manner.

CAPTAINS OF TOMORROW (On Same Reel as Foregoing).—This picture shows our future captains at drills and manoeuvres at West Point Acaremy, afoot and on horse. It is surcharged with American spirit, thrilling and inspirational.

THE RANGE BOSS (Essanay—Five Parts—July [illegible]).—The cast: Rex Randerson (Jack Gardner); Ruth Harkness (Ruth King); Willard Masten (Carl Stockdale). Written and directed by W. S. VanDyke.

Out of the elite and civilized East into the rough and primitive West there comes a little party which [illegible] the desert must be larger than all New York, and their trail a little longer than the Gay White Way. Ruth Harkness, who has inherited the Flying W ranch from a relative, heads the timid little band. A prim and conventional aunt and uncle and Willard Masten, her fiance, all dolled up according to his Fifth avenue tailor's ideas of the West, accompany her.

Headlong the little party plunges into the meshes of a conspiracy of two cowboys to mulct the girl of her holdings. Rex Randerson, a happy-go-lucky ranger with a clear-gray eye, steps in to frustrate the plot, and incidentally falls in love with Ruth. This enrages Masten, who joins the conspirators and extends their plot to include Randerson's death. The girl and the ranger are caught in their "death trap" and count themselves lost, but the fearlessness of Rex in a single-handed battle with the villains saves the day. Ruth thanks him by consenting to become his bride, and an old-fashioned cowboy wedding ends the dark adventure.

WHEN SORROW WEEPS ("Do Children Count?"—Two Parts—July 18).—The cast: Rags (Little Mary McAlister); Chris Busby (John Cossar); Caroline Busby (Mabel Bardine).

Rags, a penniless orphan, flees from child welfare workers and an orphan asylum. Simultaneously, Caroline Busby, whose husband is a crook, regrets her past and starts for another city. The child and the woman meet and decide to begin life over again together. They are happy for a time; then the woman's husband locates her and demands protection from the police. Caroline wants to live straight and turns her husband over to detectives. He accuses her as his accomplice. The couple and the child are arrested. Busby is sent to prison, and his wife discharged. The judge, at the protest of the philanthropists, orders the child to an orphan asylum. Grief-stricken over this loss, Caroline hurls herself into a river.

ARTCRAFT PICTURES CORP.

THE LITTLE AMERICAN (June—Six Parts).—Scenario by Cecid B. DeMille and Jeannie Macpherson. Produced by Cecil B. DeMille.

Angela More's birthday is the Fourth of July. Count Jules De Destin, an attache of the French embassy, appears with a bouquet of red, white and blue flowers, but Angela's interest is centered in Karl Von Austreim, a German-American. Karl, to please his father, has been educated in Germany, and received his military training in the German army.

Jules is about to propose, when the butler announces Karl. He has a box of candy to which is fastened a silk American flag, and the candy is arranged in the same design. Jules realizes he has lost, and after he has retired Karl proposes. He has just been accepted when he is summoned to meet a man who insists upon seeing him. The stranger tells him to report in Germany at once.

Karl, unable to explain, asks Angela to wait for him. One day Jules tells her France and Germany are at war, and Angela is horrified, but relieved at her understanding of Karl's departure. Angela has an aunt in France in the town of Vangy. The aunt lost her grandson in battle, and writes Angela's father asking that she be sent to bring her and her family back to America.

Angela writes to Karl, and departs on one of the largest ocean liners. The captain receives word that they are nearing the submarine zone, and orders everything darkened. A German spy leaves two port holes open; the lights are seen by the commander of a submarine, who fires. The boat slowly fills and lists. The ball room is flooded. Angela finally reaches the deck. She gives her life preserver to an older woman and jumps into the water. Coming to the surface she sees an empty raft and pulls herself on board. The next morning she is picked up by a patrol boat. Karl receives the letter, and is making merry in a captured French home when they receive the news of the torpedoing of the Veritania. Karl is horror stricken. The captain commands that they drink to the commander of the submarine.

Angela's aunt passes away a short time before Angela arrives. The French commander warns that the Germans are approaching, and Angela and her women servants are preparing to depart when the French bring their wounded into the chateau. Angela refuses to leave. Her servants remain with her. Jules arranges with a spy to have a telephone hidden in the chateau. He encounters Angela, who is heartbroken to find he has lost his right arm in battle. He explains she can do a great service if she will permit the spy to serve as butler. Angela consents. She does her best to look after the French wounded, and entertains them. Soon the Germans come. They fire into the dwelling, killing the spy, and batter down the door.

Angela protests that the chateau is the residence of American citizens, and shows her flag. Realizing her beauty, several of the officers start for her, and she flees. Angela dashes into a darkened room, Karl follows. Believing Angela has been drowned Karl forgets his manliness and is about to force a kiss, when his elbow hits the electric switch and the sweethearts stand face to face. Angela is horrified—Karl humiliated. He explains he believed her dead; she demands that he protect her women servants. Karl explains that he cannot give orders to his superiors. The commanding officer arrives, makes her remove and dry his muddy boots. Karl secures a pass for Angela, but she sees a line of peasants fall before a firing squad, and tears up her pass, announcing that she will remain.

She creeps to the fire place and telephons Jules where the German guns are placed. The French wreck one of the big Howitzers. The second shot hits close to another, and the colonel realizes some one is telephoning the range. Karl finds the wire outlet, and discovers Angela. He urges her to flee. The colonel is knocking at the door, Angela realizes if Karl lets her go, he will be shot, so she pulls down her hair and pretends to struggle. The men believe Karl has captured her and he is congratulated.

By a court martial Angela is ordered shot because she refuses to reply to the German third degree. Karl revolts. He flings his sword at the feet of the Colonel and says—"I am done with you and your Emperor. I was blind to your system—now, thank God, I see!" The Colonel orders the woman shot as a spy and the man for treason. Jules has heard Angela scream, orders all guns concentrated on the chateau.

Karl and Angela are led before the firing squad. Just as they are about to fire, an avalanche of French shells descend. Karl and Angela are buried in the debris, and chateau is in flames. Finally they crawl forth and Angela, leads Karl through the shells of No Man's Land.

Unable to make the distance, they conceal themselves in a church. The two collapse at the foot of a cross as a shell wrecks the building.

Next morning, Jules sees two figures at the foot of the cross and discovers them to be Angela and the German-American. Angela pleads for Karl and he is put in a concentration camp. Jules sets about to acquaint the government of Angela's heroism, and one day she is presented with an official document granting Karl's release and transport to America, and the other prisoners are horrified to see a fashionably dressed little American pressing her face against the wires of the detention pen to be kissed by the disheveled German prisoner.

At an American Port.—British submarines, which help to guard the ocean highways, visit the United States for the first time in years. Subtitles: Ready to return to the tireless watch of the deep. The mothership of the undersea flotilla.

War Section.—America's active participation in the struggle for democracy opens. The expedition of troops to the firing line has already begun. Subtitles: Seasoned veterans of the U. S. Marine Corps are mobolized as part of General Pershing's forces. General Barnett, commandant of the Corps, bids farewell to the first contingent of marines and its gallant leader, Colonel Doyen. They go to vindicate America's fight for humanity, with the Nation's heartfelt blessing for success. Meanwhile transports are loaded with supplies and ammunition for the expedition. Vast quantities of materials fill the docks. Regular army troops embark for a secret destination in France. They're off.

"IT HAPPENED TO ADELE" (Thanhouser—Five Parts—July 15). The cast: Adele (Gladys Leslie), Her Mother (Carey Hastings); Blanche (Peggy Burke); Vincent Harvey (Charlie Emerson); Mary (Clarine Seymour); John W. Horton (Wayne Arey). Directed by Van Dyke Brooke. Story of Agnes C. Johnston.

Adele was a child of romance. Even in the sordid tenement she felt a desire to go on the stage. Accidentally Adele and her mother met Blanche, who had been on the stage with Adele's mother, and it was through her that Adele received her first chance. Then she met Vincent Harvey, an embryonic opera composer who found inspiration in her and she in turn found for her. Adele was practising kicking one morning very energetically. So much so that she kicked her slipper out of the window and it hit John W. Horton, a broker. Looking around, he became horrified. Adele had climbed out on to the firescape, became dizzy and fell. An awning broke her fall. Blanche was the first one to her side. Learning that she was not hurt, Blanche made her lie still, while she turned to the crowd and told them that Adele was a poor chorus girl who tried to commit suicide. It wasn't long before Adele sprang into fame, as the incident brought her plenty of publicity and Horton told her that if she ever needed a friend to call on him.

Vincent completed his opera and at his request, Adele took it to Horton and asked him to produce it. He gladly consented and it turned out to be a really good opera, for Vincent threw himself into it heart and soul. He forgot everything, even Adele. Mary, Vincent's Uncle's adopted daughter, came to see Adele and asked her to give up Vincent as he belonged to her, and who ever married him would have to be content with his disposition as he loved no one except his music and himself. Adele did not believe this until she found him wanting. Accidentally a fire started. Vincent remembered his opera was on Adele's table. Rushing in he paid no heed to her but snatched up his music. Horton, who decided to take a trip to the pole was about to leave when suddenly Blanche, unknown to Adele, came and asked him not to go. Returning he found the house in flames.

"THE NEGLECTED WIFE"—Episode No. 10. 'A Veiled Intrigue' (Two Parts—Week of July 15). The cast: Margaret Warner (Ruth Roland); Horace Kennedy (Roland Bottomley); Mrs. Kennedy (Corenne Grant); Edgar Doyle (Neil Hardin); Frank Norwood (Philo McCullough).

At the moment Margaret is being led by the veiled woman, Mary resolves to win back the affections of her husband.

Margaret questions the veiled woman as to whereabouts of Kennedy, but the latter shakes her head and motions silence. Fearing for Kennedy's safety and feeling sure she will be of assistance, Margaret regains courage. Arriving at a strange house, Margaret is led in, puzzled at not seeing Kennedy and finding herself locked in. Margaret realizes she has been trapped.

Kennedy receives a note telling him if he wishes to keep the scandal out of his political campaign, he must go to Bar's shop and give $500 to a lame newsboy. Refusing to be blackmailed, Kennedy tears up the note. Visiting Margaret he finds the note written by the veiled woman and he goes in search of her.

Mary receives a note, telling her that if she wants divorce proceedings to come to Lichton Sanitarium and she will find proof. Not wishing to go alone, she telephones Norwood and he decides to go with her.

Mary delivering her password to a doctor follows him. Norwood is warned to remain where he is. Mary is shocked at the sight of Margaret, who is strapped to a chair. "What right have you to hold this girl here," she asks. "We know her as Maude Black, and following the instructions of the law we have to hold her" is the answer the doctor gives, insinuating that Margaret is insane. Norwood forces his way into the room, and after a fight, rescues Mary and Margaret.

Kennedy receiving another note decides to thwart the scheme by sending fake money. Doyle angry at being tricked and at the failure of his plan to hold Margaret, determines to get a packet of compromising letters written by Kennedy to Margaret.

PORTER MAKES A CONFESSION

A friend of mine said he couldn't understand how I ever became the best machine salesman in the United States. He said you wouldn't think it to look at me.

Well, frankly, I don't shave just because I love to see my face in the mirror.

But if you want to know the secret of my success, here it is:

(1) Knowing my business.

(2) Acting upon that knowledge.

Take it from me that "knowing how" isn't enough. If you stop at that you'll soon be driven off the field by younger men and concerns.

They will leave you only the joy (?) of hollering about what you know and what you did in the past, before keener minds tackled the business.

Another thing—I don't furnish Projectors alone. Before the sale I give my expert knowledge as Projection Engineer, and after the sale I remain at my Customer's service.

This policy, and honorable dealing, have earned me the confidence of my Customers. Men thousands of miles away have sent me cash with their orders, even for second-hand machines. And none ever were sorry.

I WOULD NOT SELL THE CONFIDENCE OF MY CUSTOMERS FOR ALL THE WORLD'S WEALTH.

B. F. PORTER, 1482 Broadway, Times Sq., New York

Silvertip Demonstrations Are Convincing

Nothing is as convincing as actual visual proofs. You have heard your fellow exhibitors speak of Silvertips as the "standard negative projector carbons," you have heard the enthusiastic endorsement of operators the country over who have told you of "minimum adjustment and no flicker."

Now is the time—right here at the Convention—to find proof for every claim that has been made. At our booth will be expert moving picture men who will explain Silvertip's points of superiority in detail.

Don't miss this chance to become familiar with the actual operating conditions that have made Silvertips the "standard negative projector carbon."

A visit to booth No. 17, Section B, at the Chicago Convention will prove to you what you have so long been hearing—Silvertips and satisfactory projection are the same.

CO-STARS

To get "star" profits, good projection must always "co-star" with good pictures—one is valueless without the other. Give your features the advantage of vividly projected images by using

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses

All the countless details of the film need the help of brilliant illumination and clear definition, not only in the center, but all over the screen, to bring them out properly. Such illumination and definition, right to the very corners, is the kind which Bausch & Lomb lenses give you. These lenses are part of the regular equipment of all Edison and Nicholas Power machines. They are also obtainable at your film exchange.

Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

"Trained lightning" is the very life's blood of the moving picture industry. J. H. Hallberg has contributed a great deal to the particular kind of "training" which has adapted this "life's blood" to the use of presenting photographic images on the screen.

"MOTION PICTURE ELECTRICITY" gives its readers a comprehensive knowledge of this important subject and enables the manager and operator not only to get the best possible results from the equipment he is using but to save money while he is using it.

Prospective Theatre Builders and Owners

EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA has finished a 266-page book on Modern Theatre Construction. This issue, published by the Moving Picture World, has just left the press.

The absence of any serious or exhaustive published treatment of this important topic within the past quarter of a century, coupled with the present general tendency toward architectural uplift throughout this country, which aims at a simpler and truer form of art, renders the occasion opportune for the publication of such a volume as this.

In illustrating or citing the work of other architects the writer disclaims any malicious intention in pointing out faulty features. He simply offers them as examples of defective construction to be avoided.

Gentlemen:

Now that you have completed equipment in our new theatres here in New Orleans, and Houston, Texas, we want to take this means of expressing to you our appreciation of the manner in which we have done business with you, also as to the character of your goods. You have, without exception, filled our orders just as promptly as we could ever expect and probably quicker than we had anticipated, and the fact of your having supplied us with brass frames and various other equipment in our fifteen theatres is evidence that we are pleased with your goods, for they are the most attractive, durable and practical that we have as yet found.

Old methods were wrong—so they had to make way for new

Man can no longer afford to set type by hand, nor pay the salaries of many musicians.

Those inventions have best served man which enable man to secure more efficiency and better results with less expenditure of time, energy and money.

Because the Robert Morton Symphonic Orchestra presents all the instruments of an orchestra under the control of a single player, combining the grandeur of the Cathedral Organ, the artistic refinement of an orchestral organ, and the accompaniment, obligato and full symphony of an orchestra of skilled musicians—it has taken its place in the ranks of inventions which set new standards for human advancement.

A single player at the key desk controls the strings, the woods and the brass just as the leader controls his orchestra.

In the Robert Morton all the beauties of a full orchestra are grouped in the glorious range of tone of a single instrument; all the resources of the instrument are also placed at the disposal of a player without technical skill, by using hand played rolls of small cost.

Different styles for different theatres built to order at prices ranging from $7,500 up.

Simplex

Suppose We Had Built a Million SIMPLEXES

—But Were Losing Ground—Going Downhill—
Becoming a Back-Number—

Then We Might Holler About the PAST

We might ding into your ears the many years we had been in business, the large number of Machines we had built, and we might even claim to be the only ones who knew how.

But That Wouldn't Convince You, Would It?

What was in the past doesn't count now. (There used to be more candles made than electric lamps). It isn't what we WERE, but what we ARE, that counts.

You Are More Interested in an IS-er Than in a WAS-er

Well, the Simplex is distinctly an IS-er. Think of it. Started six years ago, and today we are building more high-grade Projectors than anybody else in the world.

Such a Machine Deserves Your Interest Whether You Come to Chicago Or Not

← If You Come to the Convention →

You'll find us at the Coliseum, glad to meet you and to greet you and to make you feel at home.
Don't look for a handsome bunch, but look for the smile that comes from success through earnest effort, and a hand-clasp that says

WELCOME!

IF NOT

You ought to get in touch with the Simplex Distributor in your section.
He has helped other Exhibitors to the most profitable projection, and can do the same for you.
Or, suppose you just drop us a line, and ask for

CATALOG "A"

You'll still find only the Simplex in every theatre in the famous Loop District, holding the fort against all comers—again proving Simplex projection so excellent that when an Exhibitor has once tried it he says to all others

Harry Knocks Out the Camp Bad Man

MAYBE you'll never have the pleasure of hearing Harry Carey preach a four-hour sermon, but you and your delighted patrons can SEE his start and finish in this thrilling three-reeler. Harry had shot-up a town and got in bad with the sheriff so, when he was let out of jail the sheriff gave him back his gun, but no cartridges. Harry was told to "git," and he got. Out on the desert he saw a band of Indians murder a preacher, and the little daughter clung to him, and called him "Daddy." How Harry took the preacher's place and regenerated a town makes a thrilling picture that will tug at the heart strings and mightily please the Harry Carey fans. It's a whale. JOKER COMEDY

FOOLISHNESS BILL FRANEY and Hilarious Gale Henry are on the week's releases with two one-reel Joker comedies that are all to the merry. But it was the homely one and Bill kicked. You'll have to see this to know how good it is. It is unusual and full of laughs. Gale in "The Vamp of the Camp" does some all-around, ground and lofty vamping that will make your audiences laff till their sides ache. Released week of August 6.

POWERS

"Seeing Ceylon" with Hy. Mayer, is a combination of Travel Picture and Hy. Mayer's inimitable Animated Cartoons. They are as clever as this great artist's best work on the screen, and his pictorial comments o nthe views shown make great screen entertainment. Released week of August 6.

THE chap that took on the job of taming Mary ended up with a gun-shot in the arm. And the other chap who called her a "little wild thing" found himself tamed by her charm. Mary was the daughter of a "moonshiner," and when the "revenuers" got him, she continued the business. Johnny was a handsome young Secret Service man, and one of his good women friends became interested in Mary and took her to the city for a good time. Mary couldn't stand the city life and ran away home. When Johnny on a hunt for a moonshine still discovered it belonged to Mary, he was surely up against it, but he saved her life when threatened by the mountaineer who wanted her, and the climax brings about a regular ending that suits the story and will please the fans. "A MAN'S MAN"

PETER B. KYNE

A Man's Man, who never hits below the belt,
no matter what the provocation;
who helps his weak sister,
no matter what the indictment,
who plays fair with his friends,
no matter what the temptation.
A Man's Man,
A rough diamond, uncut,
whose wondrous lustre is not caused by artificial facets, yet sheds the rays that warm the heart of the world.
A Man's Man. who can mold an empire's destiny and yet spin the thousand gossamers
that make love's web outlast the earth.
A Man's Man.

PARALTA PLAN

AN Exhibitor writes us that the program booking policy has proved absolutely sound with him.

He also says that fully 65 per cent of Exhibitors have come to a like conclusion as the result of long experience;

Only they ask that programs be held up to a standard that will constantly command the respect of patrons.

And that contracts between exchanges and Exhibitors be made more equitable and certain.

If the Exhibitor could get a real "even-break" he would always remain a program-policy man.

This is very good as far as it goes—but it does not go far enough.

CERTAIN stars, because of their distinctive ability, and certain plays, because of their cost in authors' fees and production charges, are entitled to more money.

These special feature plays cost the producer much more than a program release and the Exhibitor must pay more for them. His patrons demand them and he must play them.

The only way the Exhibitor can pay more is to get more money into his box office without additional expense. He must reduce his operating charges and increase his receipts.

The Paralta Plan shows him how to do this and that is why every Exhibitor should read the Paralta Plan book.

It will be sent free to any exhibitor on application. Write today.

Vivian Martin

THERE is an illusive charm about Vivian Martin, a sort of mingling of shy youth and mature depth, that has placed her not only among the big stars in Paramount Pictures, but among the most popular artists of the screen. Her first picture under the new "Selective Star Series" plan is entitled "Little Miss Optimist." The story is by Gardner Hunting and the picture was directed by Robert Thornby. Vivian Martin's Paramount Pictures have done much to attract and hold public patronage for Paramount exhibitors.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA has brought to the American motion picture the mysterious, the magic and mystic of Japan.

His wonderful acting in "The Cheat," "Alien Souls," "The Soul of Kura San," "The Bottle Imp" and "The Jaguar's Claws" foreshadows brilliant and popular productions, the first of which is "Hashimura Togo," one of Wallace Irwin's stories of Saturday Evening Post fame, and the series now running in Good Housekeeping. The addition of a popular story will add to Mr Hayakawa's already great popularity and "drawing power."

When a fitting "Jose" was desired for Geraldine Farrar's "Carmen," Mr. Reid was selected for the part. Again he appeared with Miss Farrar as Eric Trent in the great masterpiece, "Joan the Woman." His physical prowess, quite as much as his perfection of feature, has made him steadily advance in popularity, until without question he is one of the biggest stars appearing in Paramount Pictures

Wallace Reid's first picture, released under the "Selective Star Series" plan, is "The Hostage," a timely love story in which he portrays a prisoner of war.

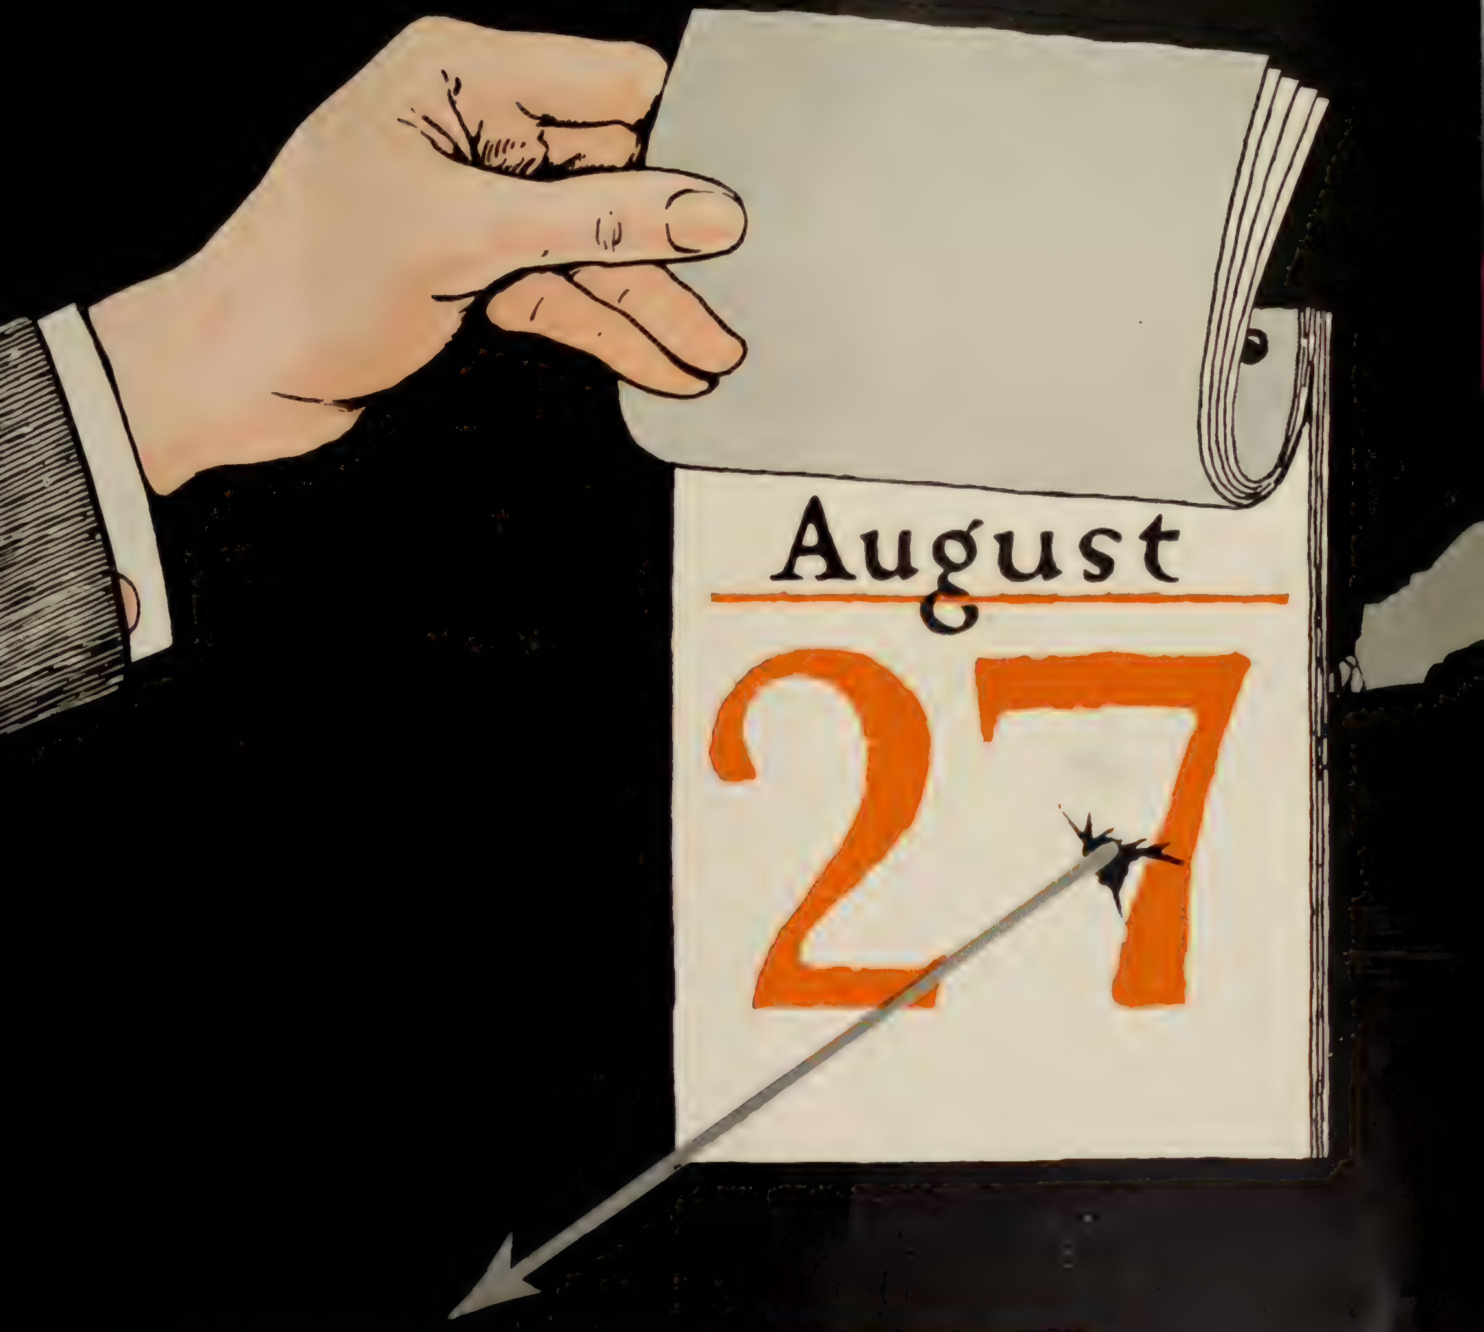
METRO has signed

The Great NAZIMOVA



THIS is the day the Exhibitor begins to buy Supreme Attractions at a price he can afford to pay.

A high class attraction with a star of box office value at a price the exhibitor can afford to pay

SHOWMANSHIP in motion pictures began with feature productions about three years ago.

The industry has been divided in its judgment on the box office value of the production versus the star.

METRO'S solution of the problem based on experience and proven by legitimate solid business methods, is that the box office star in the high class production made at a minimum cost, without sacrificing quality, and marketed with the highest efficiency, enables the Metro and the Exhibitor to make money, because we can offer these stars at prices you can afford to pay

THE program system was entirely fair until individual stars created a greater drawing value. The system then became unfair because stars of drawing value were compelled to carry the program.

Therefore, putting each star on individual merit, the Showman soon eliminates those who fail to yield a profit to him.

STAR VALUE is based on DRAWING QUALITY and Metro believes this solves the Exhibitor's problem.

In accord with this policy, METRO proposes to offer to the exhibitor, beginning August 27th star series to be selected according to the drawing power of each star in any particular territory.

Prices will not be arbitrarily set but based on local conditions in each territory at a price the Exhibitor can afford to pay.

METRO will present a minimum of sixty productions the first year and will only add stars that have box office value to this already powerful list

"Polly of the Circus"—Its Author and Mae Marsh

GOLDWYN selected "Polly of the Circus" as its first release because it is a beautiful, romantic story that gives a company like Goldwyn a splendid opportunity to show its skill in production.

And also because "Polly of the Circus" is one of the most remarkable money-making plays in the history of the modern theater. It is an international play—known in all lands—and has been presented in every large and small city in North America.

Mae Marsh, its star, is a world-wide favorite and here again achieves the same kind of brilliant success that came to her as the heroine of "The Birth of a Nation" and other classics of the screen. Miss Marsh is hailed by the New York Times as "the Maude Adams of the screen" and by the Chicago Daily News as "the Bernhardt of the films."

Margaret Mayo, the author of "Polly of the Circus," is the most skilled and successful woman playwright in the world. She has given months of her time to the filming of this "Classic of the Big Tops."

And, added to this unusual trinity of big story, world-known star and big author, Goldwyn, with its organization of specialists, contributes a production that establishes a new and hitherto unattained standard in motion pictures.

"Baby Mine" Introduces Madge Kennedy

MADGE KENNEDY, the most brilliant comedienne on the American stage, makes her first screen appearance in "Baby Mine," a huge stage success which was chosen as the second Goldwyn release to introduce a new star.

"Baby Mine" is the most successful money-making farce ever written by an American author. Besides enjoying long runs in all the larger American cities and playing in every section of the country, it has been produced throughout the English-speaking world and had runs in France, Germany, Russia, including a run of 120 performances in Pekin in Chinese.

Madge Kennedy, the star, is known to hundreds of thousands of theatergoers through her work in "Fair and Warmer," "Twin Beds," "Over Night" and "Little Miss Brown," comedies and farces that made fortunes in the theater. Goldwyn predicts that she will be the next star to gain world-wide popularity through the medium of the screen.

Margaret Mayo, whose knowledge of stagecraft and farce comedy situation is unrivaled, has personally watched every phase of the making of this picture and titled it in person to give the exhibitors of America the benefit of her skill and abilities.

Goldwyn, giving "Baby Mine" the advantages of splendid production and direction, ventures to predict that it will be acclaimed as one of the swiftest and most appealing farces ever made for the screen.

Maxine Elliott Makes Her Screen Debut

GOLDWYN succeeded in bringing Maxine Elliott to the screen, where many other big companies had failed. This international favorite and famous beauty achieves in her screen debut the greatest success of her entire career.

Miss Elliott's first Goldwyn production is "Fighting Odds," a play worthy of this distinguished artist. Her debut on the screen will be eagerly awaited by millions of people. She is one of the world's most widely exploited personalities and the pictorial publications have carried her fame and beauty to every country on earth.

Irvin S. Cobb, America's greatest humorist and successor to Mark Twain, and Roi Cooper Megrue are the authors of "Fighting Odds." Mr. Megrue's reputation as the author of "It Pays To Advertise," "Under Cover," "Under Fire," "Potash and Perlmutter in Society," and other plays, is a tremendous box office asset for all exhibitors.

Goldwyn applied all of its efforts to make this a brilliant and unusual production and now expresses the belief that no other noted player ever came to the screen from the stage in an abler dramatic vehicle.

In "Fighting Odds" the American public will see the many refinements and improvements that Goldwyn is introducing into film production.

A World-Famed Story for Jane Cowl

WHEN Goldwyn persuaded the greatest emotional actress of the American stage to become one of its stars, it was only fair to provide her with a story of great dramatic and box-office value.

So we obtained for Jane Cowl "The Spreading Dawn," a story that had 2,000,000 a week circulation as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post for many weeks. Millions of Americans know this story and will hasten to see this splendid artist bring it to the screen.

Basil King, the author, wrote "The Inner Shrine," "Wild Olive," "The Street Called Straight," and "The High Heart," now running as a serial in the Post, and the power of his name will bring millions of people into the motion picture theaters of the country.

In Miss Cowl you have the heroine of "Within the Law," "Common Clay," and "Lilac Time," three plays that were the sensations of their period; plays that she did much to make by the sheer power of her personality. The fame and beauty of this star have been spread into the world's far corners by pictorial publications published in many languages.

"The Spreading Dawn" bears all of the Goldwyn marks of distinction in production—richness, good taste and refinement.

A mighty empire stood powerless under one man's evil influence. The tattered exiles in the Siberian mines had ceased to hope for freedom. An enslaved nation, a people doomed to servitude through one man's villainy!

That man was Rasputin, the unspeakable.

Up from the seething whirlpool of the submerged Russian people rose a man who strove to free his native land from the reprobate's grasp. A young priest, a mystic, a friend to all, he was finally driven from Russia a hunted fugitive.

This man was Iliodor, the "Mad Monk."

This amazing story, moving onward with the sweep of a mighty symphony and tracing step by step Russia's grasp of freedom, is authentically told, in "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

A "capacity" star

Pathé

is the way exhibitors describe

IRENE CASTLE

With remarkable unanimity they declare her to be a box office attraction superior to any other on the screen!

Here are just a few opinions from exhibitors culled at random;

We can highly recommend Mrs. Vernon Castle as a great box office attraction. Each night we have played her to capacity-with a big crowd outside waiting for the second show. If there is any other star who will draw the business she does we would like to know her."—Carlisle and Bedard, Bellevue Theatre, St. Albans, Vt.

"On every occasion I have shown Mrs. Vernon Castle on my screen I have had capacity houses. I consider her one of the best box office stars in the business."—Sam Newton, Jr., Broadway Theatre, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

"I want to get a booking on the new five reelers you are going to have featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle. I am so well pleased with her drawing power that I am anxious to get all your releases featuring her."—Al. J. Bedford, mgr. Family Theatre Co., Port Huron, Mich.

"I have played Mrs. Castle to the best box office receipts in the history of both of my theatres and can recommend her as a box office attraction to any exhibitor."—Benj. Apple, mgr. Arbor Theatre, Albany, N. Y.

The On-the-Square Girl

Produced by Astra
Directed by Geo. Fitzmaurice

A sensational, splendidly acted and directed play that is way above the average in quality. A prominent exhibitor says Mollie King packs his house;

"'Blind Man's Luck' with fascinating, beautiful Mollie King packed our house to the doors. Many of our prominent men after seeing the star on the screen are talking about moving to New York."—R. M. Chisholm, President American Amusement Co., operating the Diamond Theatre, New Orleans.

The one and only Baby Marie Osborne is announced in the five part Gold Rooster Play

Captain Kiddo

Produced by Lasalida

This tiny five year old child positively ranks among the very greatest drawing stars of the screen.

"There is an unconscious charm about the performance of this five year old star which sets her apart from the usual child actress and creates in her pictures an uncommon illusion of reality"—

"Zit" in the New York Journal.

announces the policy of

Big Pictures for Big Exhibitors

THE PICTURE'S THE THING! If you have the goods, you'll fill your house.

That's what every big exhibitor knows. But how to get it?

The program system won't do it. It's an antique.

The star system is better. But there are only half a dozen real stars—perhaps thirty sure-fire pictures a year, at a big price. But that's no year's service. Is it?

The States Rights Producers have the right idea. But their supply is uncertain, the quality uneven, and the prices often absurd. The game needs stabilizing.

The Exhibitor's Circuit is best of all. Co operative buying. Pooling issues for the common good. Buying the picture you want at a fair price—getting the money back with profit.

The Big Exhibitor is the States Rights Buyer of the future. There's one circuit now. There'll be others soon. It may not be the ideal way to distribute pictures, but it's the best in sight. We'll help!

WE'LL MAKE BIG PICTURES—

Or buy them or finance them. We'll help the game along, because we believe in it.

That's why we came into the film business. "For the purpose of encouraging, financing and distributing motion pictures of quality."

So——

We're going to put our money—just as much as is needed—into Big Pictures for Big Exhibitors.

TO THE PRODUCER of BIG PICTURES

If you have a picture, ready or in the works, or an idea for a picture that is big and strong and human—and want a market that is strong enough to finance your operations——

Bring what you have to us.

If we believe in it, we'll finance it. We'll pay you a fair profit on the one production and enable you to start on the next.

We'll act as the Clearing House between you and the big houses in which you want to have your pictures run. We'll help!

TO THE BIG EXHIBITOR AND STATES RIGHTS BUYER

We'll perform for you a Clearing House service for a Clearing House profit.

We'll deal with you direct—for all the rights to all the pictures we handle—not more than twelve the first year.

We'll put our money into the pictures you and we believe in. We'll spend our money in publicity. We'll get behind the picture with all the strength our organization can command.

We'll call it, and make it, a Superpicture!

CO-OPERATION PRESENTATION STANDARDIZATION PROGRESSION

The First National Exhibitors Circuit stretches forth its hand of welcome to every manufacturer who intends to deal fairly with the exhibitor.

The First National Exhibitors Circuit stretches forth its arm of protection to every exhibitor against any manufacturer who tries to use "Steamroller methods."

We can offer to the stars more money than they have ever received before because they are worth it if they bring the results to the exhibitor. We will not put in their contract that their pictures are rented independently and then use them as a club to compel the exhibitor to rent an inferior product as is being done today.

We are not burdened with any enormous home office overhead expense. We are not burdened with an enormous local exchange expense nor enormous salaries left in the wake of an amalgamation to obtain control and throttle the exhibitor.

Every exhibitor in the United States should be part of an organization in his particular locality. As a unit you are helpless against everything and will be forced into the quicksands of failure. As an organization, if the principles of the organization are right and fair, you will be supreme above everything, and, no manufacturer regardless of the amount of money he can command, will be able to compete with your organization, which later on will become affiliated with this big, grand, gigantic organization, formed for the benefit and economic protection of the millions and millions of dollars invested in theaters exhibiting motion pictures.

Facts and Comments

AFTER all is said and done what we would like to ask, did the film people expect from the Chicago film censor, or for that matter, what need they expect from any censor clothed with similar official authority? Is not the Chicago major, by his latest coup, simply upholding the traditions of Chicago's present Mayor? Casting aside all regard for the rights and oft expressed feelings of their fellow townsmen, these political leaders assume an arrogance and defiance of public opinion worthy of some of the present European upholders of the "Divine Right." It is encouraging to note that the Chicago press have mighty little sympathy with the Chicago censorship rulings. As the Chicago Examiner says, "It is this kind of official imbecility that has brought the office of public censor into deserved disrepute and ridicule."

TO THE few of our readers to whom it may be of any interest, we refer to pages 618 and 619 of this week's issue. The grandstand play which Mr. Ochs would like to stage on the floor of the convention would be a clever bit of advertising for him and his paper proposition if it were not so palpably intended to be so. Our page, reprinted from issue of April 14 last, answers Mr. Ochs in more ways than one and much more completely than anything further we might say now or at any other time. We respectfully request exhibitors, organized and unorganized, to read carefully every paragraph of this reprinted page entitled "Methods of President Ochs."

TO INSURE success in most competitive lines of business today requires study and mastery of the details of the business and keeping right up to the minute with new ideas and new developments along kindred lines. This rule is perhaps even more imperative in the exhibiting of films. The exhibitor must study his audiences in the selection of his programs; he must conduct his theater along the lines of giving comfort, recreation and entertainment to his patrons. A hundred and one details need his constant attention. In short, the exhibitor who is a close student of his business is the one most likely to succeed.

LAST week's issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD was rightfully entitled our "Art Number." At the same time it was our annual special Exhibitors Convention issue and everyone of the many special articles it contains should be of as great interest and value to the exhibitors of the country as to the film producers. We believe that a careful reading of these articles will enable the exhibitor to appreciate more keenly the finer points of every picture and enable him to make a much more expert selection of his programs. In fact, every issue of this paper contains a fund of instructive, helpful and business-building ideas that well repay the careful reader—Moral: Read your MOVING PICTURE WORLD every week.

FICTION is often funnier than fact. In a recent number of a weekly magazine the writer of a story with a moving picture actress for its heroine gravely informs the reader that the movie lady is the star of a popular serial put out by a wealthy company and then asks him to believe that the star's income forces her to dwell in the third-floor-back of a very modest boarding house and to eat her meals in the kitchen. The high cost of living, in the year 1917, cannot be denied, but is it possible that these are the best accommodations to be obtained on a salary of from eight hundred to twelve hundred a week? Or is the story founded on inside information and the author really knows a talented but retiring movie queen who is now exchanging her services for something less than a hundred dollars every pay day. If so, will the editor of the magazine kindly publish the lady's address?

A LEADER is a man to whom others turn for guidance; a man who can by ability and strength of character command the fullest confidence and respect of those whom he essays to lead. He must have knowledge of the cause he espouses and preception of the problems involved. He must know men and measures and be able to fathom motives. He must be honest and aboveboard in his dealings with his followers; broad of intellect and generous in conception. He may not seek self-aggrandizement nor use his office to further his personal profit. Where shall we find such a man? "By their deeds ye shall know them."

The Sovereign Voice of the American People ◆ ◆ ◆

THE United States is at war. This does not mean that the President and his Cabinet are at war or alone are responsible. It does not mean that the government at Washington and the governments of the various states are at war or are alone responsible. It does mean that the people of this country are at war and every one in the country should feel the responsibility and take their share of the consequent burden.

Most of our readers will have noted from page 217 of our issue of July 14 that President Wilson wrote to President William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry under date of June 28, requesting him "to organize the motion picture industry in such manner as to establish direct and authoritative co-operation with the Committee on Public Information." In this way it will be seen that President Wilson recognizes, in the first place, the importance and advisability of keeping the American public properly informed on what the government is doing and, in the second place, he recognizes the importance and value of the motion picture industry as a means of spreading this information.

Our readers will also have noted from page 432 of our issue of July 21 that President Brady and the National Association took prompt action and appointed a committee to meet at Washington on Wednesday, July 11. As a result of this action a committee of eighteen, representing all branches of the industry met in Washington on the morning of July 11 and spent practically the whole day in meeting different department heads of the government and discussing ways and means. The committee was headed by President William A. Brady, Vice Chairman William L. Sherrill and Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the National Association. Other members of the committee were J. R. Freuler, P. A. Powers, Marcus Loew, Arthur S. Friend, W. W. Irwin, Jules Brulatour, Arthur James, J. H. Hallberg, Walter J. Moore, Louis F. Blumenthal, L. L. Levine, J. J. McCarthy, W. A. Brady, Jr, Wm. A. Johnston and John Wylie.

The first meeting of the committee was held at 9:15 a. m. at the office of George Creel, Chairman of the Committee on Public Information. After the objects of the motion picture committee had been briefly and clearly presented by Mr. Brady, a short discussion of some of the possibilities of the work was held in which views on different points were expressed by Mr. John R. Freuler and Mr. Marcus Loew.

Meetings with heads of various departments of the government had been arranged for the committee by Mr Creel and a visit was next paid to the headquarters of the American Red Cross in their handsome new building, only just being completed. The committee were here met by H. P. Davison and Mr. Evans and other heads of the Red Cross work. Plans of co-operation were discussed and Mr. Davison expressed his appreciation of the great help that the industry would undoubtedly be able to render to the Red Cross in many ways.

The next visit to the office of Commissioner Hoover of the Food Commission gave the committee of moving picture men one of the clearest intimations of how they might help the work of the government. For lack of time, Mr. Hoover was only able to address the committee for a few minutes but in his short address the committee got a clearer and more definite idea of the necessity for the conservation and regulation of our food supplies than could possibly have been secured in any other way.

The next visit of the committee was to the office of the Aviation Advisory Committee, where Commissioner Coffin and other members of this most important commission met the committee. Mr. Coffin addressed the committee and outlined much of the work being planned by his arm of the service, pointing out how the moving picture men could spread information in regard to the construction of aviation training camps, etc. The point was made that the government at Washington clearly realized the importance of giving the public correct and proper information in regard to whatever was being undertaken. By a proper dissemination of information it was realized that the people of the whole country would be able to co-operate more intelligently and to stand behind the government more solidly than they could possibly be expected to do lacking such information.

The next call of the committee was on Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo. Secretary McAdoo, like every other member of the Cabinet or head of a government department, has his time fully occupied at present. The moving picture men were greeted heartily by Mr. McAdoo, who expressed the keen appreciation of himself and his department for the valuable aid given by the motion picture industry in the publicity given to the Liberty Loan. He also assured the moving picture men that further similar aid would be necessary before very long and expressed his confidence in being able to look to this industry for even greater co-operation and assistance. Secretary McAdoo was assured by Mr. Brady that the industry felt particularly pleased at being put in direct touch with the department in that work, which thereby enabled the industry to work more intelligently and with more satisfactory results for all concerned and assured Mr. McAdoo on behalf of the whole industry of the greatest possible assistance in the future.

At this point in the day's activities, the committee were taken to the Metropolitan Club where they were guests at luncheon of Mr. Hurley, of the American Red Cross. During the luncheon further plans of co-operation in this part of the work were discussed and outlined by Mr. Hurley, Mr. Evans, Mr. Ivy Close and others.

The committee then visited Commissioner Fosdick and learned of the aims and objects of his Commission in regard to the control of conditions in and around all military camps. Mr. Fosdick expressed his keen appreciation of the willingness of the moving picture men to assist and pointed out briefly several concrete ways in which they could help, especially by eliminating the showing of all sex and objectionable films in the vicinity of these camps, by providing good, wholesome, red blooded films of the right sort and by the showing of films throughout the country which would give the public the right impression in regard to these camps and military life in general.

The final meeting of the committee had been arranged with Secretary of War Baker. Secretary Baker was in a long and most important conference and after waiting some little time it was found that this conference would not end in time to enable the moving picture committee to leave Washington at the proper time. Secretary of the Interior Lane and Secretary Wilson with the National Advisory Committee on Defense received the committee and listened to a further presentation of the readiness of the whole industry to assist the government in so many different ways. Secretary Lane expressed his appreciation and said he felt quite sure the President and every other official of the government would also feel the keenest appreciation at the attitude of the moving picture industry at this particular time.

At the convention in Chicago, several of the government departments and commissions will be represented to further explain to the exhibitors and other members of the industry attending the Chicago convention of the desire of the government to secure the help of the industry and explain methods by which the exhibitors and theater managers can assist along many different lines.

The result of these various conferences were exceedingly gratfying to the moving picture committee and it is planned to have the industry represented directly by a member of the committee on the different commissions and departments of the government and thereby assist the government with the advice of experts in this industry and also in this way to keep the industry clearly informed as to ways and means of spreading information through the screens of our theaters throughout the country. In this way, the motion picture industry has a great opportunity before it for being of genuine and incalculable assistance to our government during this crisis in our national history and the one thing that was commented on several occasions by the heads of the government above referred to was the unselfish spirit in which this assistance was tendered and without any semblance of a desire for personal or private gain.

The Moving Picture World will keep the trade fully informed as to the development of these various plans and will be pleased to give fuller information direct to any of its readers at any time. The arrangements for representation on the different committees of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will also be fully covered in our columns. In closing, can only say that we hope this paper may be able to spread to every member of the industry and through them to our millions of theater patrons at least some knowledge and a clearer understanding of the assistance that can be rendered and also in part some of the enthusiasm that was absorbed by every member of the committee who visited Washington

Art Number Echoes

By Edward Weitzel.

THE Art Number of the Moving Picture World, published last week, helps to confirm the encouraging belief that the photoplay is advancing steadily in a technical sense, thanks to the efforts of a large number of clear-eyed men who are not satisfied to rest on their past records but are pressing forward in their search for newer and better ways of constructing the drama of the screen. The opening article by Orrin C. Cocks on "The Better Films Movement;" "Editing a Motion Picture," by Frank F. Woods; "Photodrama a New Art," by Cecil B. DeMille; "The Scenic Side of the Photodrama," by Wilfred Buckland; "The Artistry of Motion Pictures," by Maurice Tourneur, and "With Art as Her Handmaiden," by Vivian M. Moses, are among the contributions that deal largely with this phase of motion picture drama.

Chief among the words of wisdom set down by Director DeMille in "Photodrama a New Art" are the following: "In the early days of writing for the stage, players used to indulge in long 'asides,' explaining their thoughts and what they contemplated doing. In the silent drama, subtitles answered this purpose, but the writers of the photodrama are so developing their stories that these screen 'asides' are gradually being eliminated by being expressed in action." In other words, screendrama is keeping pace with the improvements continually being made in its sister art-stagedrama.

One of the most significant sentences in the article is this: "No longer does every detail in the set where action takes place have to be absolutely distinct." The dictum that "Art is the elimination of the unnecessary" is here given a different wording by Director DeMille. Just because motion picture drama is a photographic art it does not alter the fact that the attention of the spectator may be diverted from the right path by some perfectly natural but perfectly needless detail forcing its way into the incident. A recent photodrama contains a situation where the leading character, a woman, is trapped in a burning building. An alarm is turned in and the nearest fire engine responds. As it hurries down the street a small dog dashes from the sidewalk and enters into a lively race with the fire horses, to the amusement of the entire body of spectators—and the tension is lost. And tension makes drama.

Beautiful scenic background, artistic light effects, reproduction of the famous points of interest in the new world and the old are all important and highly enjoyable features in the making of photodramas, but the human element of the story comes before everything else. Lay one of the situations of a screendrama in "The Grand Canyon of the Colorado" and show a party of tourists standing on its margin, gazing across its wonderful expanse. Let the spectator of the drama drink his fill of beauty in company with the characters in the drama. Then let one of the tourists lose his footing and slide over the edge of the canyon, and the spectator will have no more interest in the gorgeous scenery before him than will the members of the tourist party, whose one thought will be the rescue of the imperiled man. For the sake of illustration, let it be supposed that the unfortunate gentleman has been caught by a narrow ledge some distance below and is now clinging for life to his insecure resting place. Discovering the man's plight, it is hardly likely that any member of the party above would call down: "How's the view from there, Bill?" or "Look over you left shoulder! the sunset's great!"

Bill's opinion of scenery at this precise moment is an echo of the writer's when the tension of a screendrama has been sacrificed to some pleasing bit of nature or an architectural triumph wrought by the hand of man.

Exposition Starts With a Boom

Chicago Coliseum Crowded to Limit on Opening Day—Night Attendance Enormous—Mae Marsh Meets Many Admirers.

THE Seventh National Exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America opened Saturday, July 14, with the most pronounced success that has ever marked any former event of the kind. Over twenty thousand people passed through the entrance during the day, the night attendance packing the huge Coliseum building so densely that it was impossible to move through the throngs. One had just to wait until the dense mass moved and then move and stop with it.

The box office showed that more money was taken in Saturday afternoon than was taken in altogether during the first day of last year's exposition, so there is little wonder that Manager Schindler and the Chicago managing committee are jubilant over the prospects. It was Goldwyn Day and a memorable one for little Mae Marsh, who was greeted by admiring thousands.

Miss Rose Tapley was presented as the hostess of the exposition by Manager Schindler and received a great welcome. K-E-S-E and Universal helped out for the occasion by the presence of a number of their noted players. In the booth of the former were Bryant Washburn, Hazel Daly, Marguerite Clayton and little Mary McAllister.

Universal with a band of fifteen pieces and one hundred and fifty boy scouts escorted Dora Rodrigues, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran to the Coliseum. The two latter are Universal players who have come on from Los Angeles for the occasion and Miss Rodrigues is a dainty little girl scout who is recruiting for the U. S. Army and Navy on her journey from Plattsburg to Universal City. Carl Laemmle is meeting the expenses of her trip. JAMES S. McQUADE.

Show Our Spirit

By Louis Reeves Harrison

IT IS in my mind," President Wilson in credited with saying by the New York Tribune, "not only to bring the motion picture industry into fullest and most effective contact with the nation's needs, but to give some measure of official recognition to an increasingly important factor in the development of our national life. The film has come to rank as a very high medium for the dissemination of public intelligence, and since it speaks a universal language, it lends itself importantly to the presentation of America's plans and purposes."

Why not be progressive instead of passive and inert?

There was a time when people believed the world to be flat and stationary. Galileo did not even try to give the people what they wanted. He gave them what they needed Minds, not things, make for progress. He dared to disseminate intelligence.

What did the President mean by "bringing the motion-picture industry into fullest and most effective contact with the nation's needs?" He answers the question specifically, designating the character of material we should offer on the screen as that which "lends itself importantly to the presentation of America's plans and purposes." He has presented that matter himself in speeches which will go down in history as among the most remarkable ever conceived in the mind of man, Beacon Lights of our times.

I do mean in the slightest degree that we should detract from the charm of entertainment—we should add to the pleasure of our audiences by constantly improving the quality of our product, and that can only be done along lines of advancement to the end that the motion picture shall become "an increasingly imporant factor in the development of our national life."

Any man of clear perceptions can see that Americans, while they are responding nobly to the call for personal sacrifice to general good, occupy a position of dignity and moderation in that they are inclined to study the causes and justification of the present war. We all want to occupy the right mental attitude toward this great struggle and the part we are to perform. While we feel deeply the wrongs and injustices perpetrated by lords of War against the innocent and defenseless, we are not guided so much by feeling in this case as by good common sense.

There are millions of us, however, who are busily occupied with the personal struggle, our attention almost completely absorbed by individual occupation and the pressing need of results from our efforts, and we have neither the time nor the opportunity to grasp the full meaning of this clash between our own beautiful ideals and those which make for world domination by brute force. Why not picture our spirit. It has been demonstrated over and over again that blind-alley stories, beginning without definite aim and ending nowhere in particular fall flat on all but a very small percentage of American people, always excepting of course the farce, whose sole purpose is to get a laugh, which need not have other definite aim. The laugh need not be excluded—ridicule may be a powerful weapon against the evil men do.

There will be difficulty, it is not to be denied, in bringing out of big national questions affecting our whole, people the exquisite fascination of story continuity—it will require higher art to adequately present the tremendous dramas of this moment than small ones of the past, but it can be done.

What a great saving in lives and property, to say nothing of all that makes for civilization, there might have been could it have been possible for the marvelous utterances of Maximilian Harden, bravest of German editors, to have been impressed upon the German people through the popular medium of moving pictures. With a great heart full of sympathy for his own kind, he is not blinded to the rights of all humankind. "If Germany," he says, "could see blazing over the goal of our enemies, democracy and independence for every race ripe for freedom, the great celestial sign of our times, then peace would be reachable tomorrow."

Harden's marvelous spirit of prophecy, enabling him to forecast Middle Europe events with unfailing accuracy, his celebrated exposures of rotten political life, his lofty ideals and unfailing courage, have made him the idol of advanced thinkers in his own country and one of the greatest world figures yet in sight for this era. He is not trying to fool his own kind with a lot of stuff such as is used to jolly people along in all nations and in all branches of business. He is telling them the truth.

Harden declares that there will be no whimpering for feeble peace from Americans, "who desire for themselves neither land nor money nor even repayment of the cost of war, whose ideal solution of self-government works upon the nerves of all nations and elevates the conscience of mankind." Where is the conscience of a man who dares not stand for the finest principles he can recognize as the right ones. He may easily lapse into a destructive class of those who devote their energies to the perverted task of tearing down all that our creative minds try to build up. We push on to more glowing happiness through construction and improvement and in spite of decadent ignorance seeking only to destroy.

Here is a German editor rightly interpreting and voicing the ideals and aspirations of American people, recognizing that solemn official promises of his own government have been broken. We know that there have been conspiracies in our midst to burn and blow up our industries, to cripple our government by riots and strikes, to involve us in serious difficulty with Japan and Mexico. We know, as the President states, that "vessels of every kind, whatever their flag, their cargo, their destination, their errand, have been ruthlessly sent to the bottom without warning, without thought of help or mercy."

Here is an enormous amount of dramatic material, some of it sensational in the highest degree, which could be utilized with thrilling effect, and yet not deviate from the truth. There is the story of ships carrying relief to the stricken Belgians, provided with safe conduct by the German government and sunk with what the President characterizes as "the same reckless lack of compassion and of principle." It is difficult to build up international law and right observance of it, just as it is difficult to build up what is noble and inspiring in an art, but that is what the heart and conscience of mankind demands.

We are temperate in judgment, but our people should know the whole truth, they should be made to realize what we stand for and why we are denying ourselves profitable ease of complacent neutrality and taking up arms. "While we do these things," says the President, "let us be very clear, and make very clear to all the world, what our motives and our objects are." We have a wonderful medium in which can be shown that the peace of the world is involved and the freedom of its peoples. Let us point out where responsibility rests for this menace to human happiness.

Be Honest

By Sam Spedon

HERE are a few honest opinions. We use the first person plural modestly, not as a subterfuge to escape or shift responsibility. The name of the writer is printed above in case anybody should drive up and ask you.

The reason the motion picture industry is in a chaotic condition is because so many people in it are not honest with themselves and the industry. It is the cause of many of the unsavory rumors about it and many evils in it. Bring some men face to face with facts and they will deny them, butt their heads against them, try to batter them down and blindly beat out their brains if they have any. If you tell them the truth they object, because it is bitter; not knowing that the bitter medicine often dispels the loathsome disease. If we ever expect to establish the industry on a firm business basis we have got to be honest with it by being honest ourselves. If we have a diseased member, cut it off or the whole body will become diseased.

"Double Crossing."

An exhibitor complains of being "double crossed" by an exchange, which has agreed to rent him a certain picture on a certain day, and instead the exchange gives it to his competitor for more money. He bewails the action of the exchange and denounces his competitor for being a party to the double crossing. And yet this outraged exhibitor will do the same thing to another exhibitor if he gets the chance. Two wrongs don't make a right. The fact is the exhibitor and the exchange are tarred with the same stick. They are dishonest with themselves and the industry. They should be cut off. What is the remedy? Be honest. Don't double cross each other. Honesty is the best policy.

Foolish Competition.

One exchange will cut and slash prices beyond all reason to get business away from its competitor, creating thereby destructive instead of constructive business methods. Any branch of the industry that indulges in them will destroy itself. Any one who thinks he can do real business by these methods reminds us of the fellow who said he bought collar buttons at two cents a piece and sold them for one cent. When asked how he make any money he replied: "I sell so many of them." What's the remedy? Base your price on profit and loss. If you can't sell your goods at a profit you ought to get out of the business unless you are in it just for fun. When you settle your price on reasonable profit stick to it. We advanced this remedy to a man a few days ago and he said: "That's all right. That's what I try to do, but the rest of the trade won't do it; they undersell me and beat me to it." That calls to mind a lot of manufacturers who got together in a protective association to establish a scale of prices and agreed that no member would quote a lower price. After the meeting one fellow asked another how long the agreement would last. The reply was: "Just as long as it takes some member to get to the nearest customer to underbid the rest of us." Be honest with yourselves and the industry.

Film "Gyppers."

Fly-by-night producers and companies who make all sorts of rot to sell the poor fish who are deluded into swallowing the bait with hook, line and sinker. These are the cause of much of the unfair and pernicious competition which exists in the industry. Gold brick and confidence men who flim-flam greedy, ignorant and unscrupulous exhibitors into leasing their stuff and showing it in their theaters. The gyppers gyp the exhibitors and they in turn gyp the public with ruinous result to the whole industry. What's the remedy? Cut these cancers out before they infect the whole body. Be honest with yourselves and the industry.

Misleading Advertisements.

We all know the power of advertising for good or evil. Nothing has been so misused, abused and prostituted. Through it fake medicines, nauseating nostrums and impure foods have been foisted on an unsuspecting public to kill or cure it. A few years ago a law was passed against misrepresentation and deception in advertisements. Misleading advertisements do more to injure the industry than anything else. What's the remedy? Cut 'em out. Be honest with yourselves and the industry.

Honest Reviewers.

The consumer demands honest reviews and criticisms. He wants straightforward, capable and conscientious opinions from the reviewers, free from bias and partiality. He doesn't want analytical, equivocal and hypercritical diagnoses of the pictures; he wants to know whether they are good, bad or indifferent. He wants to know whether they are comedies, melodramas or dramas. Whether they are slapstick, spectacular, sexthemes, society or sensational. He wants the reviewer to call a spade a spade so he will know what kind of a picture it is, so he can tell whether he wants it or not, or whether it is suitable for his patrons. The reviewers must be honest with themselves and the industry. All reviewers should be untramelled in the exercise and expression of their opinions, free from all restraint and prospective advertising. Personally we would never interfere with a reviewer unless we found him to be dishonest or incapable. The opinions of any man who is dominated by dictatorial censorship or supremacy are not worth the paper they are written on. How can we get such reviews? By being honest with ourselves and the industry.

Just a Word or Two in Conclusion.

A man may be more successful in business than we are because he is a better business man, a better manager, a better salesman or exhibitor, or anything else. If he is, admit it, but keep right on being honest. Be honest with ourselves, with the other fellow and honest with the industry. We have said before and repeat it: success is generally measured by monetary gain. That is not the standard. A gambler may become rich and a crook may acquire money. We can't all be rich, but we can all be honest. Be honest and you can look any man in the eye and tell him what you think.

HOLLYWOOD HONORS CECIL B. DE MILLE.

The most sincere tribute of appreciation ever paid to anyone connected with the motion picture industry was recently paid to Cecil B. De Mille, Artcraft director-general at the Lasky studio, by the citizens of Hollywood, California, where the Lasky studio is situated. At a public ceremony last week Mr. De Mille was presented with a beautiful loving cup by a committee of citizens in appreciation for his own and the studio's efforts in behalf of civic improvements, the Liberty Loan Bonds and the Red Cross Fund.

HAYDEN TALBOT WITH PARALTA.

Hayden Talbot, the playwright, has capitulated to the call of the moving picture. He was engaged, this week, to write original stories jointly for the Bessie Barriscale Feature Corporation and the J. Warren Kerrigan Feature Corporation, and will hereafter devote his time exclusively to these two organizations.

A First Class Invitation to Mr. John Wylie and Mr. William A. Johnston

The motion picture exhibitors of America in convention assembled will, no doubt, be interested to know the truth or falsity of your repeated charges that I, their president, have used the high office they conferred upon me for my personal profit.

THESE CHARGES I ABSOLUTELY DENY.

It has served your purpose as publishers who take money out of the motion picture business and give mighty little in return, to attack me ever since I became President of the M. P. E. L. of A. Being libel shy, you have usually refrained from using names, but you have endeavored to make it plain that I founded the EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW for personal gain and that this was the sole reason for my seeking the honorable office of President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America.

Inasmuch as I specifically deny these charges, I invite you both to meet me personally in Chicago on the floor of the convention and submit your proofs. I shall ask the convention to give you the privilege of the floor and in turn I shall welcome the opportunity to reply.

I have started EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW solely in the interest of the motion picture exhibitors of America and its editorial and news columns from the first issue to the present are absolute proof of this assertion.

I have served without a dollar of personal profit, and more, I have served at a considerable sacrifice of time and money in order to make good my promises to my fellow exhibitors.

I will ask also that you both be permitted to tell of your profits made from the motion picture business and what real service, either to your advertisers or your readers, you have rendered in return. You can speak frankly, you can come in person to say in the open forum what you covertly charge against me in your endeavor to substitute poisonous vapors for fair criticism.

Wide openly yours,

Lee A. Ochs

Methods of President Ochs

OUR correspondent in Portland, Oregon, sends us a report of the meetings addressed in his city by the President of the Exhibitors' League on his recent tour that makes interesting reading. It is safe to assume that his statements in Portland are typical of his deliverances elsewhere. After a few commonplace remarks on petty jealousy and co-operation among exhibitors, placing the blame on the distributors for most of the troubles of the industry, etc., the President soon got down to the real business and "started in on a vituperative denunciation of every trade journal but his own." He is reported as saying "Exhibitors, you are the under dog. The way to do away with that condition is to have a trade organ devoted to your interests. If you have a grievance, come out in the Exhibitors' Trade Review and say it. Don't think you can say it in any other trade journal."

We want to say to Mr. Ochs that none know better than himself and some of his associates that this statement is wholly false. He knows that the columns of the Moving Picture World have always been open to exhibitors and that they have been urged to write us at all times. He knows, if he knows anything about the League, that this paper has consistently boosted the cause of exhibitors' organization and that but for the Moving Picture World there might be much less of a League today than there is.

Continuing, Mr. Ochs said: "If the World is for the exhibitor, you've got to show it to me." Conditions are the same today, Mr. Ochs, as when you, along with about twenty-five other prominent exhibitors throughout the country, voluntarily signed at the convention last summer a testimonial expressing "our sincere appreciation of the Moving Picture World for its loyal and intelligent service to the motion picture industry and to the exhibitors in particular."

Our correspondent says Mr. Ochs then went on to tell of his doings in connection with the two Exhibitions last summer and how the Moving Picture World had edited the copy for his advertisements.

Yes, Mr. Ochs, we did insist on editing your copy, if it was yours, just as we have insisted time and again on editing copy when any advertiser attempted to use our advertising pages for purely personal statements or innuendos directed at other advertisers. We still have that original copy on file and if any fair-minded exhibitor in the whole United States will not justify our act after seeing the copy, we will gladly admit that we made a mistake. Frankly tell your audiences while you are at it, that we did not object to running the advertisement, but only to the personalities that it contained; and while you are telling them about this particular advertising why not tell whether it was ever paid for or not. Why try to make capital out of this if it did not cost you or the organization a cent?

Again quoting Mr. Ochs: "Previous to starting the Trade Review I was a great fellow; after that they all came out and pounded me." As far as the World is concerned, this statement is doubly false. In the first place, we never lauded you as either great or good, except in as far as the member of our staff who later went over to your paper wrote of you, and he knows that at least one of his articles was trimmed quite considerably because it was so full of fulsome praise of yourself and of your fancied achievements. If you and your cause got any benefit from an employee of this paper to the extent of using him through his articles and in promoting the interests of your proposed publication while still in our employ, you are welcome to it and to his services.

Your statement is again false, because we have not pounded you, as exhibitors well know, although they do not know all the facts in our possession on which we might have pounded you justly. Again, why not tell the exhibitors about the one advertisement of yours that we did refuse absolutely, viz, that one in which you endeavored to use our advertising columns to make an attack on the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, through raking up an incident hoary with age? Are there any exhibitors who have any doubt as to the real object of that attack?

Apropos the dollar subscription, Mr. Ochs said he was after all the circulation and when he got that the advertising would come to him. It is hardly necessary to point out that if he does not get the advertising he cannot long supply his paper to its subscribers at any such ridiculous rate. Our own rate of three times that amount would not enable us to mail our paper to subscribers for fifty-two weeks.

Mr. Ochs also says: "I am here to get before the exhibitors the Exhibitors' Trade Review. The Exhibitors' Trade Review is standing the expenses of my trip and it isn't costing the National League a cent."

Why should it cost the League a cent, Mr. Ochs? Your present trip through the country is primarily in the interest of your paper, and another year of prestige that comes with the office of president of the Exhibitors' League might put it over. This is all that is in your mind at present and your interest in exhibitor organization goes no further and it went no further when you sought the election last year. We have understood that Mr. Fred Herrington is National Organizer for the League and he is the one who should be meeting exhibitors in all parts of the country on bona fide organization matters.

As president of the League would it not be better to build up your private enterprise on its own foundation rather than under the guise of working for the interests of the exhibitor? Again, why use your office as president of the League in an attempt to throw discredit on other publications. Is your proposition such that it can only succeed by such methods, or is this simply your usual way of doing business?

As far as the Moviing Picture World is concerned, it has openly espoused the cause of organization among exhibitors at all times and under all conditions, because it firmly believes in it. It has not only advocated the cases of the Exhibitors' League in its columns at all times, but it has paid the expenses time and again of members of its staff to help whenever and wherever possible, and yet when it suits your ends, you, as president, not only ignore these facts, but try to discredit them.

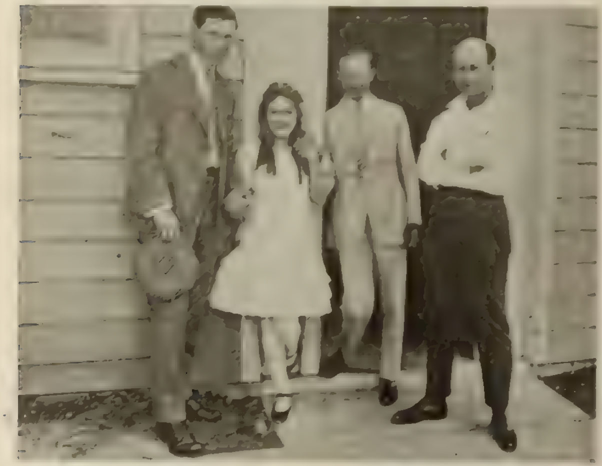
What chance would straightforward business interests in any branch of the trade stand with your methods?

~~"SONG boosters are appearing in local motion picture theaters again," says our Louisville correspondent. They ask no pay for song, but they choose their songs not by what they think the people want, but by some other idea. This wabbling advertisement and its near relative, the advertising slide or film, are perennial like iron weed in a farmer's garden. They systematically rob good soil and give no good return. An exhibitor who has paid for this mistake in the past will not be likely to repeat his experience. The exhibitor who has not paid and tries it will pay in his turn.~~

Hart to Make Pictures for Artcraft

First Production by C. Gardner Sullivan, Supervised By Thomas H. Ince, to Be Made on West Coast.

THE first official announcement from William S. Hart regarding his future activities was given out at the quarters of the Artcraft Pictures Corporaion in New York last week. Many conflicting rumors and suppositions have been printed as to his new affiliation, but in a statement issued by the star through the Artcraft office, he clearly defines his plans for the future and announces that he will start work on his initial production under the new arrangement within a week. It also involves the formation of the William S. Hart Producing Company to release its product through Artcraft.



Mary Pickford, Jesse L. Lasky and Cecil B. De Mille Welcoming William S. Hart to the Artcraft Fold.

"I expect to start work within a week on the first production to be released by the William S. Hart Producing Company," said Mr. Hart. "The story was written especially for me by C. Gardner Sullivan and will be supervised by Thomas H. Ince and released by him through Artcraft. All of my future productions will be released in this manner. It has taken me some time to effect my present happy alliance, and I am sure that under Mr. Ince's supervision and on the Artcraft program the greater portion of the public will have an opportunity to see my productions."

It was also learned that preparations are now well under way for the production of the initial Hart-Artcraft photoplay on the West Coast and that studio arrangements have been completed so that actual screening can be commenced promptly. The Hart-Ince-Sullivan combination in the presentation of a film play offers one of the most potent producing units ever conceived. In their respective branches of the industry this star, producer and author rank among the foremost in the motion picture world.

The wonderful popularity of William S. Hart is as a direct result of unusual merit as displayed in all of his previous screen efforts. Wherever motion pictures are shown in this and other countries his characterizations have met with the immediate approval and admiration of the amusement seeking public.

Wilbur Bates

WILBUR BATES, general publicity man for Paralta Plays, Inc., and the Bessie Barriscale and J. Warren Kerrigan producing companies, has had a most interesting career as a newspaper reporter and theatrical advertising man.

He is a native of Boston. He ran away from home when between thirteen and fourteen years of age. He obtained a job as office boy in a detective agency and in a few weeks became a full fledged "operative." When he was sixteen he joined the detective staff of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. He began writing his experiences and soon attracted the attention of Charles B. Danforth, who gave him a position on the staff of the Boston Herald.

Wilbur Bates.

Mr. Bates' newspaper career was jammed full of exciting and sensational experiences. During his newspaper career he solved two big murder cases and several minor mysteries. After several years of sensational newspaper work Mr. Bates turned to the theatrical field. His first position with theatricals was advance man for "The Devil's Auction." Three years later he joined Liebler & Co., and did the press work for their first attraction—"The Royal Box."

The following season he exploited this firm's production of Hall Caine's "The Christian." This attraction proved the biggest financial success in the history of the American theater up to that time, creating a sensation in theatrical circles.

After a long New York run "The Christian" held the stage at the Boston Museum for fourteen weeks, with an advance sale constantly maintained above $8,000, except during the last three weeks. The extraordinary success of "The Christian" was due to an intensive system of constant newspaper work (originated by Mr. Bates and put into practice for the first time with this attraction), beginning the first day of June prior to its first presentation in September, 1898.

In October, 1899, Mr. Bates joined Klaw & Erlanger as general representative and was the first newspaper man permanently employed "the year round" by any theatrical firm as general representative to do nation-wide publicity work. Beginning with the exploitation of "Ben Hur" in October, 1899, he remained with Klaw & Erlanger nearly ten years, covering all their attractions and theaters.

In May, 1908, he abandoned theatrical newspaper work and took up scientific publicity and special correspondence and continued in this field until he was engaged by David Wark Griffith in the exploitation of "Intolerance." In March last he accepted his present engagement with Paralta Plays.

Methods of creating and disseminating publicity which are now regarded by many as the results of "efficiency" of late formulation and adoption, were in practical operation in the offices of Klaw & Erlanger, under Mr. Bates' direction, eighteen years ago.

His experience of years of constant correspondence with dramatic and Sunday editors throughout the United States has given him a remarkably wide acquaintance among newspaper men, of whom hundreds are his personal friends.

SPENCE PROMOTED BY FOX.

Ralph H. Spence, formerly staff writer with the Mack Sennett forces, has been recently appointed assistant manager of the comedy department of the William Fox Hollywood studios. Mr. Spence left the Keystone studio two months ago to write comedy scenarios for Fox, and his promotion is evidence of the fact that he has succeded in injecting several chuckles into Foxfilm comedies. In addition to writing scenarios Mr. Spence is writing subtitles.

New Film Fake Uncovered in Kansas

Proprietor Kuhn, of the Crystal Theater, Describes How a Smooth Young Man Raised $25 in Ellis.

THE Moving Picture World has received from G. A. Kuhn, proprietor of the Crystal Theater and Airdome of Ellis, Kan., a complaint of the activities of a young man giving the name of George Ellis and purporting to represent the National Film Company of New York, Box No. 1478, New York City postoffice. For the information of other exhibitors we print a summary of the scheme as outlined by Mr. Kuhn. Five merchants of the town were induced to make a preliminary payment of $5 and agreed to make a subsequent one of the same amount in order to advertise on the local screens various articles of commerce which were being sold by them. It was represented to them that the National Film Company was organized for the purpose of advertising goods of manufacturers, four of which were named.

Each one of the manufacturers was to have produced each week for thirty-two weeks a film of eighty feet in length. These were to be joined and shipped over a circuit and to be shown by the exhibitors, the film company to remunerate the latter and the exhibitors to be under no further expense. The $10 the merchants were to pay was said to be for expressage.

Mr. Kuhn says he wrote the National Film Company seeking verification of the proposition, but that in two weeks' time he has received no answer. He adds that the five merchants have intimated they are willing to contribute $25 apiece more if by so doing they may contribute to the restraint of the young man who said his name was Ellis.

The National Film Company is not listed in the New York City telephone directory. Box 1478, New York postoffice, is held by a reputable concern not in the film business.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of July 15 at New York's Motion Picture Houses.

"Forbidden Paths" at the Strand.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA and Vivian Martin were seen at the Strand theater the week of July 15 in "Forbidden Paths," produced by Jesse L. Lasky, under the direction of Robert Thornby from an original story by Eve Unsell. The story concerns Mildred Thornton, a wealthy young American girl who becomes the ward of Sato, her father's Japanese partner upon her father's death. The co-stars are supported by a splendid cast including Tom Forman, James Neill and Carmen Phillips. An extra attraction was the first official and authentic pictures of Uncle Sam's troops training behind the firing lines in France. Another feature was "Strictly Business," O. Henry's famous story of theatrical life. An interesting educational feature was "The Manufacture of Printing Paper," showing the evolution from wood pulp to printing press.

The soloists were Grace Hoffman and Micha, violin.

"The Sawdust Ring" at the Rialto.

"The Sawdust Ring," the Triangle comedy-drama featuring Bessie Love, was shown at the Rialto. L. V. Jefferson, the author, and Paul Powell, the director, have gone to great lengths in giving the picture every conceivable touch of realism. The star is seen as a wistful little small town girl in whose blood the call of the sawdust ring is surging. "Shells and Shivers," a Vitagraph comedy, directed by Lawrence Semon; "Jamaica, the Land of Springs," a scenic picture of exceptional charm; and the Animated Magazine completed the picture program.

Signor Marion Rodolfo, Mlle. Madeleine D'Espinoy and Mr. Henry Berton were the soloists. Henry Herbert, of the late Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree's company, declaimed "The Road to France," by Daniel M. Henderson, the poem which won the prize contest conducted by The National Arts Club of New York.

"The Lone Wolf" at the Broadway.

Louis Joseph Vance's absorbing novel, "The Lone Wolf," done into a well wrought screendrama by Herbert Brenon, is in the third week of its successful run at the Broadway theater.

Bill at the Eighty-First Street Theater.

At the Eighty-first Street theater the following pictures were shown: On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Louise Glaum, in "A Strange Transgressor," and Jack Dillon in a lively Triangle comedy, "His Sudden Rival"; and on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Dorothy Dalton in "The Flame of the Yukon" and "The Dog Catcher" were the features.

Sheldon Lewis in "The Hidden Hand"

SHELDON LEWIS, well known and greatly hated the world over among serial fans for the excellent work he did as the "Iron Claw," the villain in the Pathe serial of the same name, despite his excellent villainies on the screen, objects to being called a villain. According to Mr. Lewis no man on the stage or on the screen is a hero or a villain—they are both characters and they are giving character studies of the parts assigned them.

"Perhaps it was the schooling I received in the old Daly theater," said Sheldon Lewis, who is a featured member of the cast in "The Hidden Hand," the Pathe serial which will be released sometime next fall, in which Miss Doris Kenyon is being starred.

Sheldon Lewis.

"The old Daly theater was as much a dramatic school as it was a theater. In the company we all did character work there were no heroes and no villains—no heroines and no vampires. It was continuous work for all of us to approach any way near to the high standard Mr. Daly had set and it was our endeavor to obtain his seal of approval on our work."

Mr. Lewis has the reputation of having played more parts on the legitimate stage than any other actor in America. These parts number above five hundred. In the halcyon days of stock in New York City, Mr. Lewis was a favorite. He supported Ada Rehan at Daly's theater in Shakespeare comedies such as "The Taming of the Shrew," and "As You Like It" and in Sheridan's "School for Scandal." After Mr. Daly's death he went on tour with Ada Rehan and played leads opposite that famous actress.

Mr. Lewis was a member of the company of the first endowed playhouse in America. This cast was assembled for the New theater in Chicago four years before the New York project became an accomplished fact.

Mr. Lewis is playing the part of Dr. Scorley in the mystery serial, "The Hidden Hand." His greatest screen parts have been the "Clutching Hand" in "The Exploits of Elaine," and the "Iron Claw" in the Pathe serial of the same name. His first screen work was in a Pathe production and he says it feels like home to work under a Pathe banner again.

PATHE BUYS TWO LARGE SUBJECTS.

Florence Reed and Robert Warwick are two new Pathe stars as the result of the purchase by Pathe of "To-day," starring Florence Reed, and "The Mad Lover," starring Robert Warwick. "Today" was reviewed in the Moving Picture World on June 23.

J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, secured these pictures from Harry Rapf, the producer, after weeks of spirited bidding in which practically all the big distributing agents of the country participated. The checks that changed hands for these pictures represented a large sum.

"Today" and "The Mad Lover" will have a Broadway showing immediately, both these pictures having been booked by the Strand theater management. "The Mad Lover" will be shown the week of July 28 and "Today" at a later date.

Mr. Berst announces that the purchase of these superfeatures is one of a series of movies he is making to begin releasing, this fall, the highest grade feature program. He states that in accordance with the Pathe policy announced last spring he will have at least a dozen superfeatures of unsurpassed excellence ready for release on the Pathe all-star superfeature program of September 1.

Pathe Announces Work of Six Months

Over 27,000,000 Feet of Positive Film Issued in First Half of 1917—American House Thirteen Years Old.

"THE output of positive film, printed and published in our two factories in Bound Brook and Jersey City, N. J., for the first six months of 1917 has been over 27,000,000 feet," announces J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. This is the first time that any announcement has been made which would tend to show the vast output of the Pathe American factories. It is made on the occasion of the double anniversary of the founding of the Pathe American house and of Mr. Berst as its chief executive, of which the Pathe Exchange, Inc., is justly proud.

First Pathe American Studio, Jersey City, N. J.

On July 18, 1904, Mr. Berst arrived in New York from Paris and established the American house of Pathe. From the small beginnings of a tiny office on Twenty-third street have sprung the fine offices on Forty-fifth street, occupying two floors of a modern office building, the thirty branch offices in the United States, the big factory at Bound Brook, N. J., and the studios in Jersey City. At the start Mr. Berst comprised the entire staff of his office. Today there are several thousands of persons on the payrolls of the Pathe Exchange and as many more depend upon the big house for their living, although not on the Pathe salary list. Here is a record of growth and achievement of which Mr. Berst may well be proud. Of the thirteen years only two were not spent in advancing Pathe's interests—1914 and 1915, in which years he held the office of president of the General Film Company, and later that of vice president and general manager of Selig. His entire business career of twenty-one years has been in the film business and of the twenty-one, nineteen have been with one concern—Pathe, doubtless a record.

The first six months of 1917 have shown a wider activity, a larger business and a healthier condition than any previous six months in the Pathe history. Not only is the quality of Pathe pictures higher than at any time in the past, but Mr. Berst has entirely done away with the old hit and miss methods that were once so characteristic of every film manufacturer and producer. The system under which the Pathe Exchange is now operated equals in efficiency that of any other large concern in any line of business. This efficiency is not only applied in the methods of the home offices, but also in the exchanges. The Pathe organization is today closely welded together, able, enthusiastic and loyal, and with the tremendous "hitting power" that such a powerful and wealthy organization, directed with such intelligence must have.

The recent engagement of Mrs. Vernon Castle is illustrative of Mr. Beret's intention of building up the Pathe feature program to a point where every star on it is a box-office attraction. The acid test of box-office worth will in the future be applied to all featured players in Pathe pictures. With two different serial episodes each week, with a five or six-reel feature, with the Lonesome Luke comedies, the Combitone scenics and educationals, with the famous Pathe colored scenics, with the Official Government War Pictures, with the International animated cartoons and the Hearst-Pathe News, the Pathe program is remarkably well balanced.

The board of governors of the Pathe Club, in honor of Mr. Berst's anniversary, gave him a dinner on July 18. It was not the ordinary "testimonial" dinner, but a mark of real affection on the part of the "boys" with whom Mr. Berst is in closest contact in his daily business life, for they have each and all found "the big boss" to be ever an exponent of the square deal.

Sherman Dines Trade Journalists

President of Newly-Formed Sherman Pictures Corporation Host at McAlpin Hotel.

HARRY A. SHERMAN, president of the newly-formed Sherman Pictures Corporation, was the host at a dinner given the motion picture trade journalists in the Hotel McAlpin on Tuesday, July 10. There were upwards of forty persons in attendance, including members of Mr. Sherman's organization. The affair was informal, and to state that the night was made by the host one long to be remembered is superfluous, because it is a known fact that wherever Harry Sherman is good fellowship follows in his wake.

In an informal address Mr. Sherman told the gathered "blue-pencilers" of his contemplated plans. He said that he had come to New York and branched out into the state rights field in the East because New York had been his Mecca ever since he entered the picture business. He said that he was confident of success, mostly because of his confidence in the future of the state rights field. Briefly Mr. Sherman went over his past experiences, and with all due modesty, but with a just pride, said that all his ventures had been successful, and that he had always made money for the investors who were associated with him. He expressed himself as confident of the future success of the Sherman Pictures Corporation, whose first purchases are George Loane Tucker's "I Believe" and "The Land of the Rising Sun."

Beside Mr. Sherman and the representatives of the trade press there were in attendance at the dinner Edward O'Donnell and Milton Goldsmith, of Sherman Pictures Corporation, and H. H. Van Loan and Alfred Biggs, of Shepard and Van Loan.

NAZIMOVA WITH METRO.

Metro has signed Nazimova. The negotiations, which have been quietly under way for the past four weeks, culminated on Friday with the signing of a contract whereby the great stage and screen star is to appear exclusively in big productions by the Metro company. It is announced that Nazimova will be included in the star series pictures. The contract calls for a long series of big productions, and three of these have been already selected by Maxwell Karger, who will have general supervision of the Nazimova pictures. These will be big theme pictures from dramatic stories suitable for the emotional talents of Nazimova.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Texas Exhibitors' Convention

Hold Biggest Meeting in History of Trade—S. L. Rothapfel Makes Address.

TEXAS exhibitors have declared for democracy. They intend to fight, in a wise way, the atrocities of autocratic censorship in that they are to be their own censors and not cause the story of a picture to suffer because of the whims of those who are egotistical enough to admit that they are mentally capable of judging whether the less fortunate (?) public shall be harmed by certain veins of friction in the way of motion pictures

That just about sums up one of the decisions of the members of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association, which concluded the most successful series of sessions in the history of the organization held in Galveston on July 10. The convention was the most successful from the fact that it was more largely attended and that the delegates were there for business.

Presided over by E. H. Hulsey, owner of the most exclusive theaters in Waco, Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston and Galveston, the convention opened on Monday, July 9. Mr Hulsey explained to the delegates, about one hundred in number, that the prime object of the meeting was to get the Texas exhibitors to "clean up" their own houses, instead of letting reformers attempt to do the work for them, thereby creating a higher standard of amusement for the patrons of their respective theaters.

"It is the intention of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association," said Mr. Hulsey, "to induce each theater manager to 'cut' the objectionable features or suggestive episodes from pictures that he shows, proving to the public that censorship is superfluous. We realize that indecency does not pay. A majority of theater patrons are opposed to it and no house can thrive by using improper films."

Mr. Hulsey explained that while there is no consistent demand for improper pictures it was to the interest of every exhibitor to guard against pandering to vulgar tastes, which inevitably would lead to the closing of the theater.

That the exhibitors of Texas stand for clean pictures was proven by the applause that greeted President Hulsey's remarks.

The formation of an adjustment board to dispose of controversies arising between exhibitors and film exchanges, for the protection of both, was authorized by the convention. The executive board of the organization will look after the inauguration of the work of the bureau, which is to be composed of two representatives of exhibitors, two from film exchanges and one disinterested party who will be chairman. The official headquarters of the adjustment board will be in Dallas.

Another important detail for the permanency of the association on a sound footing was the adoption, by unanimous vote, of a new constitution. According to the provisions of the new foundational laws, the president, vice-president and treasurer of the association are to be elected from the membership of the executive committee, which was elected in the following: E. H. Hulsey, Dallas-Galveston-Houston; W. J. Lytle, San Antonio; A. A. Chouteau, Dallas; C. J. Musselman, Paris; P. C. Levy, Fort Worth; Harry Van de Mark, Houston, and W. E. Weatherford, Dallas.

Provision is also made in the constitution for a vice-president in each senatorial district in Texas, a labor committee in each senatorial district, a legislative committee, a finance committee and an arbitration committee. The following vice-presidents were elected from their respective senatorial districts: Charles Kimball, McKinney; V. J. Grunder, Cuero; W. E. Box, San Antonio; Ben B. Lewis, El Paso; O. A. Englebrecht, Temple, and H. W. Coon, Amarillo.

A resolution thanking the labor organizations of the state for their co-operation in having certain legislation passed during the recent session of state law makers was adopted.

S. L. Rothapfel, president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and managing director of the famous Rialto theater in New York, made an address to the convention. He stated that more attention should be devoted to placing in front rank the character of the picture theater rather than placing too much emphasis on the picture, although stating that it was of first importance that good pictures be shown. Mr. Rothapfel further stated that exhibitors should set examples for their employees in neatness and courtesy toward the public that patronized their respective theaters.

A. A. Chouteau, district manager for the Interstate Amusement Company, with headquarters at Dallas, spoke about eliminating "white slave" scenes as well as scenes that implied improper actions behind stage between managers and performers. Mr. Chouteau stated that "stage door Johnny" scenes, which never exist in actuality, had a tendency to blacken the reputation of a house.

E. V. Richards, Jr., who recently opened the Strand theater at New Orleans, La., which is modeled after the New York Rialto theater, was introduced to the assemblage of exhibitors and managers. In a brief speech Mr. Richards outlined the fact, which he also strenuously advocated, that the organization should take steps to further every branch of the association.

Robert H. Campbell, Dallas, in his semi-annual report, told the members of the organization that the membership had increased. He stated that he desired to report again next session that the association's membership had increased. In explanation as to the formation of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, E. H. Hulsey, who has jurisdiction over Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas for the circuit, stated that it was brought about for the purpose of creating co-operation among the high-class theaters of the country and to secure for one another the very highest class pictures.

"In securing the Chaplin contract," stated Mr. Hulsey, "we bid against a concern that outbid us $200,000, but Mr. Chaplin awarded his services to us because he realized that by placing the business in our hands his productions would be shown only in the very best class of houses and that we would not rush him in making his pictures, to the extent of injuring the details of the production.

"I wish to state that the Chaplin pictures will be of two and three reels in length and that every bit of vulgarity will positively be eliminated."

The next convention of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association will be held in Dallas. This was unanimously decided upon by the delegates who pledged themselves to exert their every energy in making the next meeting, which will convene on December 10, 1917, even more successful than the Galveston meeting.

To insure proper attention to every detail toward the success of the Dallas convention the following official committees were appointed:

Entertainment—S. T. McDonald, Galveston; Paul Barraco, Houston; Harry Van de Mark, Houston.

Boston After Next Year's Convention

Committee of Representative New England Film Men Going Strong on Advantages of Beantown.

BOSTON is making a hot fight for the honor of entertaining the exhibitors in 1918. It wants the convention and exposition for Beantown. When Boston wants a thing it just "nacherly" goes out and gets it. At least, that has been the invariable rule with the picture men in the New England capital.

For the last few weeks a committee of representative motion picture exhibitors and film men have been stirring up things in the Hub. They have been telling exhibitors in other states the advantages of Boston as an exposition city, especially in the summer time. They have issued circulars and they have put out a booklet that is the real thing as an accelerator. The latter contains twenty-four pages and cover. When it is opened it bears a shape that will bring tears to the eyes of expatriated New Englanders—that of the old family beanpot. Strung on the velvet binding cord is a large bean.

Lest the psychology of these purely gastronimic arguments be lacking in convincingness, the pages set forth in print and in halftones many of Boston's attractions. On the first page is this announcement:

"Boosters Booming Boston—An organization of representative men of the New England photoplay interests (members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America) extend a cordial invitation to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the National Association of Motion Picture Engineers and the Film Clubs of America to hold their annual conventions and the 1918 Movie Exposition at Boston in July, 1918."

The officers of the Boosters are: P. F. Lydon, chairman; B. H. Cornell, vice-chairman; N. H. Gordon, treasurer, and A. Somerby, secretary. Sam Grant is chairman of the publicity committee and he is assisted by J. A. Di Pesa and L. Dadmun. The other Boosters are: H. Asher, A. S. Black, C. H. Bean, H. F. Campbell, J. M. Casey, E. Golden, A. Goodside, E. R Gregory, C. W. Hodgdon, E. H. Horstmann, F. J. Howard, B. J. Kaplan, L. S. Levin, J. Lourie, M. J. Lydon, R. D. Marson, L. B. Mayer, M. Mitchel, S. M. Moscow, H. G. Segal, W. B. Sproule, A. F. Washburn, H. I. Wasserman.

The party left Boston at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning and arrived in Chicago at 11.50 Monday noon. It was planned to leave Chicago Thursday midnight for Detroit, spending the day in the latter city and taking the boat for Buffalo at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Saturday will be spent at Niagara Falls. Saturday midnight the Yankees take the train for Albany, thence proceeding to New York by boat. Monday evening the start will be made for home, by way of the all-water route—meaning, of course, Long Island Sound.

Louisiana League Meeting

First State Convention at New Orleans on July 4 Is Big Success.

THE first state convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Louisiana was held in New Orleans on July 4 and it was an exceptionally well-attended meeting. No less surprising than the very good attendance was the enthusiastic spirit that characterized all of the deliberations of the body. It is true there was but one business session of the body, but the prime purpose of the convention was to effect a sort of get-together sentiment and to impress upon every exhibitor in the state the supreme importance of forming and maintaining an organization that shall be powerful and efficent. There were no dull moments in the convention nor during the sojourn of the visitors. Upon the arrival of the delegates and visitors they were registered at the convention headquarters in the Grunewald Hotel, provided with badges and turned over to the care of the committees of local exhibitors who made it a point to see that none of the visitors became lonesome.

At noon a business session was held at which the names of many of the leading exhibitors of the state were added to the rolls and each member, old or new, promised to make himself a committee of one to secure at least one new member to the League. The membership roster would have been still further augmented had the convention been held on almost any other date, had such a thing been regarded as advisable. On July 4 nearly all of the exhibitors had arranged special programs for their theaters and many of the proprietors of the larger theaters felt that it was not a wise business move to be absent from home on that day. However, the circumstances made this date desirable, one of which circumstances was the formal opening of the magnificent new Strand theater under the personal direction of S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto theater in New York. Louisiana exhibitors expected to secure valuable pointers from the opening of the Strand theater and they also wanted to hear what one of the most successful exhibitors in the country might have to say to them.

An elaborate luncheon was served in the Green Room of the Grunewald Hotel after the business meeting at which talks were made by S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto theater, New York; E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Amusement company; Al G. Shear, of the Sobel- Richards-Shear Enterprises; N. E. Thatcher, motion picture editor of the Times-Picayune; Mrs. J. E. Lansing, chairman of the motion picture committee of the City Federation of Woman's Clubs, and others. A storm prevented the automobile ride about the city, but in the evening the members and visitors were entertained by the Saenger Amusement company at a special performance in the South's most beautiful theater. At this performance a feature motion picture reel, made at noon by the Harcol Film company, showing all of the visitors in parade was shown, and the evening ended most auspiciously.

The officers of the Louisiana League are A. G. Gugel, president; N. I. Ehrlich, first vice-president; R. J. Burnett, second vice president; B. F. Brennan, secretary; and L. J. Yarrat, treasurer. The matter of selecting a delegate to the Motion Picture Interests Convention in Chicago was carried over to the regular meeting of the League, which was held on the first Tuesday in the month.

LEVINE SAYS HE'S UNPLEDGED.

Brooklyn, N. Y., July 13, 1917

Editor, Moving Picture World,

Dear Sir: The following item appears in the July 21st issue of the Exhibitors' Herald: "New York is divided in its choice, with Levine and Trigger leading the opposition against Ochs."

As I will be unable to get a contradiction in the columns of that paper in time to reach the convention, I ask you to give prominence to this letter. The statement published in Exhibitors' Herald is entirely unauthorized and without foundation on fact. I am going to Chicago with an open mind, and with the intention of giving the man whom I believe to be the best man for the position my support, with my present inclination favoring Lee A. Ochs.

Yours very truly,
LOUIS L. LEVINE.

Woods Engaged by Famous Players-Lasky

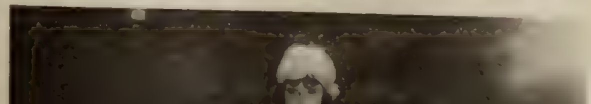
Former Supervisor of Production of Fine Arts Studios to Be Stationed at Pacific Coast Studios.

JESSE L. LASKY, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who is in active charge of all the producing activities of the concern, last week announced through the New York Paramount offices that Frank E. Woods has been engaged as general manager of productions of the Lasky Company under Director General Cecil De Mille. Mr. Woods is the author of the original scenario of "The Birth of a Nation" and was former general manager for D. W. Griffith and supervisor of productions of the Fine Arts Studios.

Mr. Lasky in his announcement, which was wired to the New York office from Hollywood, stated that owing to the increased size of the Lasky studio, it is the desire of that organization to have the most capable men of the motion picture industry in official capacities. "Mr. Woods," says Mr. Lasky, "will have complete charge of the story from the time it is passed from the reader until it is ready to be released on the Paramount program. He will work directly with the writers and directors. This relieves some of the burden from the shoulders of Milton E. Homan, who still retains the position of Studio General Manager and it does not affect the department of Fred Kley as Production Business Manager.

Gretchen Hartman

THEY say an actress is born and not made. This maxim is preëminently true of Gretchen Hartman, star in Ivan's "Married in Name Only." At the age of six Miss Hartman appeared in Ibsen's "Little Eyolf" as little Eyolf. Ibsen's remarkable play was the despair of theatrical managers. Whence procure a child so young yet possessing the artistry necessary to portray the title role?—for they who know, or even heard, of Ibsen, are aware of the difficulties confronted by those chosen to play the characters of that gigantic genius. Gretchen Hartman solved the problem, and it is no wonder that thereafter we find her playing in plays where special efforts were necessary. In the title role of Victor Hugo's "Cossette," she ravished the hearts of the audience, and as Mary Jane in "Mary Jane," one of the big Broadway successes, playing continuously for two years on Broadway, she took the city by storm.



Gretchen Hartman in "Married in Name Only."

In "Married in Name Only" Gretchen Hartman has a play after her own heart. The tremendous situations demand all of one's power. The battles of emotion depicted are of such raging force that only an artist who knows how to abandon all of herself to her work could do justice to the part. Gretchen Hartman, the woman in "Married in Name Only," accomplishes all that is expected from her. To use the words of Edmund Lawrence, who directed the picture, "she is all there."

"Little American" Wins

Major Funkhouser is Overruled by Judge and Jury in Chicago Court and Paramount Picture Will Be Shown.

Late on the evening of Saturday, July 14, the jury in Judge Sabath's court in Chicago, which had been hearing testimony in the action brought by the Paramount Corporation to have the ban against "The Little American" placed upon its showing by Major Funkhouser removed, brought in a verdict favorable to the picture.

Judge Sabath issued the necessary writ permitting the showing of the picture and, when the attorneys for Funkhouser made a motion for new trial, the Judge also delayed the hearing of that appeal so that nothing should prevent the Chicago public from seeing the picture.

There were no provisos—recommendations for cut-outs—in the jury's verdict; the picture will be shown in its entirety.

BUNN SOME FIRE FIGHTER.

Pathe's Chicago Manager Has Business Going Within Twenty-four Hours After Conflagration.

THE recent fire in Pathe's Chicago office, in which all films and advertising matter not in transit were destroyed, has proven the great efficiency of the Pathe organization, and due to that, Manager C. W. Bunn and his force resumed business within twenty-four hours, almost as if nothing had happened.

Pathe service proved equal to the emergency, and under the careful direction of the home office films were rushed to Chicago from St. Louis, New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Cincinnati, Detroit, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, and Pathe pictures were presented on the screen of Chicago and throughout the territory as usual.

The "Tank" film was among those which escaped injury, and through strenuous co-operation, prints not only of "The Tanks," but of the other picture, filled all but twenty bookings out of the hundreds made in the Chicago territory, those missed being of the smaller single reels.

The first thing Manager Bunn did was to wire the home office and then the neighboring branches, asking them to remain open so as to be of whatever assistance was possible.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, immediately left New York for Chicago to see that all requirements be met without any delay, leaving Manager Werkmeister and Assistant Manager Allers, of the export and trading department, to direct the movement of the film. The result was that: Indianapolis rushed pictures by automobile, Milwaukee also got film to the Chicago office before the smoke had cleared away, and other branches, able to make good train connections, jumped in to fill the gap, taking over for the moment parts of the Chicago territory.

"Every one worked like Trojans, and the result of this cooperation was complete recovery inside of twelve hours," said Mr. Berst on his return to his desk.

The most serious aspect of the fire is that there is rumor that it was of incendiary origin. Practically every exchange manager of Chicago has received letters of late threatening explosions and fire unless certain employees of the exchanges, including inspectors and packers, were unionized.

When the fire broke out, about 3 o'clock Sunday morning, there were four employees at work in the exchange. They heard a noise as of something dropping in the film vaults, and several explosions resulted. One of the steel doors of the concrete vaults was blown out, and flames spurted forth. The detonations were heard throughout the locality, and guests in neighboring hotels were frightened.

Manager C. W. Bunn proved himself to be an unusually cool headed executive in the face of the destruction of his film supply. Chief Booker Anderson did superhuman work to satisfy all customers. Manager Bunn stated that he has been connected with several other organizations, and that in none of them could he have expected so quick, friendly and efficient a response from branches of other territories. "I'll tell you there is a real business man," said the manager of another film exchange in the building who witnessed the whole affair. "Bunn set to work like a veteran general getting his forces together and meeting the hundred situations which arose after the fire. He had everything moving like clockwork from the start to the finish, and he was the coolest man in the building all the time. He deserves a lot of credit for the way he has pulled the exchange out of the emergency."

"The Little American" on Trial

All the Week Occupied in the Superior Court. Judge Sabath Presiding, Where the Case Will Be Decided by a Jury.

CHARLES P. SCHWARTZ, attorney for Paramount, filed a mandamus suit against the city of Chicago, Thursday, July 5, to compel the issuance of a permit for the presentation of "The Little American" in the city. The case came up in the Superior Court, Judge Sabath presiding, on Tuesday, July 10, and was set for trial the following day. The entire session was devoted to the question of the selection of a jury and the case was continued until Thursday, July 12.

[illegible] John Ayres, strenuously opposed the questioning of the members of the jury by opposing counsel, who wished to prove their fitness to serve; but Judge Sabath ruled that since the United States was at war with Germany, the counsel for Artcraft were within their rights in questioning the jury panel as to their sympathies before the war and at the [illegible]

Nearly the whole of Thursday's session was taken up by the selection of the jury, which was completed late in the afternoon.

Testimony given by Paul Shorey, professor of Greek in the University of Chicago, who, with many others, had seen "The Little American" at a private showing in the Studebaker, Monday, July 9, served to show that the exhibition of the picture in Chicago would have no tendency to break the peace.

"This picture would not create among Americans any unfavorable impression of Germans living in this country or of German-Americans loyal to the United States," said Professor Shorey. "I saw nothing in the picture, to my great surprise, which could possibly offend any loyal German-American."

To the suggestion of counsel for Artcraft, made sometime Thursday, that the picture should be shown in the courtroom for the benefit of the jury, Major Funkhouser immediately objected on the ground that it would be a violation of the city ordinances. It is understood, however, that Judge Sabath would arrange to have the jury see the picture sometime Friday, July 13, when the case, most probably, will be decided.

Chicago is angry over the autocratic part played by Major Funkhouser in this case. The following communication from a reader of the Tribune, which appeared in that paper July 10, is an illustration:

> [illegible] sixth German city of the world." As a matter of fact, Herr Funkhouser [illegible] the towering walls of the castle of Vonderblinkinstaufenheim. A bas, [illegible] ausgespielt, also verboten.

"Parentage," a Success at the Colonial.

"Parentage" has been in high vogue at the Colonial for its first week, and it will continue its run until Saturday, July 21. It has received excellent commendations from the photoplay critics of the Chicago dailies.

Kitty Kelly in the Examiner says: "That there is a high art of filming is indisputably proven by this serious, earnest, humorous, purposeful human document.

"It is fundamentally a purpose film, but handled in so artistic a manner that it seems the good fiction which we look upon as a mirror reflecting the life we know. It is really a holding of the mirror up to nature—some carefully selected nature which reflects the images desired."

Louella O. Parsons writes in the Herald: "'Parentage' is a picture of human beings and natural events. It is a series of real happenings, played by genuine people, whose types are so unquestionably good we seem to be glimpsing a page from the book of life rather than looking at a moving picture.

"There is a gigantic sermon in 'Parentage,' but so deftly and skillfully is the sermonizing done we are absorbing a lesson and at the same time being pleasantly entertained."

State Rights to "The Crisis" Now for Sale in Choice Western Territory.

Edward Nelson, president, and David H. Beecher, vice president of Sherman-Elliott Co., Inc., Minneapolis, were in the city Wednesday and Thursday, last week. They are now selling state rights for "The Crisis" in Western territory, in which they originally intended to present the picture themselves as, owing to pressure of other arrangements, they have been obliged to change their original plans.

The territory in question includes Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Washington, Montana, Idaho, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming.

"The Crisis" is making a remarkable run in which it is now being exhibited, and exhibitors report extraordinary business.

All communications regarding the state rights in the territory for sale should be addressed to Edward Nelson, president Sherman-Elliott Company, 854 McKnight building, Minneapolis.

Chicago Film Brevities.

George Berg, who filled the position of bookkeeper and auditor with George Kleine for many years, has formed the Amalgamated Film Service. He moved into his new office in Room 608, Schiller building, last week. Mr. Berg at one time was also a state rights representative for Mutual in this city, and afterward became manager of the City Hall Square branch of the General Film Co., this city. Mr. Berg informs me that he will handle one- and two-reel comedy features only, and will make a specialty of educational films.

W. R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., forwarded me last week a handsomely framed mat, which shows cut insets of the various departments in his fine studio and plant. This is an ideal advertisement, as it shows, without any fear of misunderstanding, just what the Rothacker plant and studios are, and how inclusive they are.

A delegation of students from the School of Commerce and Administration of the University of Chicago, recently visited the Rothacker plant under the direction of Professor N. W. Barnes. The students were shown every detail of film manufacturing and were also treated to a showing of a special series of educational and advertising films, which was accompanied by an interesting lecture.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel S. Hutchinson returned to Chicago last week, after an auto trip to the East, in which 5,000 miles were covered in three weeks. From personal investigations made in the Eastern states, Mr. Hutchinson is impressed that the film business is in very good shape. He found that feature pictures were booking readily, and that box-offices were doing well, as a rule. Mr. Hutchinson speaks glowingly of the success of Billy Russell in American-made features, and states also that Mary Miles Minter is not only keeping her pace, but is gaining in popularity. He also announced a very satisfactory outlook for the coming Juliette Day features. Mr. Hutchinson will leave for Santa Barbara in a few days.

The Lincoln Square theater, Decatur, Ill., was opened July 4th. This fine, modern house seats 1,400 people and cost, according to information received, nearly $200,000. It is located on the Circle, in the heart of the city and is within easy access from all stations. The theater has been built thoroughly fireproof and it can boast of one of the most modern ventilating systems, the air being thoroughly washed as it enters the house. The screen has a beautiful scenic setting painted by Eugene Cox, of Chicago. A well selected orchestra plays the music accompanying the pictures and the most polite service is rendered patrons by a well trained staff of ushers. Nate Erbert, formerly one of the owners as well as manager of the Bischer theater, Danville, Ill., is manager of the Lincoln Square. Manager Erber writes that he would like to hear from other photoplay theaters of the same prestige and standing as the Lincoln Square.

After a very successful run of three weeks at Orchestra Hall, "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre" was succeeded by Pathe's "Les Miserables" on Sunday, July 15. William Sievers, manager of the New Grand Central theater, St. Louis, exploited the picture, having purchased the state rights for a certain period, for the states of Illinois and Missouri. Mr. Sievers netted over $18,000 on that occasion.

Alice LaMont

A NEW motion picture star has burst upon the firmament, securely backed by her own company, guaranteed to establish her in what her friends believe to be her proper position in Screendom. Alice LaMont is the young lady's name—for she is but twenty-three years of age and quite comely, as the accompanying engraving shows. Heretofore Miss LaMont has played ingenue leads in stock companies on the Pacific coast. In pictures she has appeared with William S. Hart, under the direction of Richard E. Garrick and Eddie Lawrence. In both stock and pictures she is said to have registered no small measure of success.

Miss LaMont is dark in complexion and admirably fitted to depict Latin types; she is also quite versatile. It is the intention of her backers to star her in a company bearing her own name, the LaMont Feature Film Company, Inc., the brand being known as LaMont Features.

The officers of the new company are Clyde Colt, president and general manager; George Hansen, secretary and treasurer. These officers with Miss LaMont constitute the board of directors. The offices of the company are at 119 West 42d street, New York, occupying the entire floor.

It is the purpose of the new company to surround Miss LaMont with capable support and to select stories of clean character for screen production.

Screeners to Put on Minstrel Show

At the First Reel Also There Will Appear Stars of the Screen and of the Legitimate and Vaudeville Stages.

THE "First Reel" of the Screen Club at the Casino Theater on Sunday evening, July 29, will introduce to the public what will amount practically to a Lambs' Gambol and a Friars' Frolic combined. In addition to many leading men and women of the screen, stars of the legitimate and vaudeville stages will appear through the courtesy of the theatrical managers and the United Booking Office.

There will be a twenty-minute minstrel show of about forty men of prominence in the film world. This and the remainder of the show will be staged by Edward C. White. There will be available for the performance about 2,100 seats in the orchestra and balcony and an additional 200 which the boxes will accommodate. The boxes will be auctioned off at the clubhouse in a few days. The orchestra and balcony seats will be sold at $2.50 each.

The Screen Club has requested Shepard and Van Loan to issue the program and take charge of the publicity for its first entertainment. The program will contain a history of the film industry from the financial, manufacturing and production aspects. There will also be a history of the club, photographs of its members, biographical sketches and cartoons, and a list of the membership.

VIRGINIA PEARSON MAY HEAD OWN COMPANY.

Since it became generally known that Virginia Pearson's contract with William Fox is about to expire, the popular star has received several flattering offers from well known producers who are seeking her services for pretentious film productions.

Although Miss Pearson would neither deny nor affirm it, the rumor that she is considering an offer which will place her at the head of her own producing organization, releasing through one of the big distributing concerns, appears to be well founded.

Blackton to Produce for Paramount

Former Vitagraph Vice-President to Direct His Own Pictures Under New Arrangement.

ANOTHER significant change in motion picture producing circles became known last week when Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, just prior to his leaving for Chicago to attend the motion picture exhibitors' convention, announced that arrangements have been completed whereby J. Stuart Blackton, former vice-president of Vitagraph, will become an independent producer for the Paramount Pictures Corporation. While retaining his financial interest in Vitagraph, Mr. Blackton ceases all active connection with the concern and will form his own organization for the purpose of producing the new pictures which are to be known as the J. Stuart Blackton Series of Photoplays. There are to be four large productions during the first year.

J. Stuart Blackton.

Active work upon production is to be begun at once and the first picture is to be released about October 1. The remaining photoplays are to be ready for distribution at intervals of two or three months.

Coincidental with Mr. Zukor's announcement there comes a statement signed by Mr. Blackton relative to his future plans, which read as follows:

"I have devoted twenty years of my life to the art of motion pictures, and I am beginning to learn how little anyone knows of its marvelous possibilities. I am quite convinced that great pictures cannot be produced commercially. David Belasco could not produce fifty-two plays a year and keep them up to the Belasco standard. Great pictures cannot be painted, great books cannot be written, nor any great works of art or literature accomplished in a hurry or on scheduled time by routine work.

"I am going to apply my experience of long years of practical work added to my vision of future possibilities to the making of perhaps four artistic productions a year. They will be produced independently, and from scenarios to finished product every detail will be under my personal direction. Every production will be built upon the firm foundation of a literary masterpiece.

"'The play's the thing' and I have given careful consideration to the vehicles from which my pictures will be adapted. I believe that the writings of Sir Gilbert Parker offer a greater opportunity for picturizations than almost any other fiction of today through their vital, virile action, their unfailing deep note of sentiment and mysticism, and above all their high quality of that necessary attribute, imagination.

"I have been fortunate in securing practically all of Sir Gilbert Parker's important available work, and my association with him, and his keen personal interest in the screen picturization of his stories will prove an inspiration that will undoubtedly affect favorably the final result."

Mr. Blackton refused to discuss figures, but it was learned from reliable sources that he has given an option on his Vitagraph stock of over $1,500,000 to the Vitagraph Company to be purchased by payments approximately up to $250,000 a year during a period of years.

Catalogue of Educational and Selected Pictures

Released Between April 1, 1917, and June 30, 1917.

Compiled by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THIS list of educational and selected pictures released between April 1, 1917, and June 30, 1917, does not include the various news pictorials issued from week to week, such as the Animated Weekly, Current Events, the Mutual Weekly, the Hearst-Pathe News, the American War News Weekly, and the Selig-Tribune. It does, however, include in classified form subjects that have appeared in the film magazines, namely, Reel Life, Universal Screen Magazine, Paramount-Bray Pictographs, and World Library. Included in this catalogue will be found a list of dramas, comedies, comedy-dramas, and melodramas of the more wholesome type, and adaptations of literary works, all of which have been selected with a view to lessening the difficulties of moving picture exhibitors and others who are striving to improve the general character of the moving picture theater program. There will also be found information concerning the addresses of the manufacturing and distributing companies mentioned herein, and the location of the different productions through their brand names.

Australian Notes

THE censorship question here is still far from being settled, and this, together with the shortage of freight space, is causing exchanges much worry. Several films have been censored during the last few weeks, including "The Innocence of Lizette" and "As Man Made Her."

From the beginning of March until this week 404 films arrived in Sydney from overseas. They include 129 features, 45 serials (episodes), 140 comedies, and 62 scenics. Of these, 333 have been passed, while five features and two comedies have been banned. As yet no decision has been given in regard to the remaining 44 pictures.

The Federal Board's remarkable action in connection with the film, "The Mormon Maid," has seriously disturbed importers generally, and caused much controversy in the press. This film was held up by the Board at the request of the Hon. Simon Bamberger, Governor of Utah, who cabled asking that the Board hold the film till the arrival of a written protest by mail against the showing of the picture in Australia. The censors, however, after some delay, decided that the film was not in any way objectionable, and therefore passed it.

The Sydney press was indignant over the hold-up, and wanted to know if the Governor of an American State was going to be allowed to dictate to the Australian public what they should see.

Considerable activity in moving picture production in Australia is being manifested, and all studios are busily occupied. This has been influenced to a large extent by the entry of America into the war, and freight difficulties, both of which seriously threaten the maintenance of a regular supply of films from oversea.

"Australia's Peril," a six thousand-foot production, is undoubtedly the best film ever made in this country. In every way it is as good as American pictures, the photography and settings being very fine indeed.

The theme is similar to "The Battle Cry of Freedom," showing Australia being invaded by a German army, which is eventually driven out. Of course, there is the usual "love story" running through the picture, though this is not given any great prominence. For the battle scenes several thousand men in the Liverpool camp were placed at the disposal of the producer, and these scenes are therefore very effective.

Illustrated subtitles are also used, with a large measure of success. The credit for "Australia's Peril" is due to W. Franklyn Barrett.

While the show was in progress at the Boomerang Theater at Coogee, near Sydney, one night last week, a fire broke out in the operating box at the back of the dress circle, but, although flames showed through the opening in the front of the box, and the glare filled the building, the large audience took things quietly and remained seated. The blaze occurred just before the interval as a result of something going wrong with the machine. The film ignited, and before the flames were subdued with the aid of chemical extinguishers about 4,000 feet of film and the machine were damaged. The damage, which was confined to the interior of the operating box, is estimated at £200. The audience behaved splendidly, there being no suggestion of panic or excitement at any time. When the glare filled the theater, the manager (H. W. S. Bray) went into the body of the theater and announced that although a fire had broken out there was no need for alarm, as the operating box was fireproof. He also told them that they could leave if they wished, but there was no need for them to move. Consequently only four persons went out, the remainder retaining their seats and watching the manager and operator extinguish the flames.

The Film Renters' Association of Queensland has been formed, and includes all the firms and individuals in the exchange end of the business in the northern State. The initial step taken by the new association was to assist in enforcing the policy of the Federated Picture Showmen's Association with regard to the passing on to the public of the amusement tax.

Owing to the need of money for war purposes, it is very probable that the Amusement Tax will be extended to sixpenny and perhaps even three-penny tickets, according to an announcement by a member of Parliament this week.

* * *

The Progressive Film Service, Australian distributors of Mutual films, are at present making extensive alterations at their head office in Sydney, where, in the course of a few days, a very modern "theaterette," as their publicity manager terms it, will be opened. This is for the mutual benefit of the firm and exhibitors. A Power's 6B bioscope is being installed, and the seating of the "theaterette" will be sufficient for about 120 persons.

The first episode of "The Secret of the Submarine" was released this week in Adelaide, South Australia, and opened there to exceptionally big business.

John F. Gavin has finished his 3,000-foot comedy, "An Interrupted Divorce," which features Fred Bluett, a very popular English vaudeville artist. This film will not be released until the beginning of July, owing to the shortage of raw film in this country. Gavin is making preparations for the production of another feature, and work is beginning on this almost immediately.

In the death of Clement Mason, the Australian motion picture industry has lost one of its foremost pioneers. Mr. Mason succumbed to pneumonia at his residence at Watson's Bay, Sydney, this week. For many years he has been a popular figure in cinematograph and theatrical circles, and five years ago founded the Clement Mason Cinematograph Company, of which he was the head.

E. J. Carroll, who has been in America for the past few months, has purchased the Australasian rights of two fine films, "The Barrier" and "The Deemster." Mr. Carroll writes that "The Barrier" is the finest picture he has ever seen.

PARKE AGAINST MECHANICAL THRILLS.

William Parke, the Pathe-Astra director who produced "The Last of the Carnabys," which is Gladys Hulette's latest Pathe feature, to be released July 22d, gives a tip to photoplay authors in a recent interview. "The old-fashioned stage melodramas went out of existence because they ran out of mechanical thrills," says Mr. Parke. "Everything had been done and if motion pictures are to depend on mechanical thrills, I believe that they will not last. I think a story should be about real human beings, who say and do human things and that optimism and happiness should be the keynote. I firmly believe in the motion pictures because it is the entertainment of the millions and it has democratised the theater. I think that pictures must go on improving and that in three or four years results will be such as to make the present day films look very cheap in comparison.

KATHLEEN O'CONNOR ENGAGED BY ROLIN.

Kathleen O'Connor has been engaged by the Rolin Company to play opposite Toto, the Hippodrome clown, in Pathe comedies. Miss O'Connor was born in Dayton, Ohio, twenty years ago and gained her theatrical experience by playing in stock on the speaking stage for a number of years.

The present struggle with Germany seems to tie a stronger bond between the United States and the Latin-American Republics. The fact that the Brazilian navy is now patroling the east coast, goes far toward lessening the insurance on shipments to this territory.

MARIO MAJERONI IN METRO FEATURE.

Mario Majeroni, who plays the part of Dr. Trow in "A Sleeping Memory," a forthcoming Metro in which Emily Stevens is starred is a native of Italy. It was just twenty-five years ago on the 14th of July that this sterling artist made his initial appearance on the stage in Australia. It was in Sydney, and Mr. Majeroni had a small part. For thirteen years he played in Australia, and then he came to the United States, where he has appeared under the management of Charles Frohman, the Shuberts and John Drew. Four years ago, Mr. Majeroni deserted the stage for the silent drama, and since that time he has appeared almost exclusively in pictures. His first Metro appearance was made in support of Ethel Barrymore in the special production, "The Call of Her People."

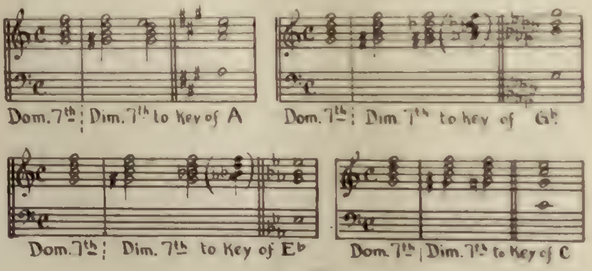
IMPROVISING (Part II, Continued).

By Clarence E. Sinn.

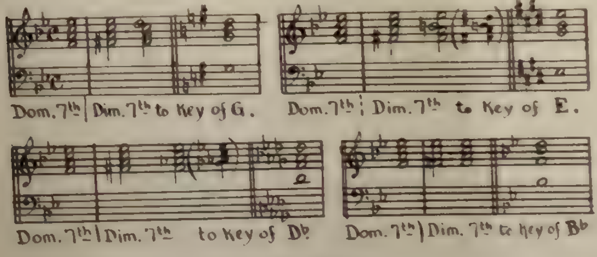
IN Example 29 and 29½ we see a dominant 7th of the key of F converted to a diminished 7th (by raising the fundamental C to C sharp—a half tone), and how by lowering a half tone any other note in the resultant chord we may obtain a dominant 7th of some other key. To complete the circle we will now give two other examples, viz.: Example 31 and Example 32. Example 31 is in the key of C, and the first chord shown is the dominant 7th of the key of C. You will notice that this chord is built upon "G" (the dominant of C) and, counting upward, reads "G, B, D and F." This last note being a seventh above its fundamental (G) gives the chord the name of the "dominant 7th." Now by raising the fundamental "G" a half tone we get a diminished 7th, exactly as we did in Ex. 29, but in another key. By lowering the G again we of course will get the same dominant 7th we started with—the dominant 7th of the key of C. Now the notes in the chord being of equal distance (as explained before) we can lower any other note in the diminished 7th chord and get some other dominant 7th, exactly as in Ex. 29½. Ex. 31 shows, first the top note "F" lowered a half tone (to E natural), and the resultant chord which is a dominant 7th of A. The resolution is here given as the chord of A major, but it can resolve to A minor as well. The next alteration of the same diminished 7th shows the note "D" lowered a half tone. It now becomes D flat, and (with the enharmonic change illustrated—in brackets) becomes a dominant 7th of the key of G flat (or G flat minor). The other two alterations in Ex. 31 give us modulations to the key of E flat and the key of C again—the original key.



Dom.7th ; Dim.7th to Key of A
Dom.7th ; Dim 7th to key of Gb
Dom.7th ; Dim. 7th to Key of Eb
Dom.7th ; Dim.7th to Key of C

Ex.31.

Example 32 is in the key of B flat, the dominant 7th of which is built upon the note "F." By diminishing this chord as in the preceding examples we get another chord of the diminished 7th with its four modulations.



Dom.7th | Dim.7th to Key of G.
Dom.7th ; Dim.7th to Key of E.
Dom.7th | Dim.7th to Key of Db
Dom.7th | Dim.7th to Key of Bb

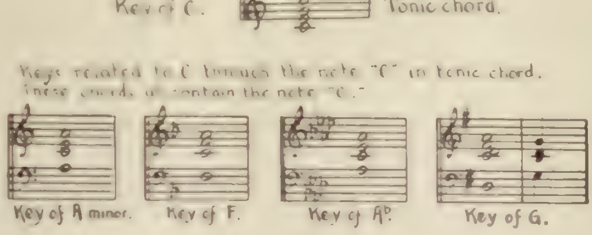
Ex.32.

Now as I said before, these examples are simple matters to students of harmony, but interesting for all that. To readers not familiar with these chords and their possibilities, I will say that a mere cursory reading will benefit you not at all. You must play them and work them out and make yourself thoroughly familiar with their sound. You must learn to instantly recognize a dominant 7th of any key when you play it, no matter what its position may be. And their chief use to the improvisor will be found, not for the sole purpose of making abrupt modulations (although this has been kept in the foreground), but in the variety of progressions they permit when improvising a connecting phrase—long or short.

Chords Having One or More Notes in Common.

With few exceptions any chord can progress directly to any other chord when the two contain one note in common. For example, the chord of C contains three notes. The first note "C" is also found in the chord of A flat, the chord of F, the chord of A minor, the dominant 7th of the key of G, and the diminished 7th chords shown in Ex. 32. The next note "E" is likewise related to other chords, and through them to other keys. The same can be said of the note "G."

Example 33 illustrates this relationship of the chords.



Key of C.
Tonic chord.
Keys related to C through the note "C" in tonic chord.
These chords [illegible] contain the note "C."
Key of A minor.
Key of F.
Key of Ab.
Key of G.

Ex.33.

The single measure above is a tonic chord of the key of C. The group of measures below it show the tonic chords of A minor, F major and A flat major, and the dominant 7th of the key of G. Each of the chords shown contains the note "C," and you can progress directly to any one of these keys from the key of C without preparation.

GUNKLER COMPLETES MUSICAL SETTING.

Herman Gunkler, a well known musician of this city, who was formerly connected with the Strand Theater of Chicago, has just completed a musical setting for the eight-reel feature, "The Curse of Iku." Mr. Gunkler has made a very good selection of numbers calculated to enhance the Japanese atmosphere (musically) and permit an enjoyable program as well. With his ability and experience in this line of work, Mr. Gunkler should do more of it.

COLONEL WESTGARD REACHES DENVER.

Col. A. L. Westgard, of the Pathe-Combitone Expedition, arrived with his fleet of automobiles in Denver, Colo., recently, and is making that city his headquarters while he is engaged in filming the chief points of interest readily accessible to that city. The Expedition has already covered 13,000 miles in the States of Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, California and Texas, all by motor car.

To date about 60,000 feet of film have been made of the chief points of interest in the territory covered. Col. Westgard plans to take about 30,000 feet in the State of Colorado alone, the best portions of which only will be released. At the present time he is devoting much attention to the Pike's Peak region and also to the National Parks and similar points of national interest around Denver. Not only will the chief scenic regions of the section be taken, but he has mapped out a comprehensive itinerary which includes the most notable agricultural and industrial sections of the State.

Grinding the Crank

'S FUNNY, but you've got to grind a crank to get a picture in, and grind another one to get it out.

We always wonder what it's all about when somebody talks about the "psychology of the photoplay." We like pictures whether they hang a psychology on the wall or stand it on the mantle-shelf, or if they don't use it at all.

In the dim and distant past it wasn't difficult for us to visualize the movie actor as a man who hit the big White Trail as assiduously as a hound chasing a hare. Since those halcyon days of yore we've spent many evenings with the film fans' favorites. Now we know that about all most of them do after supper is to hang around wishing it was nine o'clock so they could go to bed.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Country Ads.

LATELY we published a letter from A. W. Ballenger, of York, Neb., who told that he has a special desk for his advertising work. He sent in a number of samples, which we held over. York is not a large town, boasting only an afternoon paper, and it is to be presumed that Mr Ballenger has no particular advantage over others who have to work with small town compositors, though evidently he has the co-operation of a better man than is usually found in a small shop. Mr. Ballenger evidently prefers the lower left hand corner of a page, apparently the back page, and he almost always takes a six inch space which may be two or three sizes according to the display he wants. He varies his make-up and gets some good effects. The house runs vaudeville two nights a week and the first example shows the double advertising. The one on the left is three sixes and the other two. The trade mark cut is often, but not always used. We think that the announcement for Susie Snowflake might have been improved. Mr Ballenger gives a lot of generalities about the star, tells that she has appeared in Broadway musical comedies, is less than five feet high and things of that sort, but he does not tell that Susie Snowflake is a girl from the stage who goes back home and shocks the neighbors with her costumes. He does not make the play appeal through his announcement. Possibly he mislaid the material for this subject, but if he did not, he could have told about the play in a fashion to make the man who had not planned to come insist that he be permitted to buy a ticket. If advertising keeps up the interest of the regular patrons, it does much, but the ad that pulls in the stranger to the house is a pearl above price and we think that this story rather than the star would have brought the indifferent. The arrangement on the right is a better layout. The same style could be used to advantage for a week's program with the dates in the open boxes. Mr. Ballenger trusts to the running head for his dates, but we think it would be better to announce day and date even if the paper does carry it at the top. Wednesday, July 4, always means more than "today" or "tomorrow."

Another form, which he uses not a little, is not unlike one of Dave Udell's favorites, the catchline that leads up to the play. Two examples are given. These drop less than five inches in the six inch space, giving plenty of margin. Another of these advertisements starts off with the announcement that "She Raised Cain," which is an apt enough description of Theda Bara, but no mention of the house is given. Here the cut is framed in a curved arrow, which gets an unusual attractor. Even in a small town the house should be named, though it is the only one in town. Get the name of the house on everything. Some day there may be two theaters, and you'll want them to think of your house when you think of pictures. Mr. Ballenger uses several kinds of marginal stunts, as a box within a box, about three picas separating the two, and with a narrow margin on the left merely carrying the initial of the catchline, which breaks into the box, leaving white space the rest of the way down. Two more examples of the catchline advertising are shown, with [illegible] The [illegible] the intruding initial

Two examples of design work are shown in the next cut. The broken circle on the left is not unlike the design offered by Walter H. Brooks not long ago. The cross formation is rather wasteful of space, but it gives a chance to advertise four features, if desired, and still keeps them all individual. Here but two subjects are advertised, and it [illegible] with a more general talk in the top and the cut in the center as it stands. The use of the title of a play released by one company to lead to chat on the production of another organization might be question, but it is probable that "The Traveling Salesman" was a release [illegible] Paramount service. One advertisement shows a Paramount cut mortised to let in the house title.

Mr. Ballenger has some capital ideas on layouts, and evidently his drawing board comes into frequent use in sketching the designs. If he has his work really systematized he probably has a scrap collection of odd makeups from the newspapers and magazines which can be adapted for local use. He has the mechanical side running well. Now he needs to give more attention to phrase-making and the avoidance of trite descriptions. For one picture, for example, he uses this: > is the title of the picture, and the beauty referred to is played by a real beauty, Myrtle Stedman. There are many things to make this story worth while, but one of which we will mention is the great amount of money expended in its staging.

"THE AMERICAN BEAUTY"

If lavish expenditure is all that recommends a picture, it must be a poor picture indeed. It sounds as though Mr. Ballenger has not yet carried his system to the point where he can get the facts about any play at a moment's notice, yet a number of simple schemes have been given in the department, and are repeated in Picture Theatre Advertising.

Lost!

We miss the personality page from Miss Dolly Spurr's house organ. The program is as large as ever, but she reprints editorial matter, and has dropped completely the department of a page or so about herself and the house people. We should like to see it go back, partly because we liked to read it, but more because it did so much for the house. In Marion Miss Spurr should be a more important star to her patrons than Miss Pickford. She has the personality, but she no longer has the publicity.

From Philadelphia.

Jay Emanuel varies the usual style of program invitation and announces that "The United States Government requests your presence at the exhibition of Womanhood" at the Jefferson. He uses some of that ball program stock of his with a relief medal of Minerva and her owl, and starts off with "A medal of honor should be awarded to J. Stuart Blackton" as author. It works in all right and suggests a special embossing to those who do not know where Emanuel gets his material. Another advertisement he sends in is a joint post card for the Park and Jefferson. Here there is not even the hint of a date other than the postmark on the other side. We've got him so he dates his program days, but he doesn't date any part of the postcard. He has been a rebel for so long that it is perhaps too much to expect a complete reform all of a sudden, but if he does this again we shall write a letter to his wife, and tell her about it. Jay's foot slips a bit in one of his programs when he speaks of "the operetta of the screen," and later of "It's lyric charm." He must be thinking of the old talking pictures. We did not know that Fox was putting any out.

The York Street Palace seems to have trouble laying out the program announcement. It tells that:

> William Fox Presents Ormi Hawley
> Where Love Leads
> Also the American Girl Miran Sais and our usual pleasing comedies.

Miss Hawley is presented in Where Love Leads and not given the production and Miss Sais, whose given name is Marin, appears in the American Girl series. Hell's Hinges is given 24 points, but Hart's name runs in an eight and shares the line with "By Special Request." A study of the value of lines would permit this program to be played up and look twice as important in the same space.

A Compact Record.

C. S. Williams, of 239 Oxford street, Buffalo, sends in a pocket record for Motion Picture theaters that is both compact and complete. A loose-leaf cover 4¼ by 7 inches carries sheets slightly smaller giving the totals for receipts by matinees and nights for a week, lines for the resume of disbursments and a totalizer. The back of the sheet is printed for salaries and can be used, if required, as a signed pay roll. At the back are monthly sheets for service and other sheets for checking off the releases used from a specified service, showing what has and has not been played. It avoids a lot of fussy and fanciful trimmings, while giving all necessary heads and release data. The cover is patent cloth with six "flat" rings and refills covering six months may be had for fifty cents a set. The cost of the volume complete is $2.50 post paid.

A Good Campaign Book.

Tarleton Winchester, of the Pathe Exchange, always gets out a worth-while compaign book, but he has done unusually well in the book for "The Neglected Wife." There is some good advance publicity and a page of newspaper grade of copy for each of the fifteen episodes. A good scheme is the packing of all advertising premium novelties in two-dollar lots, doing away with a lot of elaborate figuring as to fractional cost. You get two dollars' worth or four or ten or whatever you need. Another good feature is a page plate carrying the advertising for the entire series which may be had for only $1.50, but the chief feature is that the copy offered is of a sort a respectable newspaper editor can be induced to run without the aid of chloroform or a sand-bag.

By the Month.

The Lorenz theater, Bethlehem, Pa., has dropped its weekly program in favor of a three-fold monthly program running five weeks. They do not give the calendar form that many use, but employ a series of boxes, starting with the Monday preceeding the month and running across, a week to a line, this gives them a more practical form in some ways. Special days are run in red and on these days an advanced admission is charged, but there are only two of these days each week. The sheet is a little larger than 9 by 12 inches, printed across the longer measurement. To launch "The Neglected Wife" they offer the first two parts as one installment, giving enough to get the audience thoroughly interested. In some ways this is a better scheme than running the first part and repeating this with the second part.

A House Organ.

R. D. Carrothers, of Carrothers and Archibald, Pocatello, Idaho, sends in some new house organs with this letter:

> Under separate cover I am sending you a copy of our "Amusement Herald," a house program that we issue each week. This is devoted to our three houses here, and the picture business in general.
> We have started compiling a mailing list and up to date have five hundred names, who have personally requested at the box office that we mail them our paper each week. We throw a slide on the screen telling our patrons if they will sign their name and address on blank which we have for this purpose at the box office we will mail the Herald to them each Saturday morning. This system has resulted in our obtaining five hundred names in a period of about four weeks, and our list is growing each week. This is a lot of work, but we consider it mighty good advertising. What do you think of it?

From an announcement in the first issue, we gather that this was formerly run as an independent venture and has been taken over by the house management. It is 8 by 12 inches, twelve pages, and carries a large proportion of outside advertising, but not so much that the patron does not get enough magazines to be worth paying for if he had to. The house does not overrun the reading columns with a lot of puffery. It tells its story, but it gives plenty of general film stuff, and we think that in time, now that it is under the direction of the house management, it will make more than good for its considerable cost. It looks like a regular magazine and not an advertising scheme, because that is what it is to a large degree. The mail list scheme is good—about the best, we think—and its chief value lies in the fact that the persons on the list have gone to a little trouble to get there. It is live circulation, and this sort of a list is worth a general distribution of two or three times the number of copies, though it will be found a good scheme to mail out a hundred copies or so each week to those who have not asked for the issue, sending not more than two copies to any one name. If they are interested they will ask for more. The magazine lacks just one thing, and that is the personal touch. It is all too impersonal and cold. A single column of editorial (two would be better) with a real punch, would make a lot of difference.

Old Friends Again.

The Hardwick Brothers, Clovis, N. M., do not come in very often, but they send an awful lot of samples when they do come in and they have been coming in so long they are old friends. E. R. Harwick writes:

> "He's in again." Trust that this bunch of "dope" will get your criticism. We think some of it is good, some not so good, some poor. At any rate we "cracked down" to advertise "The Girl Philippa," first sending the very small circulars, also distributing them; second, enclosing the photograph of Anita Stewart with a weekly program to the entire mailing list; third, lot of newspaper advertising, readers and locals; fourth, we sent booklets to about three hundred of our preferred prospects. You just tell the boys that if they go after the business that they will get it. It is always possible to get it when you hustle. We spent $55 advertising "Philippa" in three towns and cleaned with it.
> Our new $25,000 theater is now under construction and one of the things being considered is our own job outfit. If we put it in—look out for us.
> Your department improves with age. We get many valuable suggestions from it. It alone is worth several times the subscription price of the paper. Good luck to you, and may you continue to keep up the good work. You have our best wishes.

Mr. Hardwick has the formula. Successful advertising is good argument plus persistence. Do you remember when you had to "speak a piece" in school? You read the recitation over and over until, through repetition you had memorized it. You did not read it over once and make it your own. With each repetition it stuck closer to you. It is the same way with advertising. You keep on talking about something and you hammer home your argument. It may barely be noticed the first time, or it may even be forgotten, but about the fiftieth time, you cannot help remembering, even if you want to forget. It is for this reason that bill boards should be away from the theater, to follow the possible patron around town. With a job plant, Mr. Hardwick can do more for the same investment or do as much more cheaply and just the way he wants it—which is the real advantage of having your own plant. You may not have as much type as the average printing office, but if you make a proper selection you'll have just what you need, and that may be the very faces the average job plant does not have.

The booklets mentioned are those gotten out by the Vitagraph, which are too costly for wide distribution and require to be sent out with discrimination. The photographs are rotogravure reproductions on cream paper, clean and attractive, with most of the advertisement on the back. The house gets in on the general announcement with these lines:

> To the strength of the author and the charm of the star, add the "Lyceum's" manner of presentation, with its pleasing and appropriate musical accompaniment, and you are offered an attraction that is unbeatable from every angle of intertainment.

This is right in the middle of the talk of the play. Too few managements credit the house with its share of the effect. They review the stuff the company sends out, but do not figure the house as a factor and yet the projection and its environment is in some ways even more important than the production itself. It pays to educate the patrons to an understanding of the fact that your manner of showing pictures is as much contributory to success as the work of those who make the subject. For fifteen or twenty years the company has been given practically all of the credit. This is a great Vitagraph, or a wonderful Selig or a splendid Universal, and not one exhibitor in a hundred ever thinks to add that at his own particular house the picture may be seen to its fullest advantage through careful projection, a proper screen, appropriate music and comfortable surroundings. Split it 50-50 with the attraction. Have some pride in your own work and MAKE your audience share that pride. Make them understand that the pictures are good because you run them right. Mr. Hardwick has the right idea, it is author, star, producer and house in combination that makes for good photoplays and we have seen some of the screen classics run off in a manner that spoiled the painstaking efforts of the makers. You are just as good as your pictures and your pictures are just as good as you make them. Have a proper pride.

One advertising slip is three inches wide and from six to ten inches long. This gives the standard thirteen em column width and can be used to carry stuff lifted from the daily paper, when you have your stuff done in their just department, though the samples shown are specially set. It is possible, if you are near a large town to pick up this sort of stock very cheaply at the paper warehouses and at printers who have their own cutting machine. The slips are trims from larger stock and of such limited availability that they are glad to clean them out.

Mr. Hardwick's newspaper advertising is too generally good for much comment, but a comparison of these two advertisements will give one suggestion. Both are three fives. In one the use of a cut in both upper corners gives a regular layout, but it probably does not attract the attention that the Doro advertising gets. It is the same idea as seeing perhaps a hundred men pass, each of whom wears his hat squarely on his head. You scarcely notice that they have hats, but along comes a man with his hat perched over one ear and at once you take notice. The effect is rakish and unusual. It attracts attention just as you note an unusual make up and pass over one methodically and uniformly regular. You will notice that both programs carry times of performance and the prices. Another form of the same style is given in larger reproduction that it may be studied carefully. Running the time and price into the margin makes for emphasis and also gives an odd and therefore effective make up. Practically all of the advertising gives these facts in some conspicuous place, and it helps to make business. You can always feel certain you can plan your arrival at the Lyceum to get there before the feature starts. All of the days are stated and date. Nothing is left to the running date at the head of the page. It is put where it can be seen at once. If we had the space, we would like to reproduce all of the samples sent, but we'll stop with this last specimen. The layout is unusual, but the advertisement does not hold together well. Probably everyone understood that it was all one advertisement for the Lyceum, but the fact is not apparent. The entire layout should have been held together by a frame of some sort. As an example, the ornamental border of [illegible] used for the rest, and by omitting the narrow spaces between the three sections it could all have been held together by the two-point rule.

Bought Bonds.

Taking a cue from the Liberty Bond campaign, the U. S. Theater, New York City, advertised that its receipts for an entire week would be applied to the purchase of Liberty Bonds, a committee of citizens [illegible] for others to buy bonds. It sets a good example, and it will probably make for better business for many new patrons will appear, feeling that they are helping to do their bit and getting a full return at the same time. The throw-aways are done in red and blue on white, but here there is an excuse for the use of the colors. The essential text reads:

> Show your patriotism
> By patronizing the > U. S. Theater
> Every day during week beginning Monday (date here) > to be known as
> Liberty Bond Week
> The proceeds of the entire week will be used to Purchase
> U. S. Government Liberty Bonds
> A committee of Representative Citizens will be appointed to audit our books and see that the entire receipts are used for that purpose.

And to back this up the program which follows is unusually good. The original gives the "Show your" in two lines between flags in colors, with the "Patriotism" running across the page just below.

Telling It.

Many exhibitors have complained that they cannot write good lines for their program. It is easy enough if it is studied, and Picture Theater Advertising gives all the points on the subject, but it can be put into brief by saying that you first know what the film is about, pick out the most attractive point, and talk about that simply and as interestingly as possible. We clip this from the program of the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., not that it is much better than most of the stuff that house turns out, but because it is average for them and in such contrast to the labored efforts of many on the same title:

> If you were a little girl and other little girls would not play with you, could you still see the sunny side of life? This one thread of the story is what makes "The Valentine Girl" thoroughly delightful.

It's largely a matter of practice and sympathy with the patrons, and you never hear the Third Street kicking about bad business. They make bad business good, just as any other live wire can.

Smaller Type.

A. L. Middleton of the Queen, De Queen, Ark., is using a smaller type on his house organ and the result is much better. The use of ten point may save composition costs, but it is not a real saving if the resulting sheet looks so badly that it is not regarded with respect, and the value of the house organ is highest when it most nearly resembles a regular publication. Most persons are prone to regard the printed word as the truth—save in election campaigns—and the printed word does not usually come in ten point. Mr. Middleton is getting out a likely looking sheet now. But he might get the printer to give him a more business like heading. Follow straight newspaper style.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing adressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses by critized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Tricks.

CAMERA tricks seem to puzzle some authors as much as they do audiences, and this letter from a correspondent in Juneau, Alaska, strikes a common trouble. The letter runs:

> I'd like to get some definite idea of the meaning of certain things that happen in moving pictures. For example, has a fade out any fixed meaning? Has a diaphragm out any? You may tell me to go and study the pictures for myself. I do, but different companies seem to attach different meanings to the same thing. In some Lasky plays that I have seen lately a diaphragm out always meant that time was about to pass, and a diaphragm in always meant that it had passed. Then I saw a Pallas picture in which the diaphragm out, or nearly out, meant that you were going to see a close-up of the object last shown. Other companies seem to have no particular idea of the meaning of either. It seems to me that the readableness of the play would be increased if the same meaning was always attached to the same stunt, so that people would get into the habit, quite unconsciously perhaps, of anticipating the kind of action that was to come next. In my own work I have been trying to make a diaphragm in or out always refer to a passage of time, except very occasionally where I want to emphasize some little inobvious thing of which I am about to show a close-up. Maybe it's none of my business to bother about such matters, but I like to do a finished job, and as the pictures I see are about a year old I'd like to get the latest ideas on the subject, if there are any. Fade outs I generally use for changing the action from one location to another when the two actions are synchronous. How does the idea strike you?

In the beginning the fade really was a dissolve of one picture into the next, and was used almost exclusively to avoid a break in the continuity of a story supposed to be related by some character. Later a fade down and fade up was used instead of the fade into, or dissolve, because it involved less manipulation of the camera. For that reason the fade down and up was presently employed to work in visions in place of the true vision within the frame. Then someone got the idea of putting an extra iris diaphragm in front of the lens tube, cutting down the picture gradually instead of the amount of light. It was an oddity and, like all other novelties, it was promptly worked to death. And the trouble is, as this correspondent points out, there is no uniformity of usage. One company will employ the device to introduce visions, another to indicate the lapse of time, a third to out down to a close-up, or perhaps merely for the sake of oddity.

The majority of directors merely seek to make a pretty picture, and they will spend more time fussing things up than trying to realize the author's idea or even their own conceptions of a story. They overload all pictures with light effects, camera tricks, freak cuts and the like, and some of them actually seem to give no consideration to the story, regarding the plot merely as a foundation for their own clever effects.

This is all wrong, but it is not possible to convince the average director that an audience is so foolish as to prefer plot to his assininity, and he goes on inventing new and then copying and improving (?) most of the time.

The fade and the diaphragm should have distinct and generally accepted meanings. A fade should always mean one thing and the dissolve another, and the diaphragm has a still further distinction, and these meanings should not merely be indications of the softness of the director's alleged brains. A fade down, for example, could be accepted as denoting the passage of time, and used in place of the time leader where definite information as to the exact lapse of time is not necessary. The dissolve should be used to denote visions and the diaphragming given another set and definite meaning.

Then there could exist no confusion in the minds of the spectators. It would be understood that a certain effect had a certain meaning. It means that and nothing else. Then, and then only, will it be possible to sit in the theater and view a film story with pleasure. Now, in most instances, you see a picture start. Comes a fade and you have to wait and see whether the director means it to be a vision or a time jump. For the moment the greater part of your interest is diverted from the story to the reason for the effect. You cannot concentrate on the plot, even where the director has left some of the plot in. It is even possible to find stories in which the same effect is used to denote two or more symbols, as for instance, a fade to denote either the passage of time or a vision.

The best way for the writer to work is to use the fade for a vision and write time leaders to indicate the passage of time. Then let the director do his darndest and upon his own head be the crime. The fade or diaphragm should never be used to denote synchronized action. Action occurring in two places at practically the same moment should be cut one into the other, for this is the primary function of the cut-back. At no time should the diaphragm be used in this connection, either as a fade or to reduce the field, for this robs the action of any suggestion of immediate change. Here the use of cutting back is imperative, and no other device should be substituted.

It is a long way still to perfection, and in the present unsettled condition of affairs it is useless to look for any combination of directors to give a definite meaning to the effects, though these might and certainly should be employed as symbols. Some time when the business of making motion pictures really becomes a business and ceases to be a gamble, then it will be possible to seek to bring about uniformity, but to-day, with a lot of directors in name only seeking to cover up their incompetency as directors with a lot of foolish effects, it is hopeless to expect them to use the common sense they lack. The only thing to do is to write as intelligent a script as possible and leave the rest to fate. Keep away from the purely camera tricks unless you can suggest an effect that will heighten the value of a scene, but remember always that the best told stories do not depend upon effects, but plot, and that you cannot cover up a lack of plot with all the camera tricks that even Carl Gregory knows.

Advice.

A letter this morning is typical of many. A puzzled author writes that about half his friends tell him to send in synopses only and the other half urge that he send in the action. He does not know what to do. Probably all of those giving advice mean precisely what they say, but each advises according to his own narrow experience, and what may be good for his line is bad for another. The only really good advice comes from your own experience, and those who need advice the most have had the least experience. The next best thing is to follow this department, which aims to average the experience of many writers. Many authors, for example, supply the continuity unmasked, but most editors will have nothing to do with continuities and none will handle a continuity without a full synopsis, for there are a lot of editors today who are actually unable to see a story in action. They cannot visualize. That is one reason why the market is so poor. The incompetent editor decides that the free lance cannot write and so turns to the staff man he knows to be reliable. This class of editor may even call for continuities just to appear to be on the job, but it does no good. Today is the day of the synopsis. There will come a tomorrow with real editors and the free lance will come into his own again.

Get a Punch.

Take up a magazine of fiction—any magazine—and you'll find that while you may like several of the stories there is apt to be one that stands out from the rest because of some points of superiority. It is the same way with stories offered for filming. Some will stand out so much above the rest as to fairly demand attention. These are the stories most apt to be taken for production, and until you can write that sort of story it will pay you to keep out of the market. Conditions are different from those prevailing a few years ago when companies released from three to six stories a week in one-reel lengths instead of a five-reel story now and then. There had to be more stories, and they did not have to be such good stories, for a certain number had to be procured. Now only the best material will go, and to offer others is merely to enrich the government.

Keep On.

Don't stop thinking plots because plots do not sell. Keep on thinking them and writing them down against the time plots are in demand again. The mill that shuts down suffers more loss than the one that keeps running. It's rust, not work that wears out fastest.

Just Like Plots.

A graph of the progress in photoplay is not unlike the chart of a plot. It has its alternate elevations and depressions, and the elevations are always higher than the previous ones.

Manufacturers' Notice.

T IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Queer Ideas.

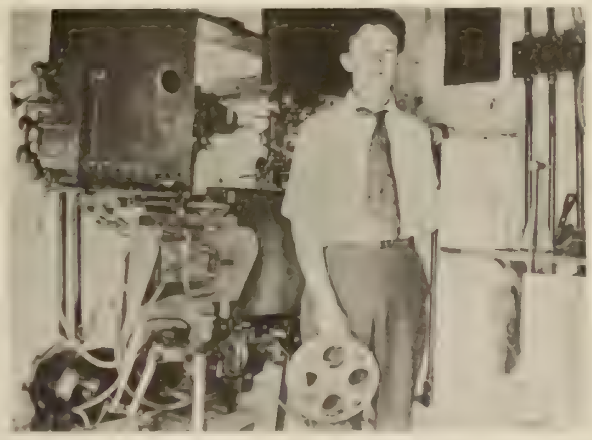
It is indeed strange what queer ideas some men have, and how they will attempt to argue that black is white, or that white is black. It would seem the veriest tyro in the business of operating would understand that, aside from the trouble involved in gearing down a rewinder, there could be no possible objections to consuming as much as ten minutes in the rewinding of a film, and that, on the contrary, there would be a distinct advantage from several points of view. In this, as in other matters, however, we have to deal with the "one idea" man—the man who is a Democrat because his father, grandfather and probably his greatgrandfather were Democrats. He doesn't stop to reason things out for himself. He is one of the sheep who jump over the bar because the other sheep jump over it. He is one of the crowd who yells hurrah! without knowing what he is hurrahing about because the rest of the crowd yells hurrah, and so, because he has been rewinding reels at the rate of six seconds to the reel all the days of his operating experience, and because other operators are doing the same thing, he continues to do it. In order to have him grasp the idea that there might be advantage in changing his methods, it is necessary to explode a stick of mental dynamite in close proximity to his thinking machine, and thus jar the wheels loose, set them whirling and induce him to do a little reasoning on his own hook.

In Salt Lake City I encountered an operator who argued that with slow rewinding the operator would be compelled to devote just that much more time to the process, to the detriment of his other work. His single cylinder brain was unable to grasp the stupendous idea that with the rewinder running very slowly, with the motor having the advantage of the gear-down, hence an abundance of power to pull against a good strong tension, it would NOT be necessary to watch the rewinder at all, since, instead of requiring additional time for rewinding, it actually would take very much less. The operator called our attention to the fact that it had been some time since the editor had been actually engaged in operating, and that methods had changed greatly since "our day." True, we fully realized that fact, but quite evidently you have not kept up with the change—the march of progress. You still insist upon doing things—rewinding for instance—in the "good old-fashioned way," utterly regardless of changes for the better which have been brought into practice. It is true the editor has not actually done very much operating (only some special work, such as running the Paul Rainey films in the Governor's mansion in Albany, in some of the high class clubs in New York and before the President in Washington, for which he received in six days more than six weeks of the Salt Lake City scale), but he has, nevertheless, kept in extremely close touch with every phase of operating, not only as applies to Salt Lake City and Utah, but every other state in this country, in Canada, Australia, South Africa and other countries, even to far off China.

I would call the brother's attention, together with the attention of those other few doubting Thomases, to the fact that this particular editor has been very much in the "public eye" of the industry for lo these many years. He has had, and does now have, many thousands of friends. He has had, and does still have, a comparatively very few active enemies, yet in all those years, even his enemies have found but very little opportunity to "nail him to the cross" by pointing out either errors of fact or judgment. Now don't you think, gentlemen, that if we were getting by on a bluff, or by "shooting the bull," or by spouting hot air, we would have been found out long ago. A man may get by on a bluff for a while, but after eight years it may, I think, be fairly presumed that he knows his business at least reasonably well.

Enterprising.

The subject of the photo who is seen beside his projector, with the "Operators' Friend" proudly displayed, is Harry B. Hickman, operator Orpheum theater, Wescon, Idaho. He traveled a matter of 90 miles (180 there and back) to meet the editor, and hear him lecture on practical projection. This shows enterprise, but a glance at his face convinces one that Friend Hickman is not one who will be found asleep at the switch.



Sends a Weapon.

Mr. J. H. Oliver, Lucas Theater Supply Company, Atlanta, Ga., sends in a Powers aperture plate, and the following letter:

> I am mailing you sample of a "weapon" used by one of the film butchers, of which, unfortunately, there are so many. The aperture plate was on a machine we received to be repaired. I might add that the number of parts necessary to put this particular mechanism into first-class shape would have amounted to more than $65. However, it was not repaired, though I replaced the aperture plate free of charge, in order that you may add it to your collection of relics, or Chamber of Horrors. I cannot understand why it is that film exchange trouble men don't find these abuses and cancel the service of theaters which practice them. Do you think it is due to negligence on the part of the men film manufacturers have placed in charge of the management of their exchanges, in failing to trace this source of great and unnecessary damage to their property to its source? To my way of thinking there is ignorance in three places, viz.: the manufacturer, the exhibitor and the imitation operator. Please understand me: I don't mean all of them: there are notable exceptions.

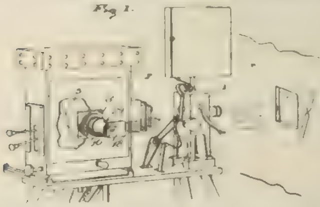
The aperture in question was a Powers, and after having been worn out on one side, it had actually been reversed and used wrong side to for a considerable time. Yes, friend Oliver, I agree with you that things of this kind are due to imitation operators, imitation theater managers, and to a general looseness and laxness in the entire moving picture industry, as applied to matters pertaining to projection. It is along the same general lines which permits of a film exchange manager taking a brand new $125 roll of film out of the can and winding it on a poor, old, decrepit, God-forsaken, bent-up wreck of a reel, which only cost 8 or 10 cents in the first place, and which will, beyond any question of doubt, do more damage to the film in one rewinding than would buy a dozen reels. This is a practice which is followed in altogether too many exchanges, and it can be properly classed by only one word, and that word is stupid.. It isn't merely bad business. It is wretched business! Remember, the reel itself only cost, at most, ten cents, and the roll of film cost close to $125. At the end of the process of re-winding, the reel will be running probably 2,000 revolutions a minute, and if it is crooked is likely to strike the edge of the film at every revolution, thus bending and weakening the film track, until finally it gives way altogether in spots and the reel of film is either badly damaged or entirely ruined, all in the endeavor to save in the purchase of sufficient reels to replace those which ought, purely as a business proposition, to be thrown into the junk pile.

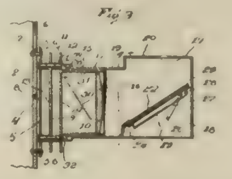
Yes, friend Lucas, I heartily and thoroughly agree with you. I am, judging by results, inclined to believe that the film exchange "trouble man" exists largely as a figment of the imagination.

An Invention.

A Sale Lake City operator, W. E. Dewitt by name, has invented and patented a very clever and effective device for projecting the carbon tips upon a small screen located on the front wall beside the observation vent.

The illustration shows the workings of the device. Lens 16, Fig. 3, projects an image of the carbon tips to minor 22, Fig. 3, light being admitted to lens 30 through hole 4 cut in the lamphouse door. The device is adjustable so that the image may be projected either on the front or rear wall, the floor or the ceiling. The article is well made and certainly does the work for which it is designed. Fig. 1 shows the device attached to the lamphouse door.





The Wotton Twin Rexolux.

The Wotton Twin Rexolux, manufactured by the Cleveland Electric Products Company, Cleveland, Ohio, is, as I have said before, a high-class machine, delivering, according to competent tests, very close to 68 per cent. electrical efficiency, when it is intelligently handled and kept in first-class condition. There are certain features of this machine which are worthy of serious consideraiton on the part of theater managers. Briefly, they may be named as follows: In the first place the Wotton Twin Rexolux is really two separate and complete motor generator sets, of the upright type, joined together through a common switchboard, so that their combined capacity may be used at one arc, or separate arcs may be operated by either machine. In the latter case, a maximum amperage of 60 is available at the arc, but by combining the two at one arc you can get as much as 120 amperes, or anything between 60 and 120. This is, of course, a valuable feature when, as sometimes occurs, very heavy amperage is desirable for the projection of an extremely dense film. In the second place, the Twin Rexolux possess the advantage that should one machine break down there is still another one to fall back on, which may be used for both arcs while the cripple is being doctored up. In the third place, the operating life of a twin machine is, of course, considerably extended, as against the life of a single machine, by reason of the fact that it is not at any time subjected to overload shocks, and this is a matter which deserves very serious consideration, because of the number of these shocks which are likely to occur during a given period. When a machine is subject to overload shock, the effect at the commutator is bad. You may not actually see a flash of sparking under the brushes, but it is nevertheless there, and the result is, of course, hardly beneficial to the commutator. The first Twin Rexolux installed was put in Brooklyn, and these same machines have been running for more than two years on the original set of brushes installed, which, you will observe, means that the commutator is only subjected to a minimum of strain. Fourthly, the operating temperature of a machine which is not subjected to overload is, viewed as a whole, very naturally considerably less than the temperature of one which is subjected to overload. Fifthly, of course, having two entirely separate motor generator sets, one for each arc, the change-over condition is ideal. In the newly-designed Twin Rexolux, the ventilating system draws cold air in from both ends and exhausts it in the center. The brush area is such that there is only a current density of about 18 or 20 amperes per square inch, and this is very low indeed. As to the matter of price, the Twin 80 Ampere machine is $484.50 complete, including all necessary panels and other things necessary for installation, so that when we come to consider that no emergency transformer equipment is necessary, the price is not much higher than is the price of any high-class double arc machine.

It gives me pleasure to commend this apparatus to the favorable consideration of department readers. It is a good machine, and has the endorsement of this department and its editor, wholly and entirely because it is a good machine. You cannot possibly get the endorsement of this department, friend manufacturers, on any other basis.

Shutter Slips.

George R. Murphy, Pleasantville, N. Y., has the following trouble:

> We have been having a great deal of trouble with the shutter on our standard No. 4, and after the repair shop, manufacturers, and others to whom we went to locate the trouble have failed, we come to you as a last resort. The shutter (two-bladed) has a tendency to slip in some mysterious manner, giving a slight, but most annoying travel ghost. Upon examination, we found the blade to be fast in the collar and immovable, as was also the shaft, yet we find it necessary to re-set it every other day. If you can solve this problem, you will earn the gratitude of the operator and myself, both of whom are batty trying to dope the thing out.

Well, Brother Murphy, you are putting up a hard one, but I can tell you, I think, how to locate the trouble, which must certainly be due to slippage somewhere. Hold your balance wheel stationary and pull good and hard on that shutter. This gives a tremendous leverage, and if there is anything slipping anywhere, it ought to show up. If it doesn't show up under this treatment, then you will simply have to take the machine to pieces and find out where that loose joint is, because it will be something which only gives under vibration. Further than this, I don't see how I could give you any advice on that particular proposition.

Questions for Examination.

William H. Pahl, Parkersburg, West Virginia, asks:

> Do you permit the use of the questions, or some of them, for use in examination? I have the second and third edtions for use in examination? I have the second and third editions in existence on the subject of projection. Would you kindly tell me, through the department, what is the amperage of a 10 watt incandescent bulb? Also what is its candle power?

Brother Pahl, if I were to ask you: what is the horse power of an engine having a six foot belt fly wheel? you would require some other data, wouldn't you? With regard to the ten watt bulb, I would have to know whether it is carbon filament, a mazda, or a nitrogen bulb; also what is the supply voltage, before I could either tell you the amperage or the candle power. As to using the questions for examinations, why not? Go as far as you like. The World and the questions are both yours. Many thanks for your kind words with regard to the books.

One of San Francisco's Best.

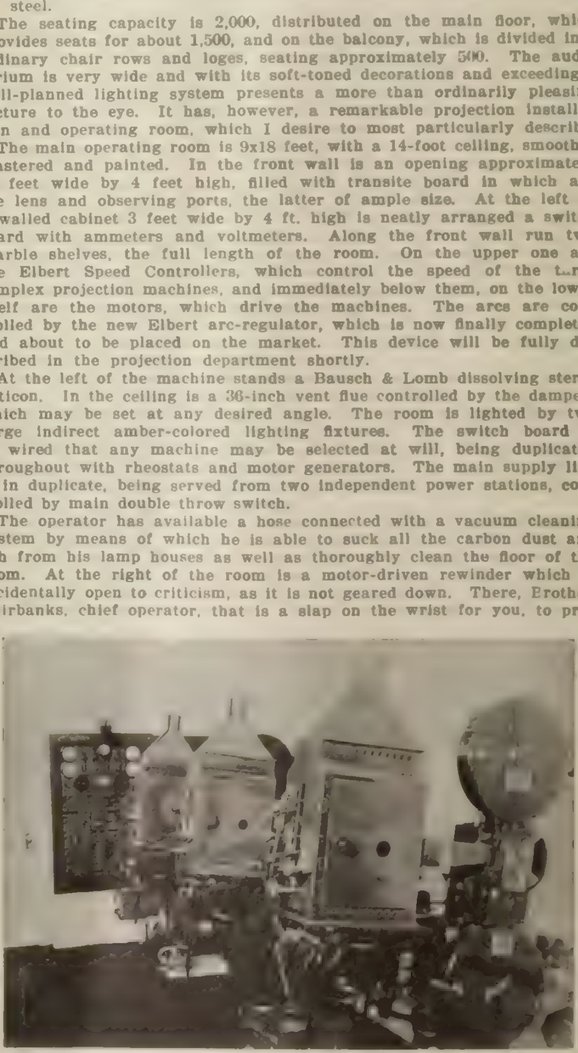
The New Mission theater on Mission street, owned by Kahn & Greenfield, is one of San Francisco's newest and finest examples of motion picture construction. The building itself is what is known as Class "A" construction, which, in San Francisco, consists of concrete on steel.

The seating capacity is 2,000, distributed on the main floor, which provides seats for about 1,500, and on the balcony, which is divided into ordinary chair rows and loges, seating approximately 500. The auditorium is very wide and with its soft-toned decorations and exceedingly well-planned lighting system presents a more than ordinarily pleasing picture to the eye. It has, however, a remarkable projection installation and operating room, which I desire to most particularly describe.

The main operating room is 9x18 feet, with a 14-foot ceiling, smoothly plastered and painted. In the front wall is an opening approximately 12 feet wide by 4 feet high, filled with transite board in which are the lens and observing ports, the latter of ample size. At the left in a walled cabinet 3 feet wide by 4 ft. high is neatly arranged a switch board with ammeters and voltmeters. Along the front wall run two marble shelves, the full length of the room. On the upper one are the Elbert Speed Controllers, which control the speed of the three Simplex projection machines, and immediately below them, on the lower shelf are the motors, which drive the machines. The arcs are controlled by the new Elbert arc-regulator, which is now finally completed and about to be placed on the market. This device will be fully described in the projection department shortly.

At the left of the machine stands a Bausch & Lomb dissolving stereopticon. In the ceiling is a 36-inch vent flue controlled by the damper, which may be set at any desired angle. The room is lighted by two large indirect amber-colored lighting fixtures. The switch board is so wired that any machine may be selected at will, being duplicated throughout with rheostats and motor generators. The main supply line is in duplicate, being served from two independent power stations, controlled by main double throw switch.

The operator has available a hose connected with a vacuum cleaning system by means of which he is able to suck all the carbon dust and ash from his lamp houses as well as thoroughly clean the floor of the room. At the right of the room is a motor-driven rewinder which is incidentally open to criticism, as it is not geared down. There, Brother Fairbanks, chief operator, that is a slap on the wrist for you, to prevent you from getting too badly swelled up. The film tank is a very cleverly constructed affair in which each reel is contained in a separate fire-proof department. There is room for eight 2,000-ft. reels.



At the left is a room fully eight feet square containing two Westinghouse motor generator sets with the usual paraphernalia which goes with them. At the rear of the machine is a marble table, 16 inches wide by 6 inches long. At the right is a wash room and a toilet room. The cement floor is completely covered with a layer of thick battleship linoleum.

The upper magazines are equipped with an annunciator for the purpose of signalling the ending of the reel, which can be adjusted for both large and small hubs. The object of the annunciator is to give warning in time for the operator to prepare the other machine, so no delay occurs between part numbers.

Remarkable as this installation is, it is the intention of the company to tear it entirely out and install a still better one, in which the operating room walls will be all tile and the room itself considerably larger, also the room will be placed on the main floor, level with the screen, although the pitch in projection from the present location is not sufficient to be seriously objectionable. I don't think it exceeds ten degrees. This installation is typical of other San Francisco installations, though there are few which equal it in completeness. There are as a matter of fact only about four installations which have the third complete projection machine for emergency.

I almost forgot to mention the slide-making outfit, which is in a separate room adjoining the operating room. This plant is completely equipped in making slides for use in the New Mission theater. It may also be used for enlarging photographs for lobby display; in fact, it is a complete photographic plant. Mr. Fairbanks, the operator, takes the slides received from the exchange and enlarges them for lobby display; also he makes slides from the same pictures for use on the screen. Mr. Fairbanks himself is an operator par-excellence. The only point which he and I do not agree upon is the necessity for a dark operating room. The room with its amber indirect lighting is very beautiful and pleasant to work in, but I personally cannot agree with that proposition because I do not think it is the correct practise. Aside from this and the rewinder, I have nothing but praise to offer for the Mission installation, it is, in fact, the best I have ever seen.

The New Fillmore is another house owned by this company, which has a most excellent operating room installation—in fact, it is a duplicate of the New Mission plant, except that the operating room is very much larger.

The illustration only shows a small part of the installation in the New Mission.

Testing for Grounds

Chauncy L. Green, Bijou theater, Grantsburg, Wis., submits the following:

> In testing for grounds I used the following rig: Get a telephone headband receiver, a headband and a small flat flashlight battery. Solder a wire to each of the terminals of the battery, one long enough to reach from the end of the headband on the opposite side of the headband from the receiver, to the receiver itself, and the other about three feet longer. Attach the battery to the headband with a strong thread and continue this winding so as to fasten the wires to the band clear over the head to the receiver. Connect the shorter wire to one receiver binding post, and let the extra three feet of the other wire trail. Fasten a three-foot wire to the remaining telephone receiver post, and, slipping the set over your head, touch the free wire ends together, whereupon there will be a click in the receiver, and the receiver will click, no matter how high the resistance may be, if there is any electrical connection between the two wires. As a matter of fact, practice will enable you to determine by the sound intensity the probable nature of the short or ground. It is cheaper than a magneto, less clumsy, and leaves both hands free, also it is far more sensitive than either a lamp or magneto. Of course it cannot be used on live wires, but if a J shape iron bar be wrapped with insulated wire, and the ends connected to the receiver so as to cut out the battery, a live wire can instantly be detected through its insulation. If the current in the wire be D. C., hooking and unhooking the bar will cause a click. If it be A. C. there will be a buzzing sound. I am only about seventy-five miles from St. Paul, and intend to be there, with my hair in three separate and distinct braids, to hear your lecture when you arrive in the Twin City next summer, else I will bust my one poor lonesome neck in the endeavor.

It seems to me that if this will really work as well as the brother says it will, it would be worth while for the operator to add this particular thing to his tool kit. What I cannot understand is, how a one-volt battery is going to make connection through a high-resistance ground. If it really will, then this particular thing ought to be what is commonly termed a peach. I shall be glad to meet friend Green on my arrival in Minneapolis, but that is, as yet, several miles over the horizon. I arrive in the Twin Cities Saturday, July 7, and leave the following Monday.

A New Man.

G. O. Davis, Tunkhannock, Pa., says:

> I am a new man in the business, but a reader of the World and the department. Have built an addition to my theater so that we now have a 95-foot throw, with a 12-foot picture. Our current is 110 volts, 133 cycle, through a Power's 25 to 45 ampere rheostat. Am having trouble with projection. Am I getting amperes enough for the throw? What kind of a rheostat would you advise?

The rheostat you are using is an excellent one. I could not give you any intelligent advice from the data you supply. One hundred and thirty-three cycle current is much better for projection purposes than is 60 cycle, and with it you can and should use a three wing shutter. You say you are "having trouble with your projection," but you don't tell me what the trouble consists of. I would strongly advise that you send $4 to the Moving Picture World immediately and secure a copy of the third edition of the Motion Picture Handbook for Managers and Operators. See advertisement at the end of the projection department each week. Having secured this, pay particular attention, first of all, to "Carbons," which includes setting, etc., pages 284 to 302 inclusive.

You will find all phases of practical projection thoroughly covered in the book. After you have studied these various things, if you still cannot remedy your own difficulty, then write me, giving the following data: Kind of current, voltage, etc., whether taken through a rheostat or what. (Of course you have already given me that, but if you write again give it again.) Diameter of the opening of the projection lens, distance from the back glass of the projection lens to the aperture when the picture is in sharp focus on the screen. Maximum distance you can obtain from center of condenser to the aperture, and kind of projector you are using. Also carefully describe the faults you complain of. I will then do what I can to assist you.

Reflectoscope.

John A. Harding, U. S. S. Kentucky, dating his letter "somewhere at sea," says:

> I have a little piece of work to do, and need your help, which I trust I will receive. I need a reflectoscope for showing slides and post cards. Have everything to work with, and trust you will give me directions for building same. I find my handbook to be very convenient here as well as in New York City. Am a member of Local 306 and hope you will answer before I get to end of abilities for putting this thing through. I feel that such a thing would be for the amusement and benefit of the crew of my ship. Say Rich, I would like to see one of the boys working one of the battleship jobs on a windy night, when the gentle ocean zephyrs blow your arc out. That little difficulty I have mastered by the use of a canvas hood over the lamphouse. I extend the same from the lamphouse by means of wire braces.

Well Brother, the building of a reflectoscope which would be a really efficient machine is quite some job. In the first place you must have a stereopticon lens of large diameter—not less than two and one half and preferably three inches. You place the post card itself in a slightly curved holder, with the card on the inside of the curve. This holder is made by bending the edges of a piece of sheet metal over at top and bottom in order to form a groove about one-eighth of an inch deep, the holder being, of course, just wide enough to accommodate a post card after the groves have been formed. This holder is set back square with the lens, and at a distance from the lens which will be automatically determined by the focal length of the lens itself. It will be the same as the slide, the lens and the screen of the ordinary stereopticon. The card will be at one of the conjugate foci points and the screen at the other. Your illumination, usually incandescent lamps, are placed about midway of the lens barrel, one on either side of it. They should be as close to the lens as you can get them without shading a portion of the light away from the card by the lens barrel. This whole layout is then covered by a suitable metal casing, or lamphouse, having ventilation to carry away the heat and the job is done. I think you will find the building of a reflectoscope to be more of a job than you will care to tackle.

Fraudulent Lenses.

An ambitious young cinematographer brought in a lens the other day which appeared to be a genuine Carl Zeiss German ground lens, but the sample films which he had taken with it were hazy and out of focus. There seemed to be no reason for the bad negatives until he mentioned that he had bought the lens from a stranger who said he was a motion picture photographer in hard luck. Upon unscrewing the cells the reason was readily apparent; the "lens" combinations were pieces of glass evidently extracted from a cheap pocket manifier and held in place in an old Zeiss lens barrel with small wedges of match wood.

In buying and selling second-hand photographic lenses it is advisable to use the utmost care in order to make sure that the lens is genuine. It is a well-known fact that in many instances lenses are being sold as the product of some reliable manufacturer, while as a matter of fact the lenses have been replaced by cheap rectilinear or by even an absolutely worthless piece of glass, the original cells of the manufacturer being made use of to deceive the buyer. If a lens is not bought from a reliable dealer it is always advisable to submit the same to the manufacturer for test, which tests are generally made free of charge.

A specific case of this kind has been reported by the C. P. Goerz American Optical Company of New York City.

A lens bearing the engraving, Goerz Series III, No. 7, focus 14-inch, No. 43711, was brought to them with the complaint that the lens was not working satisfactorily, and upon test the lens was found to be a counterfeit of the worst kind, and it is to be urged, therefore, that all dealers and photographers be on their guard. Someone had taken the mounting of a Goerz Series III, No. 7 lens and placed an absolutely worthless piece of glass in the barrel, then palmed it off as a high grade anastigmat.

Making Optical Glass in America.

The secretary of Commerce makes the following announcement:

> The Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce, after two and a half years of continuous study and experiment in the making of optical glass, has achieved satisfactory results, and is prepared to produce optical glass. Additions are now being made to the working plant requisite to permit larger production to supply the needs of the Government.
> The matter is one of essential importance to the military services of the nation. Heretofore this material, of the best grade, has been wholly made in Germany, but the United States is henceforth independent of any foreign supply for this important product.

Optical glass is used in making lenses for field glasses, range finders, periscopes, telescopes, surveying apparatus, chemical laboratory equipment, and many other necessary articles.

Diaphragm Numbers.

Equivalent, F/— and Uniform System Numbers.

Rel. exposure required..	1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128
F. Nos.	4	5.6	8	11.3	16	22.6	32	45.2
U. S. Nos...............	1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128

Most lenses are now marked with the f/ numbers, although the U. S. numbers are used on Kodak lenses. Also the actual diameter of the diaphragm aperture in millimetres is marked on some makes of foreign lenses.

Answers to Correspondents.

J. C., Brooklyn, asks:

> Do objects photographed about 5 feet distant from the lens need a larger or smaller iris opening than for distance at 20 feet or over? In regard to light gradation (correct exposure) or minute detail.
> I figure if correct exposure is desired with good light gradation for close-ups, 5 feet away, diaphragm opening should be wider than for distance of 20 feet or more. If minute detail is desired, I'd leave diaphragm same as for middle distance, or maybe a smaller stop. Which is correct?
> 2. When a lens is set at infinity, will a figure photographed be sharp when it is at the hyperfocal distance of the lens?
> 3. In getting a sharp focus I rack out the lens and mark place on scale, then I move lens all the way out and then slowly back again to get sharp focus. Will position of focussing lever on the distance scale be at the same place or at a different place, distance of the object being one time at 38 feet, again at 10 feet;
> 4. Using a 2-in. f3.5 lens, could a good focus be obtained in setting the lens at 30 feet for objects 14 feet nearest to camera? Would I get a sharp focus with lens set at infinity at 14 feet and beyond? In both cases I want to work at full aperture.

1. Where the light is the same strength, objects very close to the camera require a slightly larger diaphragm opening as the racking of the lens forward to focus on a close object is in effect the same as reducing the size of the diaphragm. This difference is too small to be taken into account in a motion camera except when taking small inserts. As there are generally letters, cards or other light objects it is seldom necessary to increase the opening, even for inserts.

2. Yes, but the better way is to set the lens at the hyperfocal distance, then everything beyond half the hyperfocal distance from the camera will be in focus.

3. There is always a certain amount of clearance or backlash in all mechanical movements, so that racking the lens out to focus and then racking it in to focus will give two different readings depending upon the amount of play in the focusing mechanism; this must be taken into account when focusing by scale. Many cameramen have two scales to make allowance for this play. But sure that your focusing device is rigid and tight; the foregoing applies only to the very small amount of play necessary to allow movement without binding and still be firm.

4. Allowing 1/250 of an inch as the greatest circle of confusion, approximately 24 feet is the hyperfocal distance, i. e., everything beyond 12 feet (one-half of 24 feet) would be in focus with the lens set at 24 feet focus.

This is rather a large allowance for motion picture work, although it is the one generally used in published tables. The following table gives the hyperfocal distance for lenses of 2 and 3-inch focus at different apertures, allowing a circle of confusion of 1/400 of an inch:

	f3.5	f4.5	f5.6	f8	f11	f16
2-inch............(feet)	38	30	24	17	12	8
3-inch............(feet)	86	67	54	38	27	19

Richardson Reaches Old Home Town

Prior to That He Looks Over Iowa, Greets the Mrs., Then Goes Back to the Farm and Spills Poetry

Sioux City, Iowa.

THE Chicago & North Western Railway took the contract of transporting the writer from Omaha to Sioux City, and performed its end of the bargain thoroughly and completely, in about four hours' time. At the station I really thought the welcoming delegation was a mob, judging by numbers. Where they got them all I don't know. Operators must grow on cherry trees around that fair city. Introductions wore the word brother to a thin, frazzled edge, by its many-times repetition, and glory be, at the Hotel Martin, I found an Irish stenographer of Hebrew descent who actually had enough brains to spell complete that way, instead of compleat. It is a relief to find a girl who thinks more of learning her business than of wearing out a wad of chewing-gum—who doesn't either literally leak commas, or leave them out altogether, who knows there really is a difference between a period and an exclamation point. Believe me, good sisters, if I had to conduct my work for another three months through the average run of hotel stenographers, I would swallow my chewing gum and choke to death with rage.

During the afternoon I paid brief visits to the Plaza, Lyric, Princess and Strand theaters, a few of Sioux City's many. Sioux City operating rooms are, so far as lies within the jurisdiction of the operator, above the average. The walls are black and the lights were out in all of them, but in only one, the Lyric, were the ports protected by glass. The Plaza, J. I. Bryant, manager, seats 900, mostly on the main floor. The screen is bordered by a wide band of black. The auditorium ceiling is very high. The chairs are expensive and comfortable. Brothers W. J. Fallon, chief operator, and Carl Gilbert, assistant, are projecting a sixteen-foot picture, with excellent screen results, considering operator's room location. The operating room is eleven by eighteen feet, with a ten-foot ceiling. The ports are of generous size, and the walls are black, but there is no glass in the ports, nor is there any exhaust fan, though I spoke to Manager Bryant about this, and think he will install one. The projectors are Simplex. Current is rectified by a motor generator set. I suggested a change in the auditorium lighting, which, however, is not at all bad as it is, and Friend Bryant was kind enough to say that the suggestion was excellent.

At the Lyric, J. H. McLean and J. Waters, managers, the operating room was small, but the ports were covered with glass, and there was an exhaust fan, so it is not as large as it ought to be. The projectors are Simplex. E. Sternberger is operator. The auditorium lighting of the Lyric is extremely bad. I called Friend McLean's attention to the matter, but he didn't seem very much impressed. His idea, as expressed to me, was that so long as the light didn't strike the screen, that was sufficient. That it glared into the eyes of the audience did not, in his opinion, cut any figure. The Lyric is a 5-cent house.

The Princess seats 1,600. J. E. Schlank is manager, W. K. Disbrow assistant. It is a beautiful house, with fairly good auditorium lighting, from the projection point of view. George Allen is operator. The roof of the operating room is; however, just about 7 inches below the foundation stone of heaven, and the pitch in projection is pretty fierce. The room is small, and has no proper ventilation, the air being taken in out of the auditorium, the circulation being dependent upon the draft of an open vent flue. Two Power's Six A are used.

At the Strand I met Manager L. Weil. Mr. Weil's father manages the Royal, which I did not have time to visit. The Strand operating room is small, has a very low ceiling, and there is no glass in the ports. The sidelights in the balcony and under the balcony are very bad. The screen is bordered in black. Fred Burr is in charge of projection, with Claude Poole as assistant.

Taken altogether, Sioux City is just about average as regards auditorium lighting, and a little above the average in operating room practice, but there is plenty of room for improvement—yes, plenty.

The Sioux City men, having healthy appetites for the good things of earth, had set their minds upon a banquet, but alas, nary hotel, of class, in all the vastness of the city, would permit of any such ridiculous doings as a banquet lasting until 3 a. m. However, still with an eye to the main chance, the boys said: "Well, by golly, we'll feed anyhow." So when at midnight we greeted an almost 100 per cent. attendance of Sioux City operators and managers in the Union Hall, we grew somewhat impatient at a twenty minute delay in the proceedings, which impatience vanished when we were ushered into the next room and confronted what was, under the circumstances, a very excellent layout of palate ticklers. In fact, so excellent was the spaghetti that if one or two of the good brothers hadn't been pried loose, I think they would have been absorbing it yet. They ate two big platters, and were fixing up to shout for more when we squelched their gastronomical ambitions by starting our language mill, which continued to run steadily and energetically until 3 a. m.

The Sioux City men were, I think, just a little bit skeptical as to my ability to tell them anything new. I was amused after the lecture when one good brother stepped up, grabbed me by the hand, and after pumping it up and down for about fifteen seconds remarked, in a soulful tone of voice: "Rich, old man, I'll tell you to your face, I thought it was the bunk. I've been against you, but (one hand went up in the air) never again. I am with you, old man, from now on, and I am with you to a hard-boiled finish!"

After the address, both managers and operators lingered to shake hands, and expressed themselves as highly pleased with what they had heard. The consensus of opinion, as expressed by those present, was that much good would accrue to the industry in Sioux City by reason of my visit, all of which,

LOCAL 355

of course, was not at all displeasing to your humble servant. Next morning I dropped in at the Royal to say good-bye and found Manager Weil, Sr., and his staff busily discussing ways and means to change the auditorium lighting to meet my suggestions. The boys took me to the station, and their last words were: "Come again, old man, and make it soon."

While in Sioux City I was summoned to the long distance 'phone to hear the voice of Frank M. Olson, operator, Strand theatre, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, expressing regret at his inability to be in Sioux City for the lecture that night. Brother Olson had, on behalf of the Sioux Falls operators and managers, written, under date January 19, inviting me to stop in that city, but it was too late to make the necessary change in itinerary. Sorry, gentlemen, but it could not be done.

Mason City, Iowa.

From Sioux City I turned my ship of fortune eastward and breasted Iowa cornfields for a couple of hundred miles, to Mason City, Iowa. On the observation platform I observed a fine, handsome gentleman with the familiar cream-covered Moving Picture World draped gracefully from his coat pocket.

"And what particular cog in the machine are you?" said I, pointing suggestively to the pocket.

"A mere exhibitor—G. J. Dethleff by name—Alton, Iowa, by location—small town—1,000 population—doing good business—Power's 6-A machines—motor generator set—William Hanson, operator," was his brief but comprehensive reply.

Observe kindly reader! A man in a town of 1,000, not, so he says, drawing much from surrounding country, doing a good business, having equipment superior to very many city theaters. No hard luck grouch there. Brother Dethleff is a man who don't stand around under the tree with a sack, grouching because Sir Apple does not fall into it kerplunk. Nay, nay, Gladys. He climbs up into the tree, seizes the fruit resolutely, wrenches it from the bough and deposits it gracefully but firmly in the bag, the while watching for its neighbor with the other hand.

My Mason City audience, viewed as an audience, was one of the most difficult to address of any on the entire trip. It set about the hearing of the lecture as though it was a solemn rite. It was more like a wake than a gathering of theater men. At one point an operator so far forgot his decorum as almost to smile right out in meeting. Fortunately, however, he recovered himself in time, and thus avoided any such unseemly behavior.

And maybe you think it a light task to address an unresponsive, solemn-visaged audience for two mortal hours. Truly I had rather talk to the Omaha men, for instance, for twice that length of time.

After the lecture a very nice dinner was spread in one of the restaurants, and there the crowd loosened up and uncorked a few laughs when a vaudevillian, whose breath had a decidedly wet-state aroma, pulled some sleight-of-hand tricks, which, as he sagely observed, "are damned good tricks —if I only can do 'um!"

The Mason City men had insisted that I include their city in my itinerary, even offering to stand any extra expense I might be put to. To comply with their request had meant a lot of extra mileage and discomfort.

Certainly Mason City needed a lecture on projection. In only one operating room, that of the Bijou, F. X. Cota operator, were the conditions anything even faintly approaching what they should be. Brother Cota had his front shutters suspended by film links, placed on spreaders located directly over the machine apertures. His rewinder was geared down in speed, and on the operating side of the lamphouses of his Power's Six A machines were heat protectors, consisting of an iron-bound sheet of asbestos, in which was inserted a four-inch square sheet of glass placed opposite the colored glass in the lamphouse door.

In general, Mason City operating rooms are poorly ventilated (Exception: The Regent), have white walls and too much light. Auditorium lighting varies from poor to very bad, from the projection point of view.

Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Fort Dodge, too, had insisted that I include them in the itinerary, and, having done so, demonstrated their right to be called live wires by getting somewhat busier than busy. Why, they even sent invitations to Des Moines, Omaha and Minneapolis, as well as to every exhibitor, exchange man and operator in every city, town and hamlet within a radius of more than sixty miles, also they worded their invitations in vigorous fashion.

Local Union 389, Fort Dodge, is the real goods, so far as hustle be concerned. There are only three shows running in the city, and only five altogether, yet the Union has about thirty members and expects to have forty by fall. Reason: The Union covers its jurisdiction, which extends, as most union's jurisdictions do extend, over a wide stretch of territory. Local 389 doesn't sit on its haunches and howl, like a dog with a sore tail, about the "operators being unorganized." Not so, Mabel! Instead, it has girded up its loins, gone forth and organized its jurisdiction. Result: A strong, healthy union of thirty members in a city of, as I remember it, 18,000

At the station brothers John Anderson and Otto Essinger had the welcome mat all nicely dusted off and spread out against our coming. And when supper time came—yum, yum! Some chef, that mother-in-law-to-be of brother Anderson's. Also the M. I. L.'s daughter, with whom Anderson proposes hitching in double harness very soon, is quite some considerable—well, Anderson is some picker, that's all!

Conditions in Fort Dodge are briefly summed up as follows: Majestic theater has brilliant, but poorly handled, picture light—shadows. The operating room is light flooded, and its ceiling is an affectionate one—loved the floor real well—distance between the two five feet, ten inches. Beside the screen a big exhaust fan lets in daylight—it should be protected on the outside by a light-proof chute, or hood. Bright exit lights right and left of screen —bad. Equipment, Power's 6A. Earl Lober is operator.

John Anderson.

The Strand Theater has two Power's 6B projectors. The operating room is 10 by 12 feet, with a seven-foot ceiling. There is a fresh air intake duct, though poorly located, and a sixteen-inch exhaust fan. The lamphouses are piped to the vent flue. There is a neatly inclosed, glass-front marble switchboard. Linoleum of neat pattern covers the floor. The arcs are handled by auto arc controls. Brother John Anderson has called my attention to a fault I have heard of in other quarters, viz.: That whereas the auto arc control regulates within half an ampere when new, in a few months there is a gradual falling off of accuracy, until it allows a variation of from three to five amperes. A very grave fault, indeed, and one which should be carefully looked into by its manufacturers, the source discovered and eliminated. It may be this fault does not exist in all machines, but that it does in some of them is certain.

John Anderson's Fountain of Knowledge Adjoining His Operating Room.

Brother Anderson is a real operator. He uses his brains, as well as his hands. In a room adjoining the operating room is a table upon which are found The Handbook, third edition; Hawkens' books, Moving Picture Worlds and the American Correspondence School set—ample evidence that he is a student of his business. He takes current through a big motor generator set, located in the basement.

Mr. Anderson is chief and Lewis Dickman assistant operator.

At the Lyric there is a small operating room, with one simplex machine. The walls are black, but there is too much light. Auditorium lighting is very bad, consisting mostly of a lot of Chinese lantern sidelights.

I felt sincerely sorry for the Fort Dodge boys. They did a big lot of work, and had set the wheels in motion for a really big meeting, with good prospects for success. A large number of out-of-town men had announced their intention of motoring in for the meeting. But, alas! Jupiter Pluvius got on the job, and there was a literal downpour of extremely damp rain. Those who have speaking acquaintance with Iowa wind will know what that means. But, even so, approximately fifty were present, among them James A. Leese, Charles A. Movotry, and another whose name I did not get, from Waterloo, Iowa, a hundred miles away; L. O. Whipple, Clare, Iowa; Morris D. Burchhalter, Pocahontas, Iowa; F. E. Hughart, M. V. Brown, T. J. and E. F. Pfheghauft, Grand Junction, Iowa. (P. S.—I don't guarantee the spelling of those names—it is as nearly as I could decipher them.)

The meeting was a success—how could it be otherwise with such hustle behind it. But the lighting conditions in the theater selected for the lecture were but ill-suited to the purposes of a lecture; also the writer was weary almost to the point of exhaustion, and while the audience expressed itself as satisfied, I was not—with myself, I mean; also, I was literally compelled to leave the table before the banquet, which was served in the commercial clubrooms after the address, had progressed very far, and seek my little straw pile at the hotel. My room in the Mason City hostelry had been a sort of cross between an overworked planing mill and a good sized boiler factory for noise, and sleep had been but a vain hope. Fort Dodge was the goat. It was one point at which yours truly came mighty near climbing into bed and telling all and sundry to go hang.

I shall remember Fort Dodge men as hustling, enterprising boys, who, whatever their shortcomings, do not lack in energy, and who will in the end make good. I might, however, ask what important business it was which kept Manager Lego, Majestic Theater, secretary Iowa Exhibitors' League, away. Seems to me it would have looked decidedly better for him to have lent his presence to an affair of that kind, which has the indorsement of other State Leagues

Des Moines, Iowa

Des Moines, capital city of the Hawkeye State, came next after Fort Dodge. To reach it, one traveled by interurban, which means fairly swift and fairly rough traveling but at 12:50 P. M. the smile-covered faces of Brothers Ray Harding, D. O. Seaman and R. Caldwell, president Local Union No. 286, hove into view at the station platform, and soon we were installed in one of the pigeonholes Des Moines hotel-keepers call rooms.

The men wanted to gasoline me around the city, but, beyond allowing them to take me up to and around the capitol building I refused to be interviewed. Nor did I wish to visit Des Moines theaters. I had been told that the conditions in that city were very, very far from good, and I did not wish any manager to think I was landing on him individually when I, in course of the lecture, condemned things of which he might be guilty. Moreover, this particular traveler was fast approaching the end of both his physical and mental endurance, and rest was not only desirable but absolutely imperative, so we crawled away back into our hole, and pulled the hole in after us, until 11 P. M.

At that hour we addressed a meeting of operators and managers in one of the theaters, but, while the audience was appreciative, it lacked considerably in point of numbers, because the Union, I think, had not been as energetic as it should have been in its endeavor to secure a full attendance. I have observed that almost invariably in those cities where conditions are extra bad there is lack of interest, or, rather, a lethargy and lack of energetic action on the part of the organization. And when one comes to study the matter one sees that this is but the natural sequence of such conditions.

This is not a roast for Des Moines. I really believe the Des Moines men meant well. They did the best they could, but they need a real good shaking up and waking up, for their own good and the good of the moving picture industry.

Ottumwa, Iowa.

The train was all too slow approaching Ottumwa, where I lived during the spring and summer of 1886, because Friend Wife, whom I had not seen for 3.5 months, was to meet me there. But all things have end, and at noon we rolled into the Ottumwa station to (curtain—you wouldn't watch a man kiss his own wife, would you?) Well, the reception committee was on the job—very much so, but unfortunately I failed to note the names, an oversight for which I hope to be pardoned.

The boys joy-rided us around over the city, and did everything possible for our enjoyment and comfort. The various theaters were visited, with following results: The Strand Theater has a neat front, but its auditorium lighting is, from the projection point of view, simply awful. In all, there are fourteen bright lights and two clocks, to say nothing of six inverted fixtures throwing bright circles of light on the ceiling. The picture was of correct size and the projection light brilliant; speed uncontrolled, but approximately right. Charles J. Hill is operator. He has very cleverly made dissolving shutters which dissolve one motion picture into the next; also he has the same type of shutter on the stereo lens of each machine. These shutters are connected, of course. Brother Hill is doing his work well. The operating room is black and there is an exhaust fan, but no glass in the ports.

The Rex has very bad light on piano; also a large fan beside the screen admits daylight; the clock is immediately below screen—bad. Other auditorium lighting is fair.

The Orpheum operating room has three large windows, wide open, thus placing the operating room right out of doors, so far as air—and light—be concerned. Machine and room very dirty, and lamphouse interiors extremely so. Screen result poor—light very yellow.

I did not make notes on the Princess, but both its manager and operator are live wires. Power's 6B projectors are used. L. C. Simmons is operator.

The lecture was preceded by a banquet at which very nearly 100 per cent. of Ottumwa managers and operators were present; also J. E. Benton, who had traveled from Banquet Tendered to F. H. Richardson by Ottumwa Managers and Operators.

Albia to hear us. Friend Benton is an old-time operator, who now is also an exhibitor.

The banquet was enjoyed by all and sundry, as also was the lecture, if I may judge by remarks from the audience after it was over. The Ottumwa men are small in numbers, but are possessed of the energy necessary to accomplish things, once their energies are directed into the right channels and that is exactly what I tried to do. How well I succeeded is for them to say.

Exline, Iowa.

Exline, Iowa, had been dedicated to rest—a whole week of it. The writer was born in Centerville, six miles north, and raised on a farm one mile north of the village of Exline, and in and around that hamlet and in Centerville many relatives and old time schoolmates live. For the first three days it seemed as though twelve to thirteen hours of sleep was a mere trifle, but we caught up finally.

And the old home farm! Yes, it was sadly changed in forty years, but I could reconstruct it all, and at least a few hoary and more or less feeble old trees were recognized as friends of other days. And the dear old hills were there. And the lane to the "West Eighty," through which it was my duty to bring the cows home at night, was just as it was all those years ago, and as I walked its length I followed the shadowy form of a tousled-haired, bare-footed urchin, who stopped to watch the tumble bugs' slow progress, or chased a grasshopper to his lair, or dragged his foot sidewise in the dust to raise a cloud thereof—a ghost-form of the long ago. For I was following the memory of myself in days long past and dead.

I ain't going back no more,
To that graveyard of a place,
For spooks walk there in broad daylight
That I don't care to face.
I'd rather treasure up them scenes
Afore the place was dead
And hang 'em up like pictures
On the inside of my head.
And if anyone should ask me
Where's the farm you once lived on,
I'll say, "It's gone to Heaven,
Where the dear old folks is gone."

At Exline there is a small theater managed by C. McDonald. The writer was able to add somewhat to the enjoyment of Exline people by correcting certain things which were wrong—for instance, he was using one of the narrow blades of his Power's 6A three-wing shutter. I left him projecting a very good picture—for a small-town theater.

Centerville, Iowa.

Centerville, Iowa, has two theaters, the Orpheum, in which the screen is surrounded by a "shadow box" of light-colored advertising cards and the whole back end of the operating room open to the light of day, and a really nice little house, the Majestic, in which the screen is bordered by a black band of goodly width. But the orchestra (four pieces, very nice music) light, particularly the one over the piano, are very bad indeed; also the lights burned on the proscenium arch during intermission are very trying on the eyes and might be eliminated with distinct advantage to all concerned. The equipment consists of a Power's 6B and mercury arc rectifier.

The Majestic is managed by Leo Moore; Leo White is operator. It has a pipe organ of goodly size.

Mary Pickford Starts Ambulance Unit

Complete Red Cross Organization to Be Financed by Film Stars—Mary Donates Second Ambulance.

HAVING presented an ambulance to the local Red Cross, Mary Pickford is now industriously at work arranging to have a number of the popular photodramatic stars each contribute an ambulance to the Red Cross and maintain it during the time it is in France.

Miss Pickford has already engaged her second ambulance and has written notes to Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, George M. Cohan, Elsie Ferguson, Marguerite Clark, William S. Hart and other prominent stars to induce them each to contribute an ambulance. The entire contribution will be sent to France as one complete unit from the motion picture stars.

Mary Pickford Presenting Her Second Ambulance to First Lieutenant Harry Woodward for Service in France.

The expense not only entails the purchase of the ambulance, but maintenance of it in the service, and the Artcraft star feels that if she can purchase and maintain two ambulances, the other prominent stars should do likewise.

Miss Pickford's second ambulance is now in New York and will be sent to France as soon as the donations from other stars are heard from.

Photodramatic stars are as popular in the trenches as they are in America, and it will be a unique distinction for the American Red Cross to convey the wounded in the ambulances provided by their screen favorites.

SELZNICK LIGHTING UP THE WHITE WAY.

Louis J. Selznick is now the largest single contributor to the whiteness of the Great White Way.

The electric signs used to advertise Selznick-Pictures at Forty-sixth street and Broadway, at Forty-second and Broadway, and on the Broadway theater itself total the largest number of square feet of illumination used by any one concern.

This apex of electrical display was reached with the completion of the big sign at Forty-second and Broadway, opposite the Rialto theater, last week, for the advertising of the new Selznick star, Constance Talmadge. Other sections of the same sign are employed for the announcement of the coming Rita Jolivet feature.

At Forty-sixth and Broadway is another Constance Talmadge illumination and one announcing "The Lone Wolf," while the Broadway theater display at present is also devoted to the big Brenon production.

"The Stolen Treaty"

Five-Reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Tells Entertaining Story of Diplomatic Intrigue, With Earl Williams and Corinne Griffith in Leads.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ARTISTIC production, in the matter of costumes, settings and social atmosphere, are the outstanding features of this number, which was written by Thomas Edgelow and directed by Paul Scardon. A little more tension in plot development would have strengthened the interest at times, but there is at least one surprise and considerable mystery to compensate for the lack of suspense.

Earle Williams appears in the part of Geoffrey Wynne, a secret service agent, Denton Vane as Prince Zarl of Zorania, and Corinne Griffith as the charming heroine, Irene Mitchell. Others having important roles are Billie Billings, Bernard Seigel and Robert Gaillard.

Scene from "The Stolen Treaty" (Vitagraph).

The observer first makes acquaintance with the cast at a Fifth avenue reception, where Prince Zarl is the guest of honor. Geoffrey Wynne makes his appearance as a society fop, and attracts considerable attention, but whose connection with the secret service is unknown. He meets the heroine and she makes known to him her desire to have a real adventure. Later he is able to accommodate her, as she plays an important part in rounding up the conspirators.

The nature of the diplomatic intrigue has a certain vagueness about it, which undoubtedly accounts for the lack of suspense. However, the observer is able to gather the important features as the story proceeds. The closing scenes are particularly attractive.

"The Trail of the Shadow"

Emmy Whelen in Five-Part Rolfe Photoplay An Attractive Heroine of Interesting and Well Produced Story—Released by Metro.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE English musical comedy star, Emmy Whelen, is the principal player in "The Trail of the Shadow," a five-part Rolfe production adapted for the screen by June Mathis from a story by Oscar Lund. The plot is romantic, most of the scenes being laid in the West among picturesque locations, and the story, although not at all unusual, is continuously interesting.

The character played by Miss Whelen is that of a mysterious girl who lives in a cabin by herself and sells her beadwork to the visitors of a large summer hotel in the vicinity. A wealthy young chap from the East falls in love with her, but she refuses to marry him and will not explain her reason. It develops that the girl's father had been robbed and murdered by his private secretary in revenge for being rejected by the heroine. The man fled to the West and turned outlaw. Sylvia, the girl, also left the East after her father's death. One day fate leads the murderer to Sylvia's cabin. There is a struggle and Sylvia is left insensible. When she recovers she finds a note that leads her to believe that the man has taken the most terrible revenge possible. The young chap from the East gets on his trail and makes him admit, with his dying breath, that he has lied.

There is plenty of dash and incident in the story and it is well produced. Emmy Whelen's type of beauty is adapted to the screen. She is not a remarkable actress in serious roles, but is earnest and painstaking and has a winning personality. The supporting company is excellent and consists of H. S. Northup, Fuller Mellish, Eugene Strong, Kate Blancke, and Alice MacChesney.

"A Self-Made Widow"

Alice Brady Star of Five-Part Peerless Photoplay That Is Often Amusing and Never Dull—Released by World.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE title "A Self-Made widow" suggests a tragedy, but there is nothing of that nature about this five-part Peerless photoplay from a story by Henry Albert Phillips. The author has started out to write an amusing tale, and never lets anything in the way of improbability interfere with the course of events. To thoroughly enjoy the picture it is only necessary to take everything in good faith and learn that fate and the scenario writers often play strange but entertaining tricks with the lives of some people.

Sylvia Smith, the heroine, is a simple country girl who elopes with a city chap, only to learn that he is already provided with a wife and family. She determines not to return home and be laughed at and immediately stumbles upon a most amazing adventure. This need not be fully explained here, but the manner in which she is enabled to step into a fortune and to announce that she is the widow of the man whose name is on the marriage license she owns, is anything but commonplace. In the latter part of the story, where the dead man comes back to claim his property and ends up by falling in love with his widow, events make a brave attempt to be serious but are as amusingly entertaining as ever.

Alice Brady is capital as Sylvia Smith and wears a number of stunning gowns, after the country girl becomes a widow. John Bowers is excellent as the hero, and other commendable impersonations are given by Curtis Cooksey, Justine Cutting, Richard Clarke, Henrietta Simpson, Herbert Barrington, and Lila Chester. Travers Vale directed the picture.

"The On-the-Square Girl," Five-Part Astra Photoplay Featuring Mollie King. Number Four of "The Fatal Ring" With Pearl White, and Twelfth Installment of "The Neglected Wife."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The On-the-Square-Girl."

THE material selected by Ouida Bergere for her photoplay "The On-the-Square Girl," produced by Astra with Mollie King as the star, is some times described as snappy. Anne Blair, the heroine, is a beautiful model in the Fifth Avenue shop of a man milliner. An elderly roue is attracted by her, and the dressmaker arranges matters so that Anne is forced to wound her admirer severely before she can escape from his evil attentions. The man, whose name is Brockton, has a daughter Inez. The girl is engaged to an artist but her liking for fast life makes him turn from her, and when he meets and befriends Anne he knows he has found the right woman at last. Brockton is prepared to resent having his daughter thrown over for this humble little model but when he learns that Anne is his own child he is filled with remorse. Annie's mother was his first wife but had agreed to a separation that Brockton might be spared his father's anger and marry the woman picked out for him by the elder Brockton.

Scene from "The On-the-Square-Girl" (Pathe).

The atmosphere of the story is feverish. Most of the characters are more particular about their wardrobes than their morals and the lives they lead are expensive but unlovely. In building up the scenario the author has seen to it that it maintains a rapid pace in keeping with its subject, and director George Fitzmaurice has given it the benefit of a strong cast and correct settings. Mollie King is pretty and acts well as the model. The remaining principals are L. Rogers Lytton, Aimes Dalmores, Donald Hall, and Ernest Lawford.

"The Warning on the Ring."

The rate of speed maintained by the Pathe serial, "The Fatal Ring," through the preceding numbers shows no sign of let up in "The Warning on the Ring," the fourth instalment. The fight over the ring is still kept up and Pearl Standish and Knox has a number of thrilling adventures with Richard Carslike and the Priestess before the end of the two reels. Some of the liveliest action and the best entertainment is furnished by Pearl's dog, after the ring is fastened to his collar and he is chased by the enemies of his mistress. The climax leaves Pearl plunging into a deep hole filled with water.

"Embittered Love."

The principal incident in number twelve of "The Neglected Wife is near the close of the instalment, when the veiled woman comes to Kennedy's office and trys to kill him with a knife. There is an exciting struggle, but help arrives before the woman can carry out her purpose. She runs to the window and escapes. The three-cornered fight between Margaret, Horace Kennedy and Mary, his wife, is still kept up, but the girl is not permitted to forget that Norwood is her true friend.

"The Little Boy Scout"

Ann Pennington Featured in Five-Part Photoplay That Makes Excellent Juvenile Fiction—Produced by Famous Players.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE author of this five-part photoplay, produced by the Famous Players and featuring Ann Pennington, is Charles Sarver. It is difficult to believe that the picture was intended for mature minds. Members of the Boy Scouts will enjoy it hugely. The story is on a par with the regulation fiction for boys and girls in their 'teens, and from this point of view will pass inspection with flying colors.

Justina Howland, the heroine, is living in Mexico when the story opens. Her father was an American and her mother a Mexican woman. Both are dead and her mother's brother plans to marry Justina to his son and so get control of the rich mines that will come to the orphan. Justina runs away and starts for the home of her aunt, who lives in Lowell, Mass. The girl gets to the border, is befriended by a Lieutenant Morton of the U. S. A., and arrives safely at her aunt's house. The uncle pursues her and, in order to escape being taken back to Mexico, Justina disguises herself as a boy scout, and joins a company of the juvenile soldiers, now under the command of her old friend Lieutenant Morton, who has also come to Lowell. When the uncle overtakes the scouts and tries to force Justina to go with him he discovers that she is Mrs. Lieutenant Morton, the pair having been married five minutes before.

The Boy Scout element is the best thing in the picture. Ann Pennington looks very fetching in her khaki uniform, but the part does not call for any serious efforts in the way of acting. Owen Moore as the Lieutenant, Fraunie Fraunholtz as Alvarez, Marcia Harris as Elizabeth Howland, George Burton as Luis Alvarez, and Harry Lee as Sergeant Jones make up a competent cast.

"The Poisoned Cup"

Two-Reel Episode of Kalem's "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" Series.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

IN THE latest two-reel episode of Kalem's "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" series we are given a further sight into the character of the Australian bushranger. There is little action in the number, and it is not nearly as exciting as have been the preceding episodes, but E. W. Hornung's story is fairly interesting, somewhat making up in interest what is lacking in action.

Stingaree this time gets tired of Howie's cooking and decides to invite himself out to dinner. He invites himself to a wealthy squatter's home. At the point of a gun he is made welcome and by sheer force of personality makes his unwilling hosts entertain him. Poison is put in a cup of coffee intended for Stingaree, and there is considerable suspense worked up when he is about to drink it. However, he changes cups with his hostess and the poisoning plan is brought to light when she is about to quaff. Stingaree eludes the Mounted Police by a novel method.

Scene from "The Poisoned Cup" (Kalem).

True Boardman is the usual typical Stingaree. Paul C. Hurst, who also directed, is seen as Howie. Other members of the cast are: Hal Clements, Edythe Sterling, Tom Walsh, G. A. Williams and Ah Wing.

"The Range Boss"

A Red-Blooded Western Photo-Melodrama By Essanay, Featuring Jack Gardner and Ruth King—Adapted and Directed By W. S. Van Dyke.

Reviewed by James S McQuade.

CHARLES ALDEN SELTZER'S short story, "The Range Boss," has lent itself so admirably to screen service that the spectator is always keyed up to a high pitch of interest. There was not a moment, with one exception, that my critical faculties were ruffled, the exception being a needlessly lengthened exposure of a scene in the first reel which shows a hill side with a few cowboys and cattle on it in the range of the Flying W. However, the action is so lively and exciting otherwise that the exception is overlooked.

Scene from "The Range Boss" (Essanay).

One relishes particularly, near the opening of the filmed story, the contrast between the manners of the East and those of the Western plains. We see Ruth Harkness (Ruth King), heiress to the Flying W., Willard Masten (Carl Stockdale), her fiance, and her old aunt and uncle making the last lap of the journey from New York in a two horse buggy. They approach a stream whose depth is uncertain, and nearly come to grief by trying to cross it. A lone cowboy, Rex Randerson (Jack Gardner), who chances to be nearby, shouts a warning. Then he assists each of the party from midstream to the bank, a feat in which his pony plays an important part, more especially so in the case of Willard Masten, whom he lands plump in the water by means of a playful bucking jump. The innocent air of Cowboy Randerson as he gains the bank, over the absence of the curt New Yorker, would awaken the risibilities of a half-dead man.

It turns out later that Rex Randerson becomes range boss of the Flying W and an intimacy deeper that friendship steadily develops between him and Ruth Harkness. This breeds for Rex the enmity of Willard Masten and of the foreman and straw boss of the Flying W., which ends in the death of all three.

Jack Gardner's Rex Randerson is a typical western man of the plains—sensitive, brave and honest. He is a fine horseman, quick with his pistol and always ready to defend himself or the weak. In his suit for the love of Ruth Harkness he never lowers the pride of his manhood, not even when she wrongfully accuses him of lying. And near the end of the story he saves her from a fate worse than death by a breakneck ride and a pistol fight, in which he kills her assailant.

As Ruth Harkness, Miss King treats the spectator to many nice points in acting. In a look, a gesture, she can convey a world of meaning. And there is an arch sluice of humor at times that is very delightful.

Willard Masten is strongly impersonated by Carl Stockdale, while the minor characters of Old Man Catherson, Hagar, his daughter, Tom Chavis, the foreman, and Jim Pickett, the straw boss, are commendably carried. To the capable direction of W. S. Van Dyke the production owes much of its worth.

The release will be made July 16 through K-E-S-E.

Triangle Program

"Sudden Jim," With Charles Ray, and "The Sawdust Ring," With Bessie Love.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"SUDDEN JIM" presents an entirely new characterization for Charles Ray, more manly, more typically American and one calling for an abundance of physical energy, but not quite enough of psychology. Perhaps this is because the man of swift methods does not hesitate long enough to reveal much of his characater, but it is attractive and a change from the weakling roles to which Ray has been so long assigned. He has been very successful in these difficult parts, very consistent in portraying them, but they are not representative of our national character in spite of the fact that they have been a decided improvement on the old-fashioned hero. Perhaps there is a balance to be struck between them which has not been reached, that of a man who overcomes destructive influences on his character by some form of innate strength or refinement of his early environment.

There are many sensational scenes, massed struggles and burning of railroad property, mechanical stuff of the old-fashioned melodrama so often used in pictures, but it is made consistent and plausible in this case. The most noteworthy character outside of that played by Ray is of a venerable county judge by Joseph J. Dowling, a gem in its way. The most amusing episode is that of a woman in the gallery of a nomination meeting calling out to her corrupted husband below that he had better vote the right ticket if he expects to have peace at home, a shot that is particularly opportune and one which will make a hit with audiences in all parts of the country. The love story is weak from lack of development of the girl's character, but that is the weak spot of melodrama as a rule. The minor roles are well taken and interpreted to the full extent of their opportunity. As a whole the story is an attractive piece of sensational realism.

"The Sawdust Ring."

"The Sawdust Ring" is a creditable attempt at domestic comedy by an author who is given too much for any one [illegible] to do. He has [illegible] a story for the screen which affords Bessie Love some delightful opportunity and has written a story of realistic humor, with several distinct complications, but there is not enough material in it for five reels, and it drags at times from the prolongation of closeups and general attenuation. It presents Bessie Love as the daughter of a washerwoman who has "inherited" a tendency to be a circus performer, no more a matter of inheritance than a tendency to be a washerwoman, the weakest spot in the entire structure. Desire on the part of children to follow this or that occupation of grown-ups results entirely from imitation. Many playwrights could study the subject of heredity to advantage, but the safest rule for them to follow is to avoid that subject altogether.

Now it happens that the mother of Bessie was once married to a ring master and deserted him with her young baby through mistaken jealousy. When she is taken ill, and Bessie runs away with the junk man's son, their adventures land them in a circus. Bessie finds her daddy and takes him to her invalid mother. This is a thin story for five reels, without suspense and devoid of love interest, but it presents some attractive and amusing views of human nature. Bessie Love is the same conscientious little artist she has always been, and her impersonation is entirely effective—it is simply limited by conditions. The story will suit the younger portions of an audience, but it is not equipped with enough material for mature minds.

"The Cook of Canyon Camp"

George Beban Is Seen in a Picturesquely Staged Story of a French Canadian—Some Fine Touches.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT IS as a "French Canuck" that George Beban is seen in "The Cook of Canyon Camp," the Morosco subject released on July 19 through Paramount. Mr. Beban rises finely to his opportunities—he portrays the happy-go-lucky flapjack artist as only the great character delineator can portray him. Jean is wholesome and whole-souled, a philanthropist who hesitates not to tell a "beeg lie" when to him the ends seem to justify the means. He unites the separated couple and unweaves the tangle into which his Pickwickian admission of already being the possessor of a wife had thrown his own love affair.

Donald Crisp is the author of the story and the director of the picture. Mr. Crisp has given his bent for lyrical composition full swing in some of the sub-titles—always in the dialect of the Canadian North—and they are effective. In the working out of the tale, with its fine touches and homely humor, we overlook the employment of the unknown brother whose visit is responsible for breaking up a happy home. The production will be judged as a whole; on that basis it will rate well and leave a most pleasant impression at the close.

We get the atmosphere of the woods in the opening of the story—and it holds to the end. Jean comes down to the shores of a lake, and with a mirror heliographs his message of love to Marie on the opposite shore; she with a glass answers back. There are the lumbermen turning out of their bunks in the morning and "falling to" on the giant flapjacks. And just by the way, these flapjacks—without salt, don't forget—figure so much in the story that a theater where "The Cook of Canyon Camp" is being shown is no place for a hungry man.

Helen Eddy is Marie, and in this story, as in the other Beban subjects in which she has appeared she counts heavily—she makes a fine foil for the leading player. She is always good to look upon—she has the intelligence to bring out genuine human qualities and to make those qualities shine amid rough, even unkempt, surroundings. Monroe Salisbury is Silent Jack, the morose tenderfoot lumberman, who had gone to the woods to forget his domestic "troubles," which Jean proves to be of his imagination.

"The Cook of Canyon Camp" is a real Beban picture—and the writer thinks that is saying considerable for any subject.

"The Love That Lives"

Five-Part Famous Players Photodrama Gives Pauline Frederick Fine Opportunities for Forceful Acting.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is nothing half-way about "The Love That Lives," the five-part Famous Players-Paramount production written by Scudder Middleton. It belongs to the realistic school of screen fiction, and mother love is its theme. A scrub woman with the beauty and refinement to attract the advances of a man of wealth and breeding is not met with every day, even in mimic life. Granting her existence, however, it is quite likely that she would act as does Molly McGill when she finds temptation in her path. "The Love That Lives" shows Mollie selling her soul for money with which to educate her son. When the man whose protection she accepts grows tired of her, she drifts rapidly downward. After her son has grown to manhood and thinks her dead, the chance is given her to work out her own redemption. She does so at the cost of her life. To accomplish this the author has taken full advantage of dramatic license, but the lesson is made none the less impressive.

Scene from "The Love That Lives" (Paramount).

Pauline Frederick is the Mollie McGill. The part is an unusual one for her, but she meets the test with well-founded assurance. The three stages in Mollie's life are distinct, and it is in the last stage that Miss Frederick does her most forceful work. She looks the broken-down, sin-worn woman with pitiful perfection and acts with equal skill. John Sainpolis is finished and satisfying as Harvey Brooks, and Joseph Carroll is uncommonly clever as the boy Jimmy. Pat O'Mally, Violet Palmer, Frank Evans and Elden Stewart fill the remaining roles with credit. The production is up to the Famous Players standard.

"Two Little Imps"

Jane and Katherine Lee Stars of Lively Kid Comedy in Six Parts—Produced by Fox.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A BACHELOR uncle with two mischievous youngsters in his charge and the girl of his heart stopping at the same hotel is a state of affairs that is bound to furnish amusement for the onlooker. This is the situation in "Two Little Imps," a six-part comedy written by Mary Murillo to exploit the precocity of Jane and Katherine Lee. "Helen's Babies" was the forerunner of Miss Murillo's work. The comedy entanglements of "Two Little Imps" are as thick as plums in a home-made pudding, and most of them are amusing. The serious matter is not nearly so good. There is a wayward son who breaks into his father's room in the hotel, but is reformed by his sister, the sweetheart of the hero. However, this is not important. It is the pranks of the two youthful stars that furnish the entertainment, and their talent for getting into mischief is abnormally developed.

Scene from "Two Little Imps" (Fox).

To say that Jane and Katherine are in their element while being rescued from the ridge of the hotel roof by the fire department or helping to capture a gang of burglars is to do justice to the youngest of the Fox stars. The business-like way in which they do their work is not excelled by any member of the cast. Leslie Austen, Edna Hunter, Edwin Holt, Stuart Sage, Sidney D'Albrook and Wm. Harvey play the adult roles skillfully. The comedy has been well directed by Kenean Buel.

Scene from "The Greater Law" (Bluebird).

Reynolds, who produced the picture, is also the maker of the scenario. The plot is simple and direct and a good example of its class. Myrtle Gonzalez plays the part of Barbara Henderson, a young eastern girl whose brother is left in her care by her dying mother. The boy is weak and soon falls into evil ways. He takes his portion of his mother's estate and goes to Alaska in search of gold. He is killed in a dancehall, in a quarrel over a woman, and the hero of the tale, played by George Hernandez, is implicated in the murder. When Barbara goes to find her brother she is told of his death and the rumor of how he was killed. She starts to hunt down the murderer and has a number of thrilling adventures, until she learns she has been following the wrong trail for an avenger, but the right one for a woman whose heart has not led her astray, in spite of the circumstantial evidence against the hero.

The production is generally excellent and both stars create favorable impressions in their roles. Lawrence Peyton, Jack Curtis, Jean Hersholt and Maud Amory are the leading members of an adequate support.

"High Speed"

Jack Mulhall Featured in Five-Reel Butterfly Farce Comedy —Story Unoriginal and Action Slow.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

THE only speed in "High Speed," a five-reel Butterfly farce-comedy, featuring Jack Mulhall, is in its title. The story is unoriginal and very draggy—a two-reel idea has been padded out with monotonous incident to five reels. The picture never rises above a point of merely passing interest. The photography throughout is excellent, and there are many pretty and some beautiful exteriors.

Scene from "High Speed" (Butterfly).

The biggest contributing cause to the picture's flatness is the story, which tells of the young daughter of new-rich parents who, upon her return from a finishing school, is bored by her father and by about everything else about the house. The father sees to it that she meets a youth called Speed, who has earned that sobriquet through his manner of making every minute of the day count in his business. Speed becomes enamoured of the girl, but her mother insists on her marrying a count. Speed and the girl plan to elope, but the girl is caught by her mother. The mother nags until the girl consents to marry the count. Just as the marriage is about to take place the girl telephones Speed to save her. He breaks up the would-be wedding party by carrying the girl bodily out of the house and into his automobile. The two are aided in their elopement by the girl's father.

Jack Mulhall does his usual work in the leading male role. Fritzi Ridgeway plays the part of the girl. Others who appear on the screen are Harry Rattenberry, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Albert McQuarrie and J. Morris Foster. The picture was directed by George L. Sargent.

"Miss Deception"

Reviewed by Benn H. Grimm.

PURELY a vehicle for Jean Sothern is "Miss Deception," a five-reel comedy-drama produced by the Van Dyke Film Corporation and released on the Art Dramas program. The picture is almost a sister to "The Road Between," an Art Drama picture which was released about two weeks ago. "Miss Deception" is a photoplay that relies upon curls, cuteness and the personality of Jean Sothern to get it over. It is a production typical of that sort of pictures whose stories are made secondary to the exploitation of the charms of the star.

Miss Sothern this time is seen as the madcap farm girl whose father, a millionaire, deserted her mother many years ago. The girl has been brought up by her uncle. The father, believing the girl to be wild and untamed, has her come to the city. In reality the girl is refined and well educated, but she decides not to disappoint her father in his belief that she is wild. In her "wild make-up" she comes to the city and indulges in all sorts of pranks. But her disguise is the means of saving her father from marrying an adventuress. Also, through the discovery of oil on her uncle's and her own property, she is instrumental in saving her father from financial ruin.

The story was written by Joseph Franklin Poland, Eugene Nowland directed. In the company supporting Miss Sothern are Jack Newton, Robert Kegereis, Mary More, Edwin Stanley, Jack Ellis and Hal Peel.

Production details are adequate to the story's needs.

Five-Reel Butterfly Release Tells Fairly Entertaining Detective Yarn, With Story, Scenario and Production by Allen Holubar.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MANY screen stories have the faculty of holding the interest in spite of numerous drawbacks in their general development, and this five-reel number is one of that type. It has any number of minor faults, and yet the observer's attention is carried along from reel to reel without perceptible break.

Allen Holubar, who wrote and directed the piece and plays the leading role, has done some very creditable work in shorter productions, but parts of this kind are hardly up to his standard. The introductory scenes, bringing out the early work of Jerry Brennon, the detective-hero, are rather long and unnecessary to a certain degree. Then the Reed case itself is brought into the story in an uncertain way. The kidnapping of the girl was done so surreptitiously that the observer scarcely knows what has happened until Jerry finds her in the mountain cabin. This process of development leaves out the element of suspense. Neither is there anything to convince the observer that Jerry is threatened with a nervous breakdown.

The cabin in the woods and the mysterious developments during Jerry's stay are the strong features of the production. Mr. Holubar has a good eye for atmosphere and artistic settings and this is worthy of a much stronger story. The photography is also unusually attractive. There is plenty of action and considerable suspense in the last two reels, which bring the story to a pleasing close.

Scene from "The Reed Case" (Butterfly).

Ernest Shields, who has a good sense of comedy, makes the most of his limited opportunities. Alfred Allen appears as Renfroy, the old school detective, and Louise Lovely makes an attractive heroine. Others in the cast are Fred Montague, George Pearce, Sydney Dean, Nanine Wright and Edward Brady. The minor characters are too completely subordinated in many of the scenes.

"The Wrong Mr. Fox"

Klever Komedy Two-Reel Subject Features Victor Moore in Humorous Horseplay.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

AS THE title shows, "The Wrong Mr. Fox," a Klever Comedy, with Victor Moore, is a comedy of mistaken identity. Victor Moore is Mr. Fox, a down-and-out actor. He tries to commit suicide by gas, but the landlady interrupts by bringing in a letter which offers him a position with a company in Canaan, Vermont. He is so full of gas that when he blows out a match his breath catches fire. The first part of this reel is the funniest part of the picture.

When he gets to Canaan he is met by church members who are at the station to meet the Rev. Mr. Fox, their new pastor. Moore is broke and so he decides to go through with an impersonation of the minister. He takes his trick bicycle to church so that if his preaching falls flat he can do his bicycle act.

He begins the service by taking the collection. Then he disrobes in what, unfortunately, is represented as Billy Sunday's style. He finishes by riding his bicycle up and down the aisle and out.

Although this picture will amuse many people, its use of Billy Sunday's name in this connection will not commend it to Mr. Sunday's admirers. And they are legion.

Joe Welch in "The Peddler"

Yiddish Comedian Appears in a Screen Amplification of His Famous Sketch.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

JOE WELCH'S popular vehicle of nearly a generation ago, "The Peddler," produced by the U. S. Amusement Corporation in six reels, is on the Art Dramas program for release on July 25. If memory serves, this play was at one stage of its career a variety sketch built about the situation of Joe Welch discovering his own son robbing the safe. At another time it was a full fledged Bowery melodrama with lots of tremulous incidental music. The photoplay is merely a screen version of the stage play. It is an undramatic story told at great length. Every hint in the dialogue of the stage play has been built up into a scene in the photoplay. Undoubtedly many persons will be interested in this plain tale.

It is scrupulously clean. When Mr. Morgan discovers his wife with Sammy he puts her out of the house and makes Sammy support her. She makes Sammy "leave early every night" and the detective reports further to Mr. Morgan "everything is right and proper."

Joe Welch's voice is missed. But the titles in his dialect, which are inserted so often for their own sake, not to make situations more intelligible, may well have been spared.

Joe Welch is an itinerent country peddler who saves enough to open a second-hand clothing store in the city. He is a modern Job. His own son, Sammy, robs him. But finally oil is discovered on the tract of land in Oklahoma which his wife left him, and he is paid $500,000. He ends his days in affluence.

Young Catherine Calvert, as Sarah, the housekeeper, who marries Sammy, gives an interesting impersonation. Sammy is played by Sidney Mason. His is a thankless job. The part is frankly intended for theatrical purposes only. This is true also of the part of Mrs. Morgan, played by Sally Crute. A subtitle tells that all she wants is affection. The blind foundling, Mary, is played by six-year-old Kittens Reichert with much tenderness.

Those who have seen Joe Welch in the stage version of "The Peddler," and those who wish they might have seen him, will find in this photoplay an hour of good entertainment. It is an authentic record.

"Betty, Be Good"

A Five-Reel Balboa on the Mutual Program Featuring Jackie Saunders.

Reviewed by Arthur W. Courtney.

JACKIE SAUNDERS is featured in a five-reel Mutual entitled "Betty, Be Good!" It is the story of a rich, motherless girl who is constantly being admonished by her father to be good. She reads in the newspapers of the food riots at the city hall and decides to bake bread for the hungering multitude. She gets all stuck up with dough, burns the bread and tosses it out of the window on the butler's head. This is typical of the humor of the picture.

Each reel is just added to the preceding one. There is no vital connection between them. As we look back, however, we realize that Jackie's father refuses to lower the price of food until the end of the last reel. He is on bad terms with the mayor and has affidavits sworn to incriminate the mayor and keep himself out of jail. All the developments of the plot are transparent. The father is setting out to town with the affidavits. He hands them to the chauffeur, who places them beside him in the roadster. Then the father decided to take the big car. The chauffeur gets it, but leaves the affidavits in the roadster. Jackie runs away from home with the roadster. She is held up by a mule. A tramp steal the affidavits. He shows up in the last reel trying to sell the affidavits to the mayor. Then we get a flash back of what has actually happened. When the mayor sees the affidavits he laughs and says that the man who made them has since been put in the insane asylum. Everyone registers surprise and Jackie's father reduces the price of food.

The mayor's son spends his vacation as an officer on the police force, incognito. He arrests Jackie for disobeying traffic regulations. In a sense, she arrests him, for they marry eventually.

OTTO LUCK AND THE RUBY AZAMATAZ.

For the seventy-sixth release of Paramount-Bray Pictographs, Wallace Carlson sent his now famous movie hero "Otto Luck" in quest of the "Ruby" of Razmataz and the further adventures of this luckless chap afford ample opportunity for a cartoon that is among the best ever done by this versatile artist.

Pathe Program

Schedule for Week of June 29 Features Mollie King, Pearl White and Ruth Roland.

MOLLIE KING in a strong feature directed by George Fitzmaurice, Pearl White in a thrilling episode of her "Fatal Ring" serial and Ruth Roland in an intense-compelling chapter of "The Neglected Wife" are features of Pathe's program for July 29th in addition to two issues of the Hearst-Pathe News which at the present time is claimed by exhibitors to outdraw any five-reel feature.

"The On-the-Square Girl" is the title of beautiful Mollie King's five-reel Gold Rooster play, produced by the Astra Film Corporation under the direction of George Fitzmaurice and written by Ouida Bergere. The splendid supporting cast includes L. Rogers Lytton, Aimee Dalmores, Donald Hall and Ernest Lawford. It is a fast-moving, strong story dealing with the phase of New York life similar to that side of English society depicted in "Our Betters," W. Somerset Maugham's play which was produced after the picture was written and which ran all season on Broadway. In it, Mollie King has the role of a beautiful Fifth Avenue cloak model and she wears some of the handsomest gowns ever seen in a motion picture

Pearl White appears in "The Warning on the Ring," the fourth chapter of "The Fatal Ring" serial. It is one of the most exciting chapters yet. Carslake determines to secure the Violet Diamond, but Pearl, with the aid of her pet dog, cleverly eludes him. The end of the episode has a strong carry-over interest to the next which will bring theater patrons back to see it. "The Fatal Ring" is called "another 'Iron Claw.' "

"Embittered Love" is the title of the twelfth episode of "The Neglected Wife" serial, in which Ruth Roland is starred. This chapter is marked by the attempt of the veiled woman to kill Horace Kennedy after she has sent to Mary Kennedy the following note: "Your husband visited the other woman's apartment this afternoon. Remember he ruined my life and I am going to punish him."

The seventeenth release of the "Know America" Combitone scenics is entitled "Eastern Texas." The release shows very interesting scenes of Galveston, the immense sea-wall that protects the city from the ravages of storm, scenes in Dallas, the largest cotton gin in the world and views of the state fair grounds.

An International cartoon and scenic split reel release and Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 62 and 63 complete the program.

Triangle Program for July 22

Charles Ray Appears in "Sudden Jim"; Jack Devereaux and Winifred Allen in "A Successful Failure."

THE long-heralded Triangle production of "Sudden Jim," the Saturday Evening Post story by Clarence Budington Kelland, starring Charles Ray, will be released on the program for July 22. "A Successful Failure," produced under the supervision of Allan Dwan and featuring Winifred Allen and Jack Devereaux, is the other feature of the week.

The scenes were filmed in the big woods of California. One of the most spectacular is that showing a burning trestle, one hundred feet high, over which Charles Ray drives a trainload of logs just before it collapses to the ground. In the cast supporting Ray are Sylvia Bremer, Joseph J. Dowling, Lydia Knott, William Bellingford, Frank Whitson and Georgie Stone. Director Victor L. Schertzinger has charge of the production.

"A Successful Failure," featuring Jack Devereaux and Winifred Allen, is a humorous view of the struggle which a young man makes to gain enough currency of success to marry the girl he adores. When a package of counterfeit bonds is tossed at him by a young woman in a taxicab he believes that fortune has blessed him, not detecting their bogus species. He keeps the bonds as capital, and the confidence they give him is of inestimable value in giving him the courage to win.

The supporting company includes William Riley Hatch, George Renavent, Frank Currier, Russell Simpson and Robert Crimmins. The play was written by Robert Shirley and directed by Arthur Rosson, under the supervision of Allan Dwan.

BADET IN SELIG'S "NO GREATER LOVE."

Miss Regina Badet, the emotional French actress, is presented in the role of Sadunah the Dancer, in the Selig Red Seal Play, "No Greater Love." This K-E-S-E production was written by William Le Quex and is a life drama of to-day, being the study of a woman's heart. "Sadunah the Dancer" has a daughter whom she wishes to shield from the life she had led. Pursuing her sole ambition, Sadunah marries a rich financier, and when he gets into serious trouble and it would seem that he will lose all his money she tempts him to commit a terrible crime. But she, too, is ready to sacrifice all for mother love The call coming, Sadunah, at whose feet the artistic world has paid homage, gives her life for her child.

Regina Badet is known to many as "The vampire of the French screen." "No Greater Live" is said to present not only a strong plot, but beautiful photography, scenic effect, etc.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

THE LOVE PHILTER OF IKEY SCHOENSTEIN (Broadway Star Feature). Bernard Siegel, William Shea and Mildred Manning head the cast of this O. Henry one-part comedy. It is full of human nature and laughs.

STRICTLY BUSINESS (Broadway Star Feature).—An O. Henry story in two reels very well done. A vaudeville actor meets an actress who agrees to join him in putting on a vaudeville sketch on strictly business terms as far as their personal relations are concerned. The story is entertainingly told and ends in a genuine surprise. The titles are very good.

THE POISONED CUP (Kalem).—A two-reel episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree" series. Stingaree invites himself out to dinner and gets into a few tight places. However, he once more eludes the mounted police. The number does not contain much action and is not as exciting as preceding episodes.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay

THE RANGE BOSS (Essanay), July 16.—This is a western story that always keeps interest on the edge. Jack Gardner, Ruth King and Carl Stockdale appear in the leading roles and they are well supported. The direction has been ably done by W. S. Van Dyke, who also adapted the photo-melodrama from the story of Charles Alden Seltzer

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE TRAIL OF THE SHADOW (Rolfe), July 2.—An interesting story well produced, with Emmy Wehlen, the English musical comedy star, as the heroine, this five-part feature has plenty of merit. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

LEST WE FORGET (Drew), July 9.—The Drews, holding forth in this comedy, do their usual refined class of work. In this number "Henry," having arrived at that stage of matrimonial life where the daily remembrances of candies and flowers for wife have become a source of annoyance, is subjected to a course of absent treatment by "wife," who sends flowers and candy to herself, thus arousing hubby to a jealous rage. The story works out very nicely, with Henry penitent and giving his order for an everlasting supply of daily flowers and candy.

Mutual Film Corporation.

A MATCH IN QUARANTINE (La Salle), July 24.—In this comedy the son and daughter of two neighbors (widow and widower) elope. In doing so they succeed in having the home of the widower, to which the widow has come to protest against circumstances, quarantined for smallpox. The result is, that both couples are married before the close of the story, after the youngsters have been arrested for speeding in an automobile.

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS (Signal), July 16.—The fifteenth chapter of this serial, entitled "The Mystery of the Counterfeit Tickets." The gang takes advantage of the opening of a new branch on the K. & W. to counterfeit railroad tickets for the excursion to Copper City. A dishonest ticket agent sells the tickets and turns the money over to them. They go to the counterfeiters' shack to divide the money. Helen Holmes and her party attempt to capture them by lighting gasoline from the automobile in a trench that runs down to the shack. The burning of the shack is the punch of the episode.

BETTY, BE GOOD! (Mutual), July 16.—A five-reeler featuring Jackie Saunders. On the whole it is pretty poor material. A longer review is printed elsewhere.

JERRY AT THE WALDORF (Cub), July 12.—In this number of the Jerry pictures we find the hero being turned from a rooming house because of nonpayment of room rent. He then takes a room at a large hotel and, by happening in the wrong room, causes such a disturbance that he finally is led away by the police. Only moderately entertaining.

REEL LIFE NO. 63 (Gaumont), July 12.—The subjects contained in this issue are "A Submarine of the Past," "A Square Deal for the Baby," "Whale Meat," "Camp Fire Signal Girls," and a couple of animated cartoon studies from "Life," entitled "A Hasty Pudding" and "Professional Etiquette."

MUTUAL TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 36 (Gaumont), July 10.—In this number will be found some excellent views of Havana, Cuba; Aigues-Mortes, France, and some of the ancient cities of Egypt, such as Alexandria, Damietta, Mansura and Tanta. An interesting number.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 132 (Gaumont), July 18.—Interesting items of this issue are British submarines passing through Golden Gate, British "tanks" in action and American "tanks" in action, Dutch warships visiting the New York harbor and the Congressional ball game at Washington, D. C.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE LOVE THAT LIVES (Famous Players), July 9.—The work done by Pauline Frederick in this five-part screen play will be a surprise to many of her admirers. She plays a fallen woman who is redeemed through love for her son. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE COOK OF CANYON CAMP (Morosco), July 29.—George Beban is featured in this story of the Canadian woods. It is a good story, staged by Donald Crisp amid picturesque surroundings, and contains many good touches of light and shade. Helen Eddy and Monroe Salisbury are in the supporting cast.

THE LITTLE BOY SCOUT (Famous Players), June 28.—This five-part photoplay, starring Ann Pennington, is an excellent picture for the youthful mind, the Boy Scouts, in particular. Owen Moore is the leading support of the cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Pathe Exchange Inc.

NEW YORK'S GIANT BARGE CANAL (International), Week of July 15.—The half-reel educational showing the working of New York's barge canal from Albany to Buffalo divides interest with an amusing "Jerry on the Job" cartoon entitled "Love and Lunch."

THE ON-THE-SQUARE GIRL (Astra), July 29.—The life of a model in a man-milliner's establishment is shown in this five-part photoplay, starring Mollie King. The picture is full of dramatic episodes. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

SEEING THINGS (Nestor), Week of July 23.—A comedy number, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts. Eddie and his valet go to "Lonesomo Lodge," in the mountains, and Lee Moran does some good comedy work as a scared colored man. This is well constructed and laughable throughout.

THE SOLDIER OF THE LEGION (Gold Seal), Week of July 23.—This subject, by Maude Spengler Meeson and E. J. Clauson, was shown in five reels, but will undoubtedly be cut to three. It tells a story within a story, illustrating a novel being written in a boarding house. The writer, his friend, "Spike," and the girl slavey play parts in the later yarn, which takes place in Algeria. The manner of presenting this is light and fairly entertaining, but the subject as a whole has no special strength, neither episode being entirely convincing. The cast is pleasing and includes Irene Hunt, George Pearce and Leo Pierson.

THE SOUL HERDER (Universal).—A Harry Carey three-reeler, with Harry as a Billy Sunday in a ranch town which he reforms. Elizabeth Janes is excellent in a child's part. Fritzi Ridgeway is an attractive church organist. This is an excellent picture for children and adults. It ought to have a place on church entertainments. It has a strong moral tone. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

CAUGHT IN THE ACT (Victor), Week of July 23.—A two-reel subject, by Eugene B. Lewis, featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Neva Gerber. The former awakens in the morning, after a big spree. He is informed that he committed a triple murder the night before. Later it develops that he has a double, known as "Curly, the Fox." This plot is not particularly strong, but it is not obvious in character and holds the interest as it proceeds. There are also pleasing comedy touches here and there.

THE SOUBRETTE (Joker), Week of July 23.—A character comedy, by Tom Gibson, featuring Gale Henry and Milton Sims as a couple of "rubes." Grace Maroni is the lady adventuress who lures the young man to the city. His country sweetheart follows and some wild scenes occur. Later it all turns out to be a dream. This is well up to the aver-and will create numerous laughs.

CANNING THE CANNIBAL KING (Joker), Week of July 23.—Bobbie Mack is the king, and Lillian Peacock the very interesting queen of the cannibals. Franey and Morante arrive at the island and after a narrow escape from being the principal ingredient of a stew, escape. This is a very interesting comedy, with an elephant and an orang outang in the jungle scenes toward the close.

THE BEAUTIFUL IMPOSTOR (Star Featurette), Week of July 23.—A two-reel number, by Catherine Carr, featuring Mary Fuller as an orphan girl. She goes to the city, becomes a dressmaker's model and then is employed to represent a countess at a social affair, the real countess being ill. She falls in love with a wealthy society man, who remains true even after he learns her story. This is beautifully pictured throughout, and while possessing no particular dramatic strength, has the best social atmosphere. The plot is also quite original.

Triangle Film Corporation.

SUDDEN JIM (Triangle), July 22.—A comedy of domestic life and business in which Charles Ray interprets a finer character than usual, that of a manly type, with a lot of mass fighting and some sensational fire scenes. Generally good.

THE SAWDUST RING (Triangle), July 15.—A vehicle for Bessie Love, in which she is both consistent and attractive, but the story is not strong enough for the mature part of an audience. It may please the children and is generally fair.

HIS SPEEDY FINISH, June 17.—A comedy reel based on the unsuccessful efforts of a young fellow to make way with himself after being jilted on account of arriving too late for his own wedding. After accidentally becoming a hero the girl forgives him. An ordinary number, introducing a band of professional assassins who furnish some of the humor.

World Pictures.

A SELF-MADE WIDOW (Peerless), July 23.—Alice Brady has a lively part in this five-part photoplay, which has many amusing moments. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

CHARACTER AS REVEALED IN THE EYE (A. Kay Co.), July.—This is the second number of the Terry Human Interest series and gives a comprehensive illustration of how to read character by the eyes. Living examples of the truth of the Jessie Fowler teachings are presented in pictures of Lincoln, Wilson, Pershing and others. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere. On the same reel will be found scenes taken in Little Italy on New York's East Side.

WILLIAM FARNUM IN "THE CONQUEROR" (Fox).

The millions af admirers of stalwart William Farnum, the famous Fox Film star, may look forward with keen anticipation to the release date in September of "The Conqueror," a massive and thrilling photodramatic romance based on the life of one of America's frontier heroes, General Sam Houston, of Texas. This big production was directed by R. A. Walsh, producer of "The Honor System" and other Fox pictures of extraordinary merit. In the course of its production "The Conqueror" made use of several thousand Indians, Mexicans and live stock; the battle scenes, in which a hundred cannon were used, are tremendous; the love story is one of infinite charm and the dramatic action builds to a climax calculated to make every spectator gasp for breath.

Farnum steps into the screen in the role of the celebrated Texan hero. In the picture Sam Houston is first shown as a diamond in the rough, living among the Cherokee Indians and indifferent to the call of his white brethren. But when he meets the Tennessee Rose, played by the lovely Jewel Carmen, Houston undergoes a complete reversal of form.

Among the other members of the supporting cast are such famous Fox favorites as Charles Clary, J. A. Marcus, Carrie Clarke Ward, Robert Dunbar and Owen Jones. The principal Indian roles are played by the Sioux chiefs, William Eagle Shirt and Chief Birdhead.

Lillian Walker Wants Stories

Famous Dimple Girl Is Looking for Comedies and Finds Them Very Scarce.

By Ben H. Grimm.

THE most difficult thing to do while interviewing Lillian Walker is to listen to what she is saying. That is because one becomes so rapt in the pleasure of watching the play of her world-famous dimples, so flatteringly flustered at a direct gaze from her big, speechful eyes, and so caught up in the aura of "personality" that radiates about her, that one's faculties have enough to do merely to contemplate her. But it was our duty to carry to the readers of the Moving Picture World the message of the girl who made the dimple famous, so we tried our hardest to listen while Miss Walker told us about "The Lust of the Ages," an eight-reel picture directed by Harry Revier and produced in Utah by the Ogden Pictures Corporation, and about several other things.

Lillian Walker.

Miss Walker's most ardent prayer is for good comedy stories. She is at present in New York resting before beginning production of her next Ogden picture. But between resting periods she and her co-workers are scouring the land for good comedy stories.

"I would be the happiest girl in the world if I could get some good comedy stories," Miss Walker told us. "You cannot imagine how difficult it is to obtain suitable material—stories that will hold up for five, six or even more reels. Two-reel ideas are more or less plentiful; but it is not the plan of the Ogden Pictures Corporation to pad a two-reel idea to five or six reels. That was made forcefully evident to me when I read Arron Hoffman's script of 'The Lust of the Ages.' That picture, of course, is by no means a comedy—it is a serious picture with a serious purpose; but the same basic rules that apply to comedy padding apply to drama padding. And I can assure you that there is not one superfluous foot in 'The Lust of the Ages.' Parenthetically I might state that I modestly believe 'The Lust of the Ages' to be a picture of assured success, because it is a picture builded around a factor that plumbs deeply our economic existence. And besides the basic dramatic theme—the lust for money—there is much of the spectacular.

"I had no end of amusing and interesting experiences out in Utah during the filming of the picture. This can be easily appreciated when you know that whole flocks of sheep and herds of goats, cattle and horses were used in the making of the picture. The scenes in which the animals appear are those representing the period in the world's progress in which no money was used—the time when the necessaries of life were used as a medium of exchange. Mr. Revier, I believe, is to be complimented on his handling these secenes, as well as the numberless other spectacular episodes. And his handling of the whole subject has been done with the master craftsmanship—but I am not going to boast about the picture; I am going to abide by the decision rendered by the public after the evidence has been presented on the screen."

Vivaciously then Miss Walker told us of a recent visit to a meeting of Chicago exhibitors. It could be seen from her demeanor no less than her words that she was overwhelmed by the reception that had been accorded her by the exhibitors. She said that recently she had met many exhibitors and that they all demanded that she give them comedies. It is because of this request from the exhibitors, Miss Walker said, that she is so anxious to get suitable comedy material.

KITTY GORDON RENEWS WORLD CONTRACT.

Kitty Gordon has signed a new contract with World-Pictures Brady-Made covering a full year from the current month. The present arrangement was made under an option held by the World corporation when Miss Gordon was "signed up" six months ago for three pictures to be completed within that space.

In that document was a clause giving the company the privilege of calling upon the actress for her services for twelve months longer at a specified salary, and it is this proviso that has been taken up. The three picture plays already completed with Miss Gordon as star are "Forget-Me-Not," "The Beloved Adventuress" and "The Divine Sacrifice," the one last mentioned not having been published as yet.

Superpictures Film Clearing House

Corporation to Buy Big Pictures and Sell Direct to Important Exhibitors in Different Territories—Collins Outlines Policy.

SUPERPICTURES, INC., has in preparation plans whereby the corporation will become a clearing house for big feature productions. Frederick L. Collins, president of the corporation, in announcing Superpictures' unique policy, states that the firm will proceed to buy the biggest pictures produced and sell them, whenever feasible, direct to exhibitors in different territories. The exhibitor-buyer will in turn book the picture to other exhibitors in his territory.

The plan has been reached with a view to eliminating the exchange and cutting the costs of distribution. Overhead expense in maintaining exchanges often equals twenty-five per cent. of the cost of production Superpictures puts forth, and it is by doing away with much of this expense that Superpictures is determined to place itself in a position whereby it can sell at a reasonable price the best photoplays made

"Productions released by Superpictures will not be merely splendid features, satisfying the spectators," Mr. Collins states. "They will be more than that—superpictures in quality as well as in name, sold at a fair price and backed by powerful publicity so that an exhibitor will be positively assured that every Superpicture will be a super-box-office success. Exhibitors who show Superpictures will not only take in more money—they will also make more money.

"We do not expect to become fabulously rich in the motion picture business. We are prepared to lose money on our first production. But eventually we will make a fair profit. The man who makes a Superpicture and the exhibitor who shows it come first. They will take their profit and we will come last

"We are ready to buy, manufacture or finance any really big pictures. We'll sell them to big exhibitors, launch huge publicity campaigns and let the exhibitors take the profits.

"We have spent six months trying to find the best way to produce and sell motion pictures of undoubted quality. We tried the program idea. We had nearly a million dollars invested in the securities of program companies. We've owned stock in the 'star' companies. And we've made money.

"However, we have decided that the plan nearest perfection is to furnish the exhibitor what he wants at a price he can afford to pay. We are ready to act as a cleaing house for anv man who owns a production we believe to be of Superpictures quality. We will sell it to the big exhibitors, who are going to be the state rights buyers of the future. We'll put the proper publicity behind it and take a small profit. The exhibitor will make the big money.

"The exchange system is full of flaws. It cannot adjust itself to varying conditions; it fails to give the proper sort of service. The big exhibitor knows conditions in his vicinity, knows the smaller exhibitors and realizes what prices they can afford to pay and is able to help them get the best possible value out of a picture they book. One exhibitor would rather deal with another than with an exchange, for the exhibitor can give genuine service. He has dealt with exchanges and knows, from experience, where they fail to satisfy the man who shows pictures. These faults he corrects in his own selling organization.

"We believe in the exhibitor and we're going to deal with him. We're not merely going to talk with him. We're going to prove to him that Superpictures will make money for him; prove it by giving him the best pictures produced and at a price that gives him an opportunity to pile up profits on Superpictures days.

"We shall not release more than twelve productions in the first year. After the first year, however, we expect to be in a position to supply the big demand for Superpictures that by that time will have been built up.

"We don't ask the exhibitor to do more than investigate our plan and look at our productions. We know that once he knows what we are doing he will be an eager customer."

Century Comedy Rights Sold

Julius Stern Sells Distributing Rights on Alice Howell Subjects to Longacre Distributing Company.

JULIUS STERN, president of Century Comedies, has closed a deal with the Longacre Distributing Company for the exclusive rights to handle Alice Howell's comedy features, under the Century brand, throughout the United States and Canada. The Longacre Distributing Company will operate from the Mecca Building, New York, and will immediately begin establishing branch distribution offices throughout the country.

While the deal becomes effective at once, active operations in distributing Century subjects will not begin until about the first of September. Meanwhile the plans for circulating the comedies will be perfected and the branches will be made ready for business. The Century features were established some few weeks ago with Alice Howell the star of every comedy.

"Balloonatics," "Automaniacs," "Neptune's Nuaghty Daughter" and "Alice of the Sawdust," all personally directed, produced and edited by J. G. Blystone, have been subjects thus far created. The only theater where Century features have been shown is the New York Strand, on exclusive pre-release under arrangement with Managing Director Harold Edel. Therefore the product will be initiated throughout the country when the Longacre Distributing Company begins operations.

GERSTEN BUYS FILMS FOR NORTHERN JERSEY.

Frank Gersten, a pioneer exhibitor, has launched into the state rights field with the purchase of two big features for Northern New Jersey. From his newly-opened exchange in the Times Building, New York, Mr. Gersten is now handling bookings for his territory of "Redemption," with Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, and George Loane Tucker's "I Believe."

Mr. Gersten announces that he is in the market to buy big features for Northern New Jersey. He is at present negotiating for a number of additional attractions, and he invites exhibitors to keep in touch with him. He states that he will confine his activities to the Northern New Jersey territory, and through intensive co-operation with exhibitors will endeavor to give them service plus.

ILLINOIS MAN BUYS THREE IVAN FILMS.

Frank Zambreno, who has spent the last two weeks in New York purchasing state rights for Illinois, concluded an agreement by which the Unity Photoplays Company becomes exclusive distributor in Illinois of the Ivan features "Her Surrender," "Two Men and a Woman," and the new Ivan super-feature, "Babbling Tongues."

Mr. Zambreno was especially impressed with "Babbling Tongues," the new Ivan super-feature, directed by William Humphrey. Mr. Zambreno stated that he contemplates exploiting this feature in a manner similar to the way other big features are exploited, and he proposes to give it an extended run at one of the best down town theaters of Chicago. Immediately upon consummating this deal Mr. Zambreno returned to Chicago.

THEIS BUYS "THE CRISIS" FOR EASTERN PA.

Theis Production Company, with headquarters in the Orpheum Theater Building, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., has purchased the Eastern Pennsylvania rights to William N. Selig's "The Crisis." The picture will be given a three weeks' run at the Garrick theater, Philadelphia, beginning August 13. An augmented orchestra and a chorus of thirty persons will be added attractions at this run. After the Garrick showing the picture will be put on tour throughout Eastern Pennsylvania.

PIEDMONT ABSORBS HAWK COMPANY.

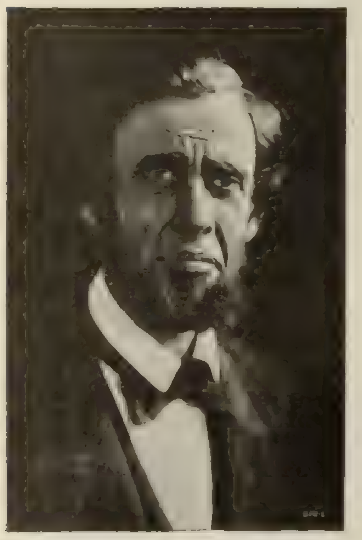
Piedmont Pictures Corporation has absorbed the Hawk Film Corporation and has moved from 1600 Broadway to new offices on the tenth floor of 727 Seventh avenue, New York. The activities of the company have been extensive during the past year. The corporation specializes in foreign business. The firm recently closed the "Jimmie Dale" serial for Spain, Portugal, India, Burma, Ceylon, Dutch East India and Porto Rico. The serial was produced by Monmouth and released in this country by Mutual. Piedmont also closed Fox films for Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

Lincoln Cycle for State Rights

Benjamin Chapin's Pictures Present Many Angles—Released Under the Master Title, "The Call to Arms."

THE problem of state-righting a picture is a difficult one, because most pictures are not fitted to many uses in many ways, but there is an occasional feature which allows an almost unlimited amount of repetition and use in many different ways, as well as in many different lengths. What is considered by many to be n ideal state rights proposition is the Benjamin Chapin Cycle of Lincoln Photoplays, going under the general title of "The Call to Arms."

Five years of Benjamin Chapin's life have been spent in perfecting the Lincoln Cycle, which is meeting much success at the Globe theater, New York. Though absolutely different from anything ever seen before by the New York public, it caught on immediately, and now if one has not seen the Lincoln Cycle they are considered behind the times. Through his years of struggle with the Lincoln subject—years of discouragement and universal advice of "quit undertaking the impossible," Mr. Chapin went on unswervingly in his desire to bring the Lincoln character to the twentieth century, as an inspiration and guide for the America of future generations. With no idea of personal glory, making a supreme sacrifice of his life and dedicating it to this one great picture, Chapin has at last seen the fruits of his unwavering devotion to the work by having his creation recognized as one of the motion picture's greatest contribution to the world of drama.



Benjamin Chapin.

Nothing before seen in motion pictures has the same kind of appeal, and the picture's emotional qualities are such that the Lincoln Cycle is of sure value in bringing home the realization that in this land of freedom nothing is impossible—that the poorest boy can rise to the greatest height; and, above all, the character of Lincoln is set as the one high standard of true Americanism.

"The Cycle" consists of four separate features under as many titles—"My Mother," "My Father," "Myself" and "The Call to Arms." Each of these pictures could be regarded as a separate story, yet as a whole, when they are combined in the one production, "The Call to Arms," the whole fits in together and carries the element of suspense throughout. The psychology of the audience has evidently been studied by Mr. Chapin, because they are carried through each emotional phase in a way that makes them ready for the next one—from tears at the touching scene of Nancy Hank's death they are carried to amusement at the mock trial where young Abe Lincoln won his first law case.

There are not only human touches in the picture—the picture is human and vital throughout. Not a moment while it is on the screen does the interest slow down—the intensity of the master character of President Lincoln rises to a splendid finish which is right in harmony with the times. As one critic declares, "It is a photoplay for every American, and every American should see it."

SOL LESSER HANDLING KING BEES IN WEST.

Sol. Lesser, of San Francisco, has acquired the local state rights of the King Bee Billy West Comedies. He expresses himself as delighted with the qualities of the productions which, he says, are among the funniest he has ever seen. Their money-making possibilities, in Mr. Lesser's opinion, are enormous, as the ability and popularity of the star, the excellence of the supporting company, and the cleverness of the acting and production have been well established by the releases so far available.

Sol L. Lesser has a two-fold purpose in making his next trip East, which will bring him to New York about August 1. Firstly, to attend the convention of the National Organization of state rights buyers, now being promoted by him, which will take place on August 7; secondly, to purchase feature productions independently for his All Star Features Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, Cal.

This develops the fact that Mr. Lesser's connection with the new enterprise in no way interferes with his intention to continue purchasing independently, as well as under the national organization.

Hall's Sales Show Active Market

Twenty-Three States Sold for "Bar Sinister"—Most of "Her Fighting Chance" Territory Also Closed.

WITH the purchase by M. H. Hoffman of a large block of territory for "The Bar Sinister," Frank Hall, who controls the world rights to Edgar Lewis' production, announces that twenty-three states have been disposed of. The closed territory includes New York, New England, New Jersey, and the Middle South, including Delaware, Virginia, Maryland and District of Columbia in the East; Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, California, Navada and Arizona are also among the states that have been taken. This leaves open Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico and Utah.

Rights to the Jane Grey production, "Her Fighting Chance," have also been disposed of rapidly, M. H. Hoffman again being prominent among the men who have acquired the rights to this picture. While negotiations are now pending for additional states, New England, New York, New Jersey, the Middle South and the Middle West have all been sold in a short time.

The rapidity with which territory for these two features is being bought, in spite of the Summer season is, according to Frank Hall, conclusive proof of the excellent condition of the market. "My experience while dealing with exchange men regarding the rights for 'The Bar Sinister' and 'Her Fighting Chance,' added to the daily reports coming into my office from my other enterprises, such as the Civilization Film Corp., booking special pictures in New Jersey, the Strand theater, Newark, the U. S. theater, Hoboken, the Criterion theater, Atlantic City, etc., lead me to believe we are entering upon an exceptionally prosperous season and I am laying my plans accordingly," said Mr. Hall. "The state rights exchanges are justified in preparing for a banner year and producers with special pictures of real merit are having no trouble disposing of them at a legitimate profit."

L. S. TOBIAS TO RETURN TO CONNECTICUT.

After an absence of one year, L. S. Tobias, former manager of Mutual's exchange in New Haven, Conn., will return to that city, this time as owner and manager of his own exchange. Mr. Tobias has taken over the lease on the premises just vacated by Mutual and will open elaborate offices for the purpose of exploiting state rights pictures for the state of Connecticut exclusively.

Mr. Tobias previously spent three years in the territory and not only knows personally every exhibitor up there, but is extremely well liked for his fairness in business. Already Mr. Tobias has arranged with Educational Films Corporation of America to handle their Ditmars subjects in Connecticut, and several other firms are negotiating with him to handle their goods. Formerly all state rights pictures were handled from Boston, but owing to their enormous territory Connecticut suffered not only neglect, but loss of business and money for the exchange. With this new arrangement Mr. Tobias affords state rights buyers thorough repesentation on their releases in the State of Connecticut. The offices will be located at 130 Meadow street, New Haven, Conn. Mr. Tobias left for Boston this week to complete arrangements with the exchanges there.

MUTT AND JEFF CARTOONS AT STRAND.

Starting with the first of Bud Fisher's new Mutt and Jeff series, "The Submarine Chaser," these pictures will be shown at the Strand theater, in New York, every day during the coming year. These are the first pictures to be released under the direct supervision of Bud Fisher and territories are selling fast, with the probability that the entire country will be sold before the second of the series is released, for all territories are at least being negotiated for where they have not been sold.

One of the first big territories to be sold was the entire South, which was purchased during the past week by William Oldknow, of Atlanta, Georgia, who is the general manager of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company. The territory he has contracted for includes North and South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Texas, Southern New Mexico and Eastern Arizona. The Regal Films, Limited, of Montreal, have purchased the rights for Canada, while the rights of Mexico have been bought by the Tavares-Kalb Company.

EASTERN STUDIOS FOR MOTOY COMEDIES.

With the return to New York from Chicago of H. C. Allen, president of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, the announcement is made that Motoy Comedies have been taken over by the Peter Pan Film Corporation, which company will move the studio from Chicago to New York, where the comedies will be made in the future.

The publicity and distribution plans which President Allen has in mind will no doubt place Motoy Comedies at the very top of popularity and create a demand for them all over the country. This will be brought about through an arrangement with the editors of various newspapers, who will benefit through the advertising campaign by a plan which is said to be entirely new to the industry.

Showing of "Persuasive Peggy" Soon

State Rights Buyers, Exhibitors and Peggy Hyland's Admirers Write Daily About Mayfair Production.

EVER since M. A. Schlesinger announced his first Mayfair production, "Persuasive Peggy," with dainty Peggy Hyland as the star, the trade has anxiously awaited the trade showing of this picture. Letters by the score have come to Mr. Schlesinger, president of the corporation, from exhibitors and state rights buyers all over the country, asking about the story under way and making sure that their name would not be overlooked when the invitations for the trade showing were issued. Within the next week or so Mr. Schlesinger plans to announce the date and place of this showing.

"Persuasive Peggy" is now completed and the arrangements for the showing well under way. The waiting experienced by the state rights buyers and exhibitors will be well repaid, it is reported, for every detail of the production has received the greatest attention and nothing has suffered through the haste sometimes prevalent in motion picture studios.

Scene from "Persuasive Peggy" (Mayfair)

Maravene Thompson, author and co-scenario writer of the charming story which ran serially in magazine form before being published as a book, has invited many fellow-authors to be present, and although the names of these literary luminaries have not yet been announced, the gathering promises to be a stellar one in every way.

Miss Hyland not only plays the title role in this—her first Mayfair production but as well has given her undivided attention from the day she signed her contract with the corporation. Time and time again she was able to suggest some human touch which, through letters from her admirers, she knows will please. This correspondence, also, has proven just how anxiously the public is awaiting the release of "Persuasive Peggy," for every mail brings inquiries.

NEW "MUTT AND JEFF" SERIES READY.

The first of a new series of "Mutt and Jeff" Animated Cartoons was released on Monday, July 9, and there will be a new one each week hereafter. Bud Fisher, the creator of these characters, ceased releasing them about three months ago in order to accumulate a reserve supply, thus affording him an opportunity to improve the animation and the humor as well as the quality and finish.

CUMMINS CLOSES JAPANESE DEAL.

Samuel Cummins, of 1476 Broadway, New York, has sold for Hiller & Wilk the rights to Japan for "Defense or Tribute." The purchaser was Kisaburo Kabayashi, of Tokio, Japan. Mr. Cummins has been specializing recently in the foreign field and has met with considerable success. He has also made several domestic sales recently.

ADS PREPARED FOR "GARDEN OF ALLAH."

The Selig company has prepared a complete line of advertising material to accompany "The Garden of Allah." There is a complete line of one, three, eight and twenty-sheet posters, press sheets, ad cut sheets, special folders, sliders in colors, heralds, lobby display cards and photographs, portraits and scenic cuts, lobby display frames and pictures in colors, etc.

"REDEMPTION" TO RUN IN LOEW THEATERS.

Contracts have been signed for the showing of "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, in all the Loew theaters; also the Proctor houses. Coincident with this announcement comes the further information that but little territory is open for the picture, which was produced by Julius Steger and John A. Golden.

Export and Import Gets More Films

Several New Productions—Two With Lyda Borelli—Received From Abroad by Ben Blumenthal.

PLANS that have been held in abeyance for some time owing to the uncertainty of steamship sailings are now ready for market introduction by Ben Blumenthal, head of the Export and Import Company, which is exploiting "Robespierre" and "Ivan the Terrible" in American territory. Last week a steamer brought several negatives in, among them being three of seven-reel productions founded on famous literary works. Lyda Borelli, the international star, plays remarkable roles in two of them, and Mr. Blumenthal has at once set to work preparing them for the market.

Among the new attractions to which the concern has acquired the rights is a six-reel drama with Lyda Borelli, entitled "From the Great Beyond." This is founded on the novel "Malombra," by Antonio Fogazzaro. It is built on psychic lines, and Lyda Borelli plays the role of a girl with two souls. On the arrival of the print it was placed in work for titling, but the subject of metempsychosis stumped the would-be titlers completely. Other channels were tried out; finally the services of Leon J. Rubinstein were contracted for. He interpolated a set of titles which reduce the scientific elements of the picture to the easy understanding of the layman.

Mr. Blumenthal has been holding a series of conferences with state rights buyers relative to "Robespierre" and "Ivan the Terrible," and it has practically been decided that both are to go into a Broadway theater for a run. It will soon be announced that they will open the season at first class houses which have never before offered a film attraction. The purpose of this is that both "Robespierre" and "Ivan the Terrible" will be given a run for profit, instead of the common practice of using the metropolitan engagement, at a loss, to inflate the value of territorial rights. Mr. Blumenthal proposes to put both over for a successful run, and the first two weeks will decide about similar engagements in other cities.

CHICAGO LIKES "THE DEEMSTER."

W. J. (Billy) Dunn, contracting manager for Warren & Clarke, the big out-door showmen who bought the rights to "The Deemster" for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, has signed contracts with Lublinger & Trinz and Alfred Hamberger, the two big Cook County circuits, and "The Deemster" is now literally sweeping Chicago. Ten prints are working daily in the Windy City.

John B. Warren, senior member of the firm, reports astonishing results with this, his first venture in the state rights field, and announces his willingness to buy other big features. His organization is equipped to handle the biggest attractions on the market.

"BABBLING TONGUES" (Ivan).

Ivan Film Productions announces the release at an early date of "Babbling Tongues," with James Morrison, Grace Valentine and Arthur Donaldson in the leading parts. This feature is to be released as the second Super-feature on the program of the Ivan. William Humphrey, who directed the production, also furnished the story and scenario in conjunction with George Edwards Hall. The exceptional cast of players has been selected because of the players' particular qualifications for their roles. Paul Capellani, Gladden James, Louise Beaudet and Carolyn Birch are other members of the stellar cast.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Paramount "Star Series" Subjects

Subjects Featuring Sessue Hayakawa, Vivian Martin and Louise Huff Are Announced.

The first production in which Sessue Hayakawa, celebrtaed Japanese actor, will star under the new Paramount "Star Series" selective booking system of release, an adaptation of Wallace Irwin's popular Japanese school boy stories, has been chosen under the title of "Hashimura Togo." The adaptation was prepared for the screen by Marian Fairfax. William C. De Mille directed the production. The cast which has been selected in support of Mr. Hayakawa includes Margaret Loomis, Tom Forman, Raymond Hatton, Walter Long, Ernest Joy, Mabel Van Buren and Florence Vidor.

"Little Miss Optimist," which was written especially for Vivian Martin by Gardner Hunting, and was prepared for the screen by the author, will be Miss Martin's first production under the new Paramount "Star Series." Robert Thornby was in charge of the staging of the picture, which will be released late in August. In the cast which supports Miss Martin are Tom Moore, Charles West, Ernest Joy and Helen Bray, who have appeared in previous releases of Paramount Pictures.

"The Varmint," an adaptation of Owen Johnson's famous Lawrenceville stories of the same name by Gardner Hunting, will be the first production in which Jack Pickford and Louise Huff will appear under Paramount's new "Star Series." Theodore Roberts appears in the important role of "the Roman." The production was staged at the Morosco studio under the direction of William H. Taylor. Jack Pickford is, of course, John Humperdink Stover, the effervescent and extremely "fresh" young man whose remarkable activities at the Lawrenceville school earned him the uncomplimentary name of the Varmint.

Edward Walton and Maggie Breyer, who will be seen in a forthcoming Triangle play now in production at the Yonkers studio under the supervision of Allan Dwan, are both "old-timers" whose character parts have made them famous on Broadway.

"OUR BOYS" (Essanay).

Here's a short picture especially constructed for a children's program. It is a Black Cat feature and presents little Ellis Paul, six years old, in the leading role. Nearly 100 other children make up the supporting cast. The story takes you back to grade school days, and unfolds a schoolroom romance. It will bring back memories of happy childhood hours to grown-ups. There is a strong patriotic vein, also, in which the children are depicted "doing their bit" for their country. The acting is splendid and the whole excellently staged and photographed. "Our Boys" has a screen time, approximately, of 27 minutes. The General Film is handling the releases.

"DOUBLE STANDARD" WRITTEN BY BRAND WHITLOCK.

Brand Whitlock wrote the story entitled "The Double Standard," which will be released by Universal on July 23, under the Butterfly brand. A strong cast, headed by Roy Stewart and Joseph Girard, adds effective characterization to a plot that drives home a powerful social message.

The famous American minister to Belgium tells the story of the test that comes to a newly-elected city judge, who has promised to administer the law without fear or favor. He is especially interested in the regulations affecting the dives and cabarets of the city. His wife's two brothers—one a prominent editor and the other a bishop—have both worked hard to elect John Fairbrother to office. They cannot understand the young judge's intense interest in these unusually tabooed questions. Still, both agree to stand behind him.

Scene from "The Double Standard" (Butterfly).

The occasion rises sooner than any of them had expected. On the following day, when Fairbrother takes his seat on the bench for the first time, two young women, taken in a raid on Johnson's cafe, a local resort of unsavory repute, are brought before him for sentence. The judge demands to know the names of the men who were in the company of the girls at the time of their arrest. He is shocked to discover that one is the son of the editor, while the other is the nephew of the bishop. He demands that the men shall be obliged to stand trial with the girls. This causes much consternation, but the judge finds a way to smooth out the dilemma and at the same time points out a fairer method of solving the "double standard." Phillips Smalley has produced the story with his customary skill.

CONCERNING O. HENRY STORIES.

With the steady production of O. Henry photoplays, the first comprehensive endeavor to film this great American short story writer's works, is reaching the completion of its first stage. Four releases are just now being filmed for distribution by General Film in August, which will complete twenty subjects of two-reel length as the first series of O. Henry picurizations.

At the studio in Brooklyn two directors are now at work on the last four subjects of the two-reel series, the subjects being "The Coming Out of Maggie," "The Venturers," "The Best Seller" and "The Lonesome Road." Thos. R. Mills, who has directed most of the O. Henry releases, is being relieved by Martin Justice, whose work is just now being seen in "A Departmental Case" and "Little Specks in Garnered Fruit." Mr. Mills, it is expected, will hasten to the coast to do some of the O. Henry stories that are laid in Western surroundings.

Origin of "Stingaree"

Australian Believes Author Hornung Was Inspired By Famous Kelly Gang of Bushrangers.

THERE'S no doubt in my mind that Hornung, the author of Stingaree, the Australian bushranger, was inspired by the famous Kelly gang," declared Frank Boyd of Melbourne, in commenting on the series to a Kalem official. Mr. Boyd, who is financially interested in Australian gold mines, saw an episode of "Stingaree" at a New York theater and, having but a short stay in this country, he called at the Kalem office, where several episodes as yet unreleased were run for him.

"It is not likely that you know the Kelly gang as well as we do," continued Mr. Boyd. "They were the most famous outlaws in all the bushranger-infested country. Their operations took place in Victoria, largely in the Strathbogie ranges, and today there is a large tract in that section known as the 'Kelly Country.'

"These men were not blood-thirsty bandits. In fact, many of them were as gallant as your Stingaree. The leaders were Dan and Ned Kelly, brothers, ably assisted by John Byrne and Steve Hart. Their first lawless act was 'cattle duffing'—the Australian for misbranding. Cattle owners, however, did not regard the offense as seriously as did your early Westerners who hung rustlers. In this case they called the mounted police, who sent an officer named Fitzpatrick to break up the gang. When Fitzpatrick tried to arrest Dan Kelly, Ned Kelly appeared and in a fit of anger shot the trooper in the wrist. This headstrong act started a feud between the troopers and the Kelly gang. Then the Kelly men became fugitives; with a price on their heads—just as you have pictured Stingaree and Howie.

"It is a well-known fact," continued Mr. Boyd, "that the Kelly brothers were unusually chivalrous. Frequently they aided the woman in distress and they were continually suppressing their men who would take unfair advantage of defenseless station keepers (ranchmen) and travelers.

"No doubt Mr. Hornung, who created Raffles and Stingaree, heard many tales of the Kellys' adventures when he was in Australia, and spun his romances from these incidents, for the Kellys were types entirely different from the vicious Morgan, the lone bandit of Victoria, and the Ben Hall and Gardner gangs of bushrangers in New South Wales."

Mr. Boyd, who was raised on an Australian ranch and later became a prospector, has traveled extensively over his native country. He was particularly interested in the second episode of Stingaree, "The Jackeroo," which led him to call on Kalem.

"I knew the jackeroo type well in my early days," he remarked. "The jackeroo is similar to your American tenderfoot. Usually he was a foppish, irresponsible young fellow, pensioned off by a wealthy father in England, and at our station the hands were not lacking new pranks to play upon the newcomer."

Mr. Boyd, who is en route to London, having traveled across the United States, is an ardent picture fan, and is one of Melbourne's "first nighters" when American theatrical productions come to his city.

UNUSUAL EVENTS IN LATEST ANIMATED WEEKLY

Several topics of unusual news and pictorial effect are covered in the 80th issue of the Universal Animated Weekly, which has recently doubled its circulation among first-run exhibitors.

One of the most striking scenes shows the recent elevated railway wreck in Brooklyn in which twenty-nine people were injured, while forty more miraculously escaped. The camera-reporter of the Animated Weekly happened to be near at hand when the accident occurred, and succeeded in getting a picture of one of the cars falling to the street.

A series of remarkable views taken at an American Aviation Camp shows one of our new scout aeroplanes in action. This is the smallest and fastest air-motor that has yet been made. It is shown rising from the ground with a start of less than fifty yards, and is then followed through various fighting tactics by the Universal cameraman who made his pictures from an accompanying machine. The captions explaining the work of this latest of Uncle Sam's "speed eagles" are clear-cut and packed with patriotic ginger.

Scenes incident to the reopening of Minneapolis as a commercial deep water port are also worthy of mention. These show the arrival of the U. S. S. Dandelion at the city wharves, which have just been cleared for traffic with New Orleans after a period of fifty years.

SELZNICK HAS CLEVER TRAILER.

Lewis J. Selznick has just adopted a new idea for advertising his productions. It is in the form of a film, distributed free to exhibitors playing Selznick-Pictures, and the series, the first of which has just been sent out to the Selznick exchanges, is called "Little Journeys to Selznick Pictures Studios."

This novelty is a unique elaboration of the "trailer," which has come into use extensively of late. Instead of merely flashing a few scenes, to stimulate curiosity in a coming production, the Little Journeys show the pictures being made, the director, personal glimpses of stars, and other little touches of studio life.

QUAINT ISLANDS PICTURED IN GAUMONT'S "TOURS" NO. 39.

Give us "something different" is always the cry of the motion picture spectator. At times the exhibitor is in despair, not knowing how he is to gratify this insatiate demand. It is here that Gaumont single-reels come to the rescue. They are edited with the one idea of giving always "something diffrent" and "something interesting." Take, for example, Gaumont's "Tours Around the World" No. 39, the current issue. It has three highly entertaining subjects, pictures of places that have been practically little more than names to the American people. Yet the curiosity to know these places is pleasurably aroused the minute the names are flashed upon the screen. It is this ability to arouse and hold pleasurable interest that makes these Gaumont pictures so valuable.

Scene from "Gaumont Tours 39."

The pictures in "Tours" No. 39 are of Marken, an island in the Zuider Zee; Majorca, a Spanish island of the Mediterranean, and La Grande Chartreuse, where for centuries the celebrated liqueur was made. These European places have other customs, other scenery, and other peoples than our own, and upon the screen they prove just the bright spots that exhibitors often need to rescue their programs from dullness. Exhibitors can count upon Gaumont pictures always giving their patrons what they want. They bear repetition, and as those who see them are their best advertisers, it is always well to run a Gaumont single-reel more than one day.

TRIANGLE EXTENDS STUDIOS.

The Triangle Film Corporation has purchased sixteen acres adjoining its plant at Culver City, California, for the purpose of making improvements that will more than double the producing capacity of the studio. Also there have been made additions to the playing force, new directors, performers and cameramen.

According to announcements extensive building operations are planned, and it is reported that Triangle, within a year, will have centered all of its Western activities at the suburb of Los Angeles. The present Culver City plant comprises eleven acres. It contains seven great concrete and glass stages, a property building filled with $200,000 worth of furniture and other properties; film factory, planing mill and carpenter shop, wardrobe building, administration building and miscellaneous structures valued at more than $3,000,000, not to mention the 1,800-acre ranch at Hartville, which is used for exterior location work and "Western" productions.

With similar improvements erected upon the recently-purchased sixteen acres ample accommodations will be provided for more than one hundred companies. The capacity of the present Triangle plant is fifty companies, and the factory can produce 50,000 feet of film daily.

PREPARING SEPTEMBER L-KO'S.

General Director J. G. Blystone, of L-Ko Comedies, is finishing a group of comedies for release through Universal exchanges on the program of comedies directed by Dick Smith, Vin Moore and Noel Smith for September circulation. Each of these directors has turned a subject back to Mr. Blystone to be edited and finally approved for release.

"From Ranch to Riches" has been completed by Vin Moore, with Myrtle Sterling, Kathleen Emerson and Al Forbes leading the merriment. "The Prop's Revenge" is a theater comedy, depicting the revenge of the property man, who sets out to make life miserable for Gladys Varden, Walter Stevens and Harry Griffith. Nol Smith directed this one. "Street Cars and Carbuncles" is a Dick Smith release, featuring Bob McKenzie, Eva Novak, Chester Ryckman and Eddie Barry. The August L-Ko's have already been announced.

Mary Fuller in Universal's Latest Schedule

Appears With Herbert Rawlinson in "The Beautiful Impostor"—Stirring Drama and Sparkling Comedy Enliven Features on Big "U" List.

IN ADDITION to "The Double Standard," a Butterfly picture released July 23, Universal will issue eighteen reels of combined drama, comedy and current events, including the latest episode of "The Gray Ghost," the new mystery serial.

Tuesday, July 24, "A Soldier of the Legion," a Gold Seal thriller with an interesting comedy setting will be released. The story was written by Maude Springer Nelson and F. J. Clawson, and directed by Ruth Ann Baldwin. The dire necessity of two seekers after literary fame gives them the idea of putting Celeste, the maid of all work about their lodgings, into a work of fiction designed to bring princely royalties. Algiers is chosen as an appropriate setting, and Celeste is transformed forthwith into a houri of the desert. One of the authors impersonates the hero, his pal does the heavy part, while Jones, a cross-grained neighbor, is pressed into service as an orderly of the type of Kipling's Mulvaney. The result is a rapid-fire tale of hair-breadth escapes, which reaches a more surprising conclusion than the authors had intended. On the same date, "Seeing Things," a Nestor comedy, written by Fred Palmer and directed by Roy Clements, will be released, featuring Lee Moran and Edith Roberts. Taking a presumably haunted house as a setting, a diverting tale has been worked out to the accompaniment of many laughs.

"The Sign of the Cucumber," an L-KO in two reels, is the offering for Wednesday, July 25. Directed by Dick Smith and supervised by J. G. Blystone, this jumble of mistaken identities features the misadventures of a desperate safe-cracker who descends upon a peaceful hamlet to acquire the local bank funds. He also acquires a "double," who causes him much inconvenience at the hands of the law until a way out of his troubles—and incidentally out of the county jail—is discovered. Tom Delmar, Bob McKenzie and Eva Novak succeed in extracting every bit of humor out of their respective roles. The 82nd issue of the Animated Weekly will also be released on the same date, showing the latest current events in pictorial form.

Mary Fuller will be starred in "The Beautiful Impostor," released Thursday, July 26. Written by Catherine Carr and directed by Lucius Henderson, this tabloid drama has much of the unexpected human quality about it that would have pleased O. Henry. Miss Fuller takes the part of Isaabel Whitlock, a young woman of brains and beauty, who is threatened with the loss of her ancestral home unless she is able to provide the necessary cash to carry her case through court. Leaving the country, she comes to the city and, after various disheartening experiences, obtains work as a mannequin in a fashionable dressmaking establishment. Here she seems to have landed in a hopeless rut, until circumstances offer her the chance to impersonate a noted French actress at the home of a social "climber." This incident leads to complications that threaten to end badly for Isabel, but her common sense comes to her rescue in time, and a happy denouement is worked out. Mary Fuller has never appeared to better advantage than in this colorful transcript from life. She is capably supported by Clara Beyers, Nellie Slattery and John Walker.

A Joker Comedy, entitled "Canning the Cannibal King," and featuring William Franey, will be shown on the same date with the Mary Fuller feature. Charles J. Wilson, Jr., and C. B. Hoadley wrote the script of this hilarious commentary on the social life of the South Sea Islands, while W. W. Beaudine is credited with the direction. Lillian Peacock, Za Su Pitts and Milburn Moranti assist William Franey in extracting all the humor out of the strange domestic situation in which they feature.

Herbert Rawlinson and Neva Gerber are the featured players in "Caught In the Act," a Victor comedy-drama, scheduled for release Friday, July 27. The story was written by Eugene B. Lewis and directed by T. N. Heffron. It deals with the troubles that follow in the wake of a night of thoughtless carousal participated in by Tom Worth and his pals. Coming to himself the day after, the young man is informed that he has made a wreck of his life, as well as compromising his friends. His memory of the immediate past being a blank, poor Tom dreads the hour when he will be called to account. It eventually develops that he is mistaken by the police for a well-known criminal, but the reason of his friends' rebuke is kept a secret until the closing scenes.

A unique issue of the Universal Screen Magazine will be released on the same date with "Caught In the Act." This deals with a variety of subjects, including pictures of the only tea farm in the United States and a recent effort to reduce the cost of footwear by utilizing snake skins in the manufacture of shoes.

On Saturday, July 28, the 11th number of Universal Current Events will be released, together with a Powers Educational and a Powers Comedy Cartoon. "The Soubrette," a Joker Comedy, featuring Gale Henry and Milton Sims, completes the week's offerings.

Outside of Greater New York the fifth episode of "The Gray Ghost," the mystery serial based upon Arthur Somers Roche's Saturday Evening Post novel, "Loot," will be shown during the week. This episode is entitled "Plunder," and features Eddie Polo, Harry Carater, Priscilla Dean and Emory Johnson.

New Metro Wonderplay

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne Have Begun Work on "The Compact," a Seven-Reel Feature.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne have begun work on a new seven-reel Metro wonderplay de luxe, under the direction of Edwin Carewe, assisted by Harry Franklin. As is the case in all Metro productions de luxe, this wonderplay will be made under the general supervision of Maxwell Karger. The photoplay is Albert Shelby LeVino's adaption of Charles A. Logue's original story, "The Compact."

Francis X. Bushman has the part of James VanDyke Moore, with a page in the blue book of New York, but of a type totally unlike the popular conception of a New York society man, for Moore can fight, he can shoot, and he is every inch a type of man that has made the West what it is today. The scene of the story is laid in Red Gulch, Arizona, where the silver mines are located.

Beverly Bayne, who co-stars with Mr. Bushman, finds in the role of Beverly Anderson an opportunity that she has never had in any of her previous screen appearances.

In support of these stars there will be a specially selected company headed by Harry S. Northrup, who will play the part of "Ace High" Horton. The majority of the scenes are taken in the open, for "The Compact" is a big open-air story in which the popular co-stars will be seen in roles that will not only hold their old admirers, but will win for them many new ones.

"ONE TOUCH OF NATURE" (K-E-S-E).

John Drew Bennett, godson of the famous actor, John Drew, is featured in "One Touch of Nature," an Edison production scheduled for release through George Kleine's K-E-S-E organization July 30.

Mr. Bennett is of Yale '08, and aside from being a splendid actor is noted as a baseball player and all-around athlete. He possesses many of the traits and has many of the characteristics of his illustrious godfather.

Manager John McGraw of the Giants is in the cast supporting Mr. Bennett in "One Touch of Nature," and has quite a prominent part in this forthcoming photoplay. Any time Mr. McGraw gets tired of managing the New York Giants he can always find work as a film actor, judging by his success in "One Touch of Nature."

Violet Cain has the opposite leading part to Mr. Bennett. She will be best remembered as having scored successfully in "Daddy Long Legs," in portraying Youth in "Every Woman" and acting the role of Dora in "The Marriage Market," and also Lucy in "The Girl of My Dream."

Peter B. Kyne wrote "One Touch of Nature" for the Saturday Evening Post, and it created more than ordinary interest. There is a very pretty romance interwoven with a story having to do with national sports. It will appeal to both sexes, it is said, and it is predicted that it will find immediate favor with exhibitors.

The star, John Drew Bennett, will be remembered by motion picture theater patrons as having played opposite Lillian Walker in "The Blue Envelope Mystery."

LOU MARKS IN SLAPSTICK SERIES.

Lou Marks, recognized in the profession as one of the foremost acrobatic slapstick comedians, who formerly saw service under many of Mack Sennett's Keystone directors and who achieved fame in that company's laugh provokers, is to be starred by the lately formed Commonwealth Company in a series of original slapstick comedies to be directed by Frank P. Donovan, who brought comedian Marks here from the West.

The first offering is entitled "His Watery Waterloo," written by Frank P. Donovan, and has a cast of over thirty people. The story is laid around a seashore resort and the opportunities for trick photography and real funny situations are numerous. The comedies have been contracted for by one of the standard programs, with the first release scheduled for the middle of July.

"SPARKLE" COMEDIES FOR MASTBAUM.

General Film won quite a significant little victory in Philadelphia the other day, when out of eight comedies viewed by the Stanley V. Mastbaum board of critics, its "Where's My Nightie?" one-reel comedy was elected for booking. This is the first of the new series of comedies being distributed by General, the Sparkle brand produced by the Jaxon Film Corporation. "Where's My Nightie?" made an instantaneous impression and was booked solidly for three days at the Stanley theater by Mastbaum.

TWO NEW RAY COMEDIES.

The Johnny and Emma Ray comedies are continuing steadily in production. Two new ones are now being listed by General Film in addition to its first group of six, they being "A Laundry Mix-Up" and "A Peaceful Flat." In one Johnny Ray affects the disguise of a Chinaman for laughing purposes and in the other he goes abroad as a mincing miss.

Paramount Ready for Big "Star Series" Drive

Adolph Zukor Declares His Organization Has Now Reached Point Where It Is Ready to Begin Work.

WITH the approach of August 5 and the inauguration of the new distributing system for Famous Players-Lasky productions, which goes into effect upon that day, interest centers on the plans which are being formulated and developed by Adolph Zukor and his organization.

Realizing the big value of organization, Mr. Zukor, in preparing for this new arrangement, has surrounded himself with high-calibre men in every department. As a nucleus for the newer organization he has added to the existing organization the creative genius of David W. Griffith, the organization and personal talent of Thomas H. Ince, and Mack Sennett, creator of the celebrated Keystone comedies.

The other noted directors active in the studios are J. Searle Dawley, Frank Reicher, Robert Vignola, Joseph Kaufman, Maurice Tourneur, George Melford, William C. DeMille, William H. Taylor, Donald Crisp and Marshall Neilan.

"With the coming of August 5 we are going to embark upon a new era of production and distribution which will be unparalleled in screen history," declared Mr. Zukor, in commenting upon the vast organization which he has been gradually assembling about himself. "We are coming into closer contact with the exhibitor than we have ever been, even in the past, and we are working in closer sympathy with him than before. By this I mean that we are capitalizing the knowledge of the needs of the exhibitor which we have been accumulating. We are going to place before him, in the form of our 'star series' selective booking plans of distribution, the system which has been tried and proved to be most beneficial to the exhibitor and one which he himself realizes to be the solution of his problems, because it enables him to choose from our great stellar array only the stars who are most popular among his own patrons.

"But we do not for a moment get the idea that we are through growing just because we have reached our present proportions. We are not through by any means. As a matter of fact we have been simply building up our organization and have got it to a point where we are now ready to begin real work. Everything that has gone before has been in the nature of preparation. With August 5 we start our real drive, a drive that is intended to put new life into this vast motion picture business and to raise to a far higher plane than that which has been attained hitherto the standards of screen production and presentation."

"THE STREETS OF ILLUSION" (Pathe).

The insistent demand of exhibitors for pictures starring Gladys Hulette has resulted in the release by Pathe of "The Cigarette Girl" on July 8 and the announcement that "The Last of the Carnabys" will be released July 22 and "The Streets of Illusion" August 12.

"The Streets of Illusion" is a delightful, original story by Philip Bartholomae, the noted playwright, whose first Pathe Gold Rooster play, "The Cigarette Girl," was enthusiastically greeted.

Like all of Gladys Hulette's Pathe-Astra features, "The Streets of Illusion" was directed by William Parke. A feature of the production is the splendid cast, which includes, in addition to Gladys Hulette, William Parke, Jr., J. H. Gilmour, Richard Barthelmess, who has made a hit as Marguerite Clark's leading man in several of her most successful pictures, Doris Grey, Kathryn Adams and the wonderful child actor, Gerald Badgley.

The picture tells the story of a little girl to whom the world was a beautiful place, who saw only the silver lining of the dark clouds, for she lived in the streets of illusion. It is filled with human interest, comedy touches and highly dramatic moments.

THE WEEK'S WORK IN FOX STUDIOS.

Dustin Farnum is now busily at work on his fourth subject for the William Fox productions. "The Spy," by George Bronson Howard, has been selected as the story. Winifred Kingston is leading woman. The cast includes William Burress, Charles Clary, Howard Gaye and William E. Lowry. Richard Stanton is directing.

Mr. Fox announces that Dustin Farnum's four pictures—"The Scarlet Pimpernel," "Durand of the Bad Lands," "North of Fifty-three" and "The Spy" will be released this fall.

Another new Fox kiddie feature was begun last week, under the direction of C. M. and S. A. Franklin. This film has an Arabian theme, and already hundreds of carpenters are at work on the grounds of the big Fox plant in Hollywood, Cal., erecting gigantic interior and exterior settings for the production.

From the Foxfilm comedy department comes the announcement that Willard Louis, the well-known heavyweight of a dozen or more features, will work under the direction of Charles Parrott in comedies henceforth.

Winifred Westover is also an addition to the players in the Sunshine comedies which Harry Lehrman makes. Miss Westover was born in San Francisco and has spent almost all of her life in California.

Triangle Completes Kiddie Feature

Thelma Salter Starred in Fantastic Fairyland Play, "In Slumberland."

A SPECTACULAR kiddie feature, "In Slumberland," which is said to surpass in elaborate development of scenic and lighting effects any picture ever produced by Triangle, has been completed for release the last week of this month. Thelma Salter, the seven-year-old actress, is presented as the star of this production. She is supported by Georgie Stone, who will be remembered as the leader of the Triangle kiddies in several Fine Arts plays. Several hundred children and a large company of professional dancers appear as elves, fairies and gnomes in the fairyland scenes, for which fantastic sets, representing crystal grottoes, huge toadstools and glittering fairy palaces were devised by Director Irvin Willat, who has also originated some new lighting arrangements to provide the ethereal atmosphere desired for those scenes in which Thelma enters the land of dreams.

Scene from "In Slumberland" (Triangle).

Virtually every animal species of Noah's ark is represented in this picture. A snail has one of the most important parts, that of steed for the fairy queen, Gloria Hope. A miniature stage setting was constructed for the episode in which the queen mounts the back of the shell-backed animal. This incident is only one of the photographic feats employed to translate fairyland to pictures.

While the story has a particular appeal for children, it is said to have an equal interest for adults because of its human interest, its beauty of scenic investiture and the acting of child players. The plot centers about the adventures of the young heroine and her infant brother in a dream trip through fairyland. A number of adults have prominent roles in the prologue and epilogue. Among the number are Laura Sears, Jack Livingston, Walter Perry and J. P. Lockney. L. V. Jefferson, the author of the story, claims the distinction of having sold the largest number of scenarios of any writer in the profession.

GOLDWYN SIGNS BIG BILLPOSTING CONTRACT.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has signed contracts for a nation-wide billboard campaign to be made during the summer and fall months throughout the United States and Canada.

The extent of this campaign to back up the local exhibitors of Goldwyn pictures and to focus attention upon Goldwyn stars will be understood better by stating that extensive postings will be made in every town and city of 5,000 population or more.

A remarkable twenty-four sheet, pronounced to be one of the most distinctive pieces of paper ever designed and executed by a lithographer, will be the first piece of Goldwyn paper. There will be a monthly change of copy with other equally distinctive papers to follow.

The first Goldwyn poster is the work of a distinguished group of painters. It is of a type that will become a noteworthy decorative attraction. The posting contract calls for an expenditure in excess of $100,000. The posters will carry artistic likenesses of stars. Goldwyn has yet another advertising phase of nation-wide scope that soon will be exploited.

AMERICAN TROOPS REACH FRENCH FRONT.

The swiftness of preparations by American soldiers is almost as surprising to Americans as it is staggering to Germany. The Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 133, the current issue, shows a regiment of Americans reaching the French front. That there they are close to the first-line trenches is evident from the care with which they are seen testing their gas masks. A cheer will go up every time these pictures are shown, doubling in intensity as the Stars and Stripes are hoisted beside the Tri-Color of France.

Triangle Announces Coming Productions

Outlines Program for July and August—"Sudden Jim" Coming on July 22.

THE month of July has been one of the most notable in the history of Triangle, according to an official of the company. He points to "The Flame of the Yukon," produced under the direction of Charles Miller from an original story by Monte M. Katterjohn, as an example.

"Sudden Jim," not only one of the most widely read stories of the day, but also one of the most convincing pictures of American life, will be released on July 22. It illustrates the company policy to maintain a balance of star, story and production. It was produced by Victor L. Schertzinger. Charles Ray, who has appeared in all of the plays directed by Schertzinger, heads the cast.

"The Sawdust Ring," a story of circus life by L. V. Jefferson, has just been passed on by the executive board. Bessie Love in this picture is said to prove a revelation.

"In Slumberland," a kiddie feature starring Thelma Salter, will be released July 29. Director Irvin Willatt staged the play with elaborate scenic effects.

The stars on the Triangle program for August include Olive Thomas, Louise Glaum, Bessie Barriscale, Bessie Love, William Desmond, Enid Bennett, Wilfred Lucas, Elda Millar, Jack Devereaux and Veta Searl.

The features for the week of August 5 are "The Food Gamblers," a drama that drives home some pertinent truths of present day conditions. It was produced under the supervision of Allan Dwan, with Wilfred Lucas and Elda Millar in the leading roles. Olive Thomas, star of "Madcap Madge," is featured in "An Even Break," written and directed by Lambert Hillyer. It is a comedy-drama. Magnificent settings, depicting Broadway roof gardens and cafes, and a company of more than four hundred people were employed in the production.

Louise Glaum in a distinctly new type of part will appear on August 12 in "Golden Rule Kate," produced under the direction of Reginald Barker. William Desmond in "Master of His Home," directed by Walter Edwards, shares honors with Miss Glaum on the week's program. Alma Rueben appears in his support.

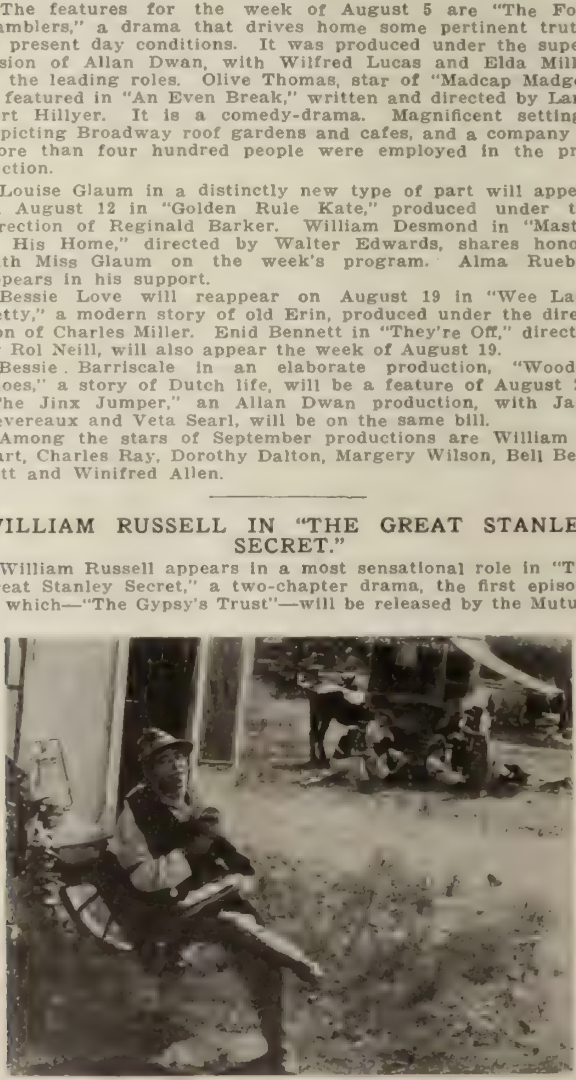
Bessie Love will reappear on August 19 in "Wee Lady Betty," a modern story of old Erin, produced under the direction of Charles Miller. Enid Bennett in "They're Off," directed by Rol Neill, will also appear the week of August 19.

Bessie Barriscale in an elaborate production, "Wooden Shoes," a story of Dutch life, will be a feature of August 26. "The Jinx Jumper," an Allan Dwan production, with Jack Devereaux and Veta Searl, will be on the same bill.

Among the stars of September productions are William S. Hart, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, Margery Wilson, Bell Bennett and Winifred Allen.

WILLIAM RUSSELL IN "THE GREAT STANLEY SECRET."

William Russell appears in a most sensational role in "The Great Stanley Secret," a two-chapter drama, the first episode of which—"The Gypsy's Trust"—will be released by the Mutual Film Corporation July 23. The episodes will be in four reels each.



Scene from "The Great Stanley Secret" (Mutual).

"The Great Stanley Secret" is a highly dramatic production, eight reels of action punctuated with thrills. The first chapter opens with a sensational railroad wreck scene, and there is punch and snap every minute afterward.

The picture was produced by the American Film Company, Inc., under the direction of Edward S. Sloman, who has supervised a series of highly successful pictures in which William Russell has been starred. Russell and Sloman have developed a high degree of teamwork, the evidence of which the screen has seen.

Playing opposite Mr. Russell in "The Great Stanley Secret" is Charlotte Burton, now Mrs. Russell. Their romance has but recently culminated, and their love-making was at its height during the production of "The Great Stanley Secret."

William Tedmarsh plays the role of Quabba, the gypsy chieftain to whom the protection of the little heir to the Stanley fortune and title is entrusted. Tedmarsh's role is difficult and unusual, but he executes it with remarkable ability.

The wreck scene has been pronounced one of the most artistic and realistic bits of photography in the history of motography. It took hours to prepare for the smash and the filming of the burning wreckage was a remarkable bit of night photography.

"SKINNER'S BABY" (ESSANAY)

Following the success of "Skinner's Dress Suit" and "Skinner's Bubble," Essanay is shortly to release a third picture of this series, the title of which will be "Skinner's Baby."

Bryant Washburn, creator of the screen version of Skinner again appears in that role. The original cast, headed by Hazel Daly as Honey, forms his support. By special permission of Henry Irving Dodge, the author of the book, the scenario was written by Harry Beaumont, who has directed the former pictures. Mr. Beaumont is producing the forthcoming one, also. "Skinner's Baby," as the title indicates, introduces a new member of the famous family.

Filming of "Skinner's Baby" will be completed within a few days and trade showings will be run at all branch offices of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay immediately afterward. The picture will be released August 6.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE SOUTHLAND" (Selig).

"A Daughter of the Southland" is a Selig two-reel drama of the days of 1860-65. The story has to do with the love of a Southern girl for a Northern naval officer and of her loyalty to him despite the fact that he was with those that were fighting her country. The marked battle between the Monitor and Merrimac is reproduced in the action of this drama. The details are not only of absorbing interest carrying a succession of thrills, but the naval battle is reproduced with an eye to perfect historical accuracy. The battle between the Monitor and Merrimac was the first engagament between ironclads and revolutionized naval warfare to mark the doom of wooden vessels and inaugurated the steelclad battleship. Some very good photography and scenic effects are introduced during the course of the action.

MANAGER McGRAW IN K-E-S-E RELEASE.

John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants baseball team, is perhaps the best-known man in sports today. His aggressiveness and splendid leadership in connection with the Giants has won for him extended popularity. This popularity will be an asset to exhibitors who book "One Touch of Nature,' released through George Kleine's K-E-S-E organization July 30, because McGraw has a rather important role in the picture and is numbered as one of the cast. Most of the scenes in which McGraw was filmed were taken at the Polo Grounds, New York City. "One Touch of Nature" was written by Peter B. Kyne for the Saturday Evening Post. The picture was made at the Edison studios. John Drew Bennett, a godson of John Drew, the famous actor, is the star, and the woman lead is by Violet Cain.

HERALDS FOR "ALMA, WHERE DO YOU LIVE?"

Something really new in heralds has been provided by the Newfields Producing Corporation for their six-reel super-feature, "Alma, Where Do You Live?" starring Ruth MacTammany. A few years ago the song hit from the original stage presentation had world-wide popularity—everyone was singing "Alma, Sweet Alma, Where Do You Live?" So, as an advertising stunt, Newfields have reproduced words and music of the song on their heralds—so that everybody can "try it on their pianos." This will serve to link up the advertising of the picture with the fame of the musical comedy triumph as nothing else could. The musical phase of the advertising has been carried out in every particular, and the original score adapted to the film.

COHAN FILM OFFERS NEW TYPE OF STORY.

Artcraft promises something entirely new in way of photoplay stories in its George M. Cohan production, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," just completed under the direction of Hugh Ford. On the stage this play, heralded by George M. as a "mystery farce" offered a distinct novelty to the theater and that it should have this same effect on the screen, only to a far greater extent due to the wide scope of the motion picture and the great demand for novel film stories, is readily apparent. Although the new Cohan picture was originally scheduled for later release, as a result of the many requests for another production presenting this popular actor-author-producer, it will be shown publicly commening early in August.

Mary Miles Minter Heads Mutual

Featured for the Week of July 23 in "Melissa of the Hills"—Other Subjects Scheduled.

MARY MILES MINTER leads Mutual's schedule for the week of July 23 in "Melissa of the Hills," a five-reel drama laid in the feud belt of Tennessee. Mary plays the role of the "angel daughter" of the circuit rider.

On the same date Mutual will release the first chapter of "The Great Stanley Secret," a two-chapter drama. William Russell plays the leading role, with Charlotte Burton as his leading woman. The chapter is entitled "The Gypsy's Trust," and is in four reels.

"Melissa of the Hills" contains, besides a thrilling story well told, some moments of high excitement. The feud clans, whose leaders Melissa's father has failed to pacify, stage a most realistic battle among the mountains, a hair-raising scene.

"Melissa of the Hills" follows "Periwinkle," which was laid in a life-saving station on the Pacific coast, a decided contrast from her new release. The production was made by the American Film Company, Inc., under the direction of James Kirkwood.

"The Great Stanley Secret" is in eight reels—two four-reel chapters. It is a thrilling drama of intrigue and love, with the popular "Big Bill" Russell in the leading role. The first episode opens with a railroad wreck scene of great realism and pretentious proportions, and action is fast and snappy. The famous Stanley jewel, a family heirloom, is stolen from the neck of the tiny heir to the earldom, whose father and mother are both killed in the wreck, and the action of the production is based upon the efforts of a selfish cousin and his accomplices to get the gem from the youngster, who has come under the protection of a gypsy chieftain.

Two comedies will be released on the schedule of July 23, "A Match in Quarantine," a one-reel LaSalle, on July 24, and "Red, White and Blew," a one-reel Cub featuring George Ovey, which is scheduled for the screen on July 26.

Mutual Tours Around the World, Gaumont's one-reel travel picture, is released July 24. It takes the audience to Kairawan, sacred city of Tunisia; Prague, the ancient capitol of Bohemia, and to the "Dauphines," a beauty spot of southeastern France. Reel Life, the weekly film magazine, released July 25, carries the following subjects: "Juvenile Craftsmen," "A Dangerous Eagle Hunt," "Pedigreed Eggs," "The National Sylvian Theater," the first government-owned theater in America, and animated cartoons from Life. Mutual Weekly, the news reel, is released July 25. It contains current events up to within a few hours of release date

FARRAR STARTS WORK ON FIRST ARTCRAFT.

Geraldine Farrar has started work on her initial production for Artcraft at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Calif. For the past three weeks elaborate preparations have been made for the filming of this new photodrama at the West Coast plant under the supervision of Cecil B. De Mille, who also staged Miss Farrar's former Lasky triumphs. Mr. De Mille is giving his personal attention to the direction of the new Farrar-Artcraft offering and all efforts are being made to present in this cinema the greatest achievement of not only the star but the producer as well.

Supporting Miss Farrar is an exceptional cast selected with particular care by Mr. De Mille. Many of these players appeared with the star in "Joan the Woman" including Wallace Reid, who again plays opposite the noted actress in her newest film play. Several of the largest scenes ever staged at the new Lasky plant have already been completed for Miss Farrar, who aftr her vacation in the California mountains following a particularly active winter season in the metropolitan opera, has started on her new film with great enthusiasm

FRANCE COMPLETES "THE NATURAL LAW."

Announcement is made by Charles H. France, director general of the France Film Co., Inc., that their first super-feature, "The Natural Law," has been completed, and will shortly be released, though no method of distribution has yet been decided upon. The film is in eight reels, and is a close duplication of the stage play, "The Natural Law," which ran for eight months at the Republic theater. Its powerful theme has made possible a picture of supreme dramatic strength, much suspense and many thrills.

Miss Marguerite Courtot is featured in the heroine's role, with George Larkin playing opposite her. Others of the all-star cast include Maggie Holloway Fisher, who created the role of Mrs. Franklin in the stage play, and made such a hit in it. The author himself, Howard Hall, who played the strong part of the doctor at the Republic, appears in the same role in the film.

Charles H. France, who directed the film himself, is a well-known producer, and this makes his entry into the independent picture making field.

SWAAB TRADES IN USED MACHINES.

Lewis M. Swaab, Philadelphia, proprietor of the largest motion picture supply house in the East, calls attention to his "Used Machine Department," where numerous good used machines are for sale. He also states that he will gladly accept old apparatus as part payment for the incomparable Simplex machine in which he specializes.

Ince to Build a Studio

Producer Announces the Acquisition of Charles Ray and Enid Bennett for Paramount Program.

THOMAS H. INCE announces that he expects shortly to build a new studio from his own designs, in which will be produced the pictures under Mr. Ince's new affiliation with Paramount. The announcement came in the form of a statement from Ince through Jesse L. Lasky to the New York Paramount offices, and followed on the heels of the news that Charles Ray and Enid Bennett will henceforth appear in pictures to be released regularly through Paramount.

Mr. Ince, who is now occupying the former Biograph studio in Los Angeles says:

"I will present in five-reel photodramas to be released on the Paramount program Charles Ray and Enid Bennett, whom I believe has the greatest possibilities, and one other star whose name will be announced later.

"Having only four producing companies, I can give to each one my personal supervision and attention, and instead of attempting to turn out a quantity of photodramas for a program we will be able to devote our attention entirely to quality.

"The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been kind enough to place at my disposal the facilities of their big western organization and I can forsee nothing but a most brilliant future. I will also have an opportunity to devote my own time toward the betterment of the photodramatic art as my colleagues are doing—Mr. De Mille and Mr. Griffith."

Enid Bennett signed a contract with Ince to appear in pictures scarcely a year ago, yet she is already credited with being one of the most popular stars of the cinema. She was born at York, Australia. Her secret aspirations toward footlight fame were enhanced by her meeting with Katherine Grey in "The Third Degree." Miss Grey helped her secure an engagement as "Modesty" in "Everywoman." After that she played prominent parts in Fred Niblo's and Josephine Cohan's repertoire company in Australia.

Ray came under Mr. Ince's direction three years ago. After some time spent in demonstrating his ability to perform hazardous feats for the screen he jumped into fame overnight by his portrayal of "The Coward." Many of his appearances have been in the characterizations of American youths, and in these he has been able to inject an unusually large amount of sympathy while still remaining in character. His portrayals are marked by an appeal that makes itself felt straight through the screen. Ray is six feet tall, has dark brown hair and eyes and is but 26 years old.

"THE LOST EXPRESS" (Signal).

The entire first episode of the new Signal Film Corporation serial—"The Lost Express"—to be released through Mutual exchanges, has been completed. The cast surrounding Helen Holmes in this new and bigger serial undertaking is superior to any that has appeared with her in the past. J. P. McGowan numbers among his players Leo Maloney, Thomas Lingham, William Brunton, Will Chapman, W. A. Behrens and Andrew Waldron, all of whom appeared with Miss Holmes in the past, and in addition has Al. Smith, who is famous for his character delineations, and Edward Hearn, who has played leads in Universal production for the past two years.

Scene from "The Lost Express" (Signal).

The exact date for release of Chapter One of "The Lost Express" has not yet been set, but it will be sometime in September, and announcement will be made in the near future as to the day and date when the initial episode will be available.

Selznick's September List

Completed Schedule Includes a Number of Interesting Subjects Featuring as Many Favorites.

THE scehdule of Selznick-Pictures releases for fall has been completed, and forms the most imposing array of attractions that has yet emanated from this organization. The Selznick-Pictures themselves will be represented by Herbert Brenon's production of "The Lone Wolf," now running at the Broadway theater, Norma Talmadge in "Poppy," and Constance Talmadge in "The Lesson," directed by Charles Giblyn. In addition to these there will be two special productions, one of which will be the vehicle for Eva Tanguay's debut on the screen, and which has been entitled "Firefly," and the other will be a Rita Jolivet feature, centering about the sinking of the Lusitania.

Owing to the fact that Herbert Brenon has been specially engaged for the production of "The Fall of the Romanoffs," this director will have no other Selznick-Picture than "The Lone Wolf" until late in the fall. "The Lone Wolf," however, from the comments that have been made on it during the Broadway run, is equal to several pictures all rolled into one. It is a frank, out and out melodrama, free from any attempt to teach or preach. Mr. Brenon simply took Louis Joseph Vance's rapid fire story and made it into a still more rapid fire picture.

Norma Talmadge has been so industrious in turning out Selznick-Pictures that "The Moth" was finished, with cutting and titles complete, before "Poppy" was released. This production has been deliberately held back because "Poppy" has proved so popular it is in demand on all sides. It is breaking the records made by both "Panthea" and "The Law of Compensation." In "The Moth" Miss Talmadge appears for the first time since she joined the Selznick forces as a conventional society woman, and the gowns which she wears in the production will establish her as one of the best dressed women on the screen or stage.

Miss Constance Talmadge, as a star in her own right, has won the admiration of all who have been in touch with Director Giblyn's work on "The Lesson." With youth, beauty and vivacity all on her side, the Selznick prediction is that she will leap immediately into the highest populartiy.

Eva Tanguay, who has been widely described as "cyclonic," will have ample opportunity to exhibit her breezy talents in "Firefly." The popular vaudeville star will have the role of a young woman who is disguised as a gypsy youth, who finally escapes and discovers a romance.

The Lusitania picture, in which Rita Jolivet will be starred, will be of timely interest because it deals with the incident which was the first of the series of provocations that lead to the present war with Germany.

These five big attractions will be distributed to the Selznick Exchanges in September, the only exception being "The Lone Wolf," which is being specially booked for ten pre-release runs simultaneously in August.

"FROM RANCH TO RICHES" (L-Ko Comedies).

Vin Moore, under the watchful eye of General Director J. G. Blystone, has turned out a novel comedy for early release on the L-Ko program. While it is admittedly difficult to find new ideas in screen merrymaking, it is believed by L-Ko that "From Ranch to Riches" will come as a novelty, in spite of the scores of L-Ko's that have preceded it. Myrtle Sterling, Kathleen Emerson and Al Forbes will lead a large company through many hair-raising stunts while working out the complications that are depended upon to bring the laughs.

PATRICIA THEATER HOOKS UP WITH GOLDWYN.

From its offices in Toronto, Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., of Canada announces the signing of the Patricia theater, London, Ont., for the entire first year's output. Manager W. L. Stewart made the contract with N. L. Nathanson and his representative, Sydney Taube.

"THE INNOCENT SINNER" (Fox).

"The Innocent Sinner," an R. A. Walsh production, featuring Miriam Cooper, is the next release on the Fox program, following the presentation of Gladys Brockwell in "To Honor and Obey?" The new picture is somewhat along the lines of the famous Fox picture, "The Regeneration," and this, together with the fact that it is a Walsh production, is sufficient to arouse wide attention among the exhibitors.

The story of "The Innocent Sinner" tells of the downfall of a young girl through a man's treachery and of her upward climb through the love of a good man. On her way toward regeneration, the girl uplifts another sinner, a young crook, who redeems himself by entering the navy and heads a squad of fellow Jack Tars to the girl's rescue from a dive in one of the greatest free-for-all fights ever screened

Scene from "The Innocent Sinner" (Fox).

Miriam Cooper is featured in this strong and absorbing picture, and she has been surrounded by a cast of players well known to all film goers and perfectly chosen as to type. Among them are: Charles Clary, Jack Standing, Jane Novak, Rosita Marstini, William E. Parsins, Johnny Ruse and Jennie Lee.

LOUISE GLAUM IN NEW TRIANGLE PLAY.

Some of the most weird and fantastic settings ever built at the Triangle Culver City studios are being used this week by Director Walter Edwards for the next starring offering of Miss Louise Glaum. Several important photoplay personages have been cast to support Miss Glaum. George Webb has been assigned the leading male role, and Hugo B. Koch will appear as the villain. Others in the cast include Thomas Guise, Lee Hill and Dorcas Matthews. The story, which is by Monte M. Katterjohn, is said to be the greatest afforded Miss Glaum since "The Wolf Woman," and the Triangle siren has announced that she will introduce some gowns which for bizarre effect will out-vampire any of her previous sartorial creations. Miss Glaum's gowns, which have attracted attention in the most exclusive fashion centers, are originated and designed by Mon. Randall, the artist.

Lee Hill, who for several months has been assistant to Director Walter Edwards at the Triangle Culver City studios, has been cast for an important role in the play. This is not by any means Hill's first attempt as an actor. He has appeared in the productions of various companies before understudying Director Edwards. Hill will appear as Miss Glaum's Hindu servant, and was chosen for the part because he has spent many years' residence in India and is familiar with the customs and mannerisms of the people.

NEW FAIRBANKS FILM NEXT ARTCRAFT OFFERING.

The next production to be released by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation will be a new Douglas Fairbanks comedy entitled, "Down to Earth." The story for this play was written by the versatile Douglas himself and is replete with typical Fairbanks humor, optimism and philosophy. Under the direction of John Emerson the new film is now rapidly nearing completion at the Lasky studio in California and August 12th is the date announced for its release by Artcraft.

Although typically a Douglas Fairbanks picture, his new Artcraft offering is different from any of his previous plays. This is due to the fact that the production does not feature the popular actor's athletic thrillers but rather shows why he is capable of performing these hair-raising tricks. While "Wild and Woolly" was more of a thriller, "Down to Earth" gets most of its laughs from incidents concerning life as Douglas sees it. A capable supporting cast includes Eileen Percy, Gustave Von Seyfertitz, Charles P. McHugh, Charles Gerrard, William H. Keith, Ruth Allen, Fred Goodwine, Florence Mayon, Herbert Starding, David Porter and Bull Montana.

Mutual-Empire Announcement

Charles Frohman Plays—To Appear Early in September—Noted Stars With Strong Support.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual and of the Empire, gives out the titles of a number of the Charles Frohman pictures and the stars to be featured, summarized in the following schedule: Ann Murdock in "The Beautiful Adventure," "The Imposter" and the "Outcast"; Julia Sanderson in "The Runaway," and Olive Tell in "Her Sister."

"These stars and plays, chosen from the array of dramatic treasures of Charles Frohman, represent the pick of the Frohman plays in a big list of box office winners which are to be put into Empire-Mutual pictures," said Mr. Freuler.

According to present plans, the first of the Charles Frohman pictures will be presented early in September. While the Mutual is accepting reservation for that period, exact release dates are yet to be decided upon.

The productions at the Empire studios are now in the hands of Albert Campellani, famous director of many famous stars, including Clara Kimball Young and Del Henderson, director of "Outcast," "The Impostor" and others.

Among the famous artists to appear with Miss Murdock in "Outcast" is Miss Kathryn Calvert, wife of the late Paul Armstrong, playwright, who is to appear as "Valentine." Kate Sargentson is another well-known Frohman favorite who will be in Miss Murdock's support, and others named in the cast are Jules Raucourt, a noted French actor who appeared with Miss Murdock in "Please Help Emily"; Herbert Auling, Richard Hatteras, Reginald Carrington, Zola Todman, Gertrude Andrews and Frank Goldsmith.

David Powell, the talented player who played last with Clara Kimball Young in "The Price She Paid," will be Miss Murdock's leading man. There will be thirty-six people altogether in "Outcast."

"SIC 'EM CAT" (BRAY CARTOON)

The cartoon section of the 77th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, is from the pen of Leighton Budd whose work on present day political subjects has been recognized as being of high order. The subject has to do with food control, a thought which is in the minds of householders everywhere, and it is hoped that it may perhaps instil something of an understanding in the minds of theater goers of what President Wilson, through the food commission, is trying to tell Americans.

The main theme has to do with the tremendous waste of good food in our kitchens. The "producer" who, in the cartoon, is represented by the housewife, is in her kitchen baking a cake and her little girl who represents the "consumer" asks for and gets a generous piece. She runs off with it and takes a bite, laying the rest on a chair nearby. Her interest in the cake is for the moment detracted by her doll labelled "carelessness" and with this she plays. In comes a big rat called "waste" which steals the cake and runs off with it. The loss of the cake bothers the little girl not very much since she knows that she can go back to her mother for more as there is plenty to be had. She gets another piece and goes through about the same performance with the rat stealing the remaining piece again. Finally, the mother, "producer" realizing that "carelessness" is responsible for the losses, seeks a means to kill the rat, "waste" and gets a cat which represents "food control." The cat promptly gets busy and put an end to "waste."

Depicted in the imitable manner of the Bray Studios Inc., this cartoon is sure to find strong favor with motion picture audiences everywhere and the story does not fail to carry with it the "punch" so essential to a strong cartoon. The food control commission of which Mr. Hoover is at the head, strongly endorses this sort of propaganda, and the idea has found favor with this important new branch of governmental activtiy.

"BEHIND THE MASK" (APOLLO)

In "Behind the Mask," an Apollo production, for release on the Art Dramas Program, Harry R. Raver, president of Apollo, feels that he has a feature of unusual strength in story and production. It was written by Charles Dazey and adapted by Frederick Rath.

Mr. Dazy is famous for his play, "In Old Kentucky" and is the author of numerous screen successes, among which are "Manhattan Madness," "The Flower of Faith," "Wolf Lowry," and "The Redemption of Dave Darcy." Like all of this author's work, "Behind the Mask" is highly original and its twists are of the surprise order.

ARTCRAFT TO ISSUE HOUSE ORGAN.

At a meeting of the executives of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation last week, it was decided to celebrate the first anniversary of this organization with the initial publication of a house organ to be devoted entirely to the aid of Artcraft exhibitors. The new magazine will be issued twice a month and will contain ideas and suggestions aimed to assist the exhibitor in the exploitation of Artcraft pictures. "Artcraft Advance" is the name of the new publication and Norman S. Rose, well known in motion picture advertising and publicity circles, has been engaged as its editor.

"THE SHOW-DOWN" (Bluebird).

Scenes out of doors, photographed in Palm Canyon, Cal., and on Santa Cruz Island, will embellish with photographic beauty the Bluebird release for Aug. 13. "The Show-Down" was created by Lynn F. Reynolds, who has gained distinction as Bluebird's "nature study" director—he never takes a scene indoor when he can make a vista out in the open serve the same purpose. Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez, stars of the Reynolds Bluebird organization, will have the same prominence in the advertising as they hold in the presenting cast.

Scene from "The Show-Down" (Bluebird).

The scenes incident to the operations of a German submarine in the Pacific ocean will provide sensational features, and the rugged life of the shipwrecked castaways on a verdant island will show how human nature is brought into its true light in the melting pot of experience when all hands get "back to the primitive." Natures variously change and hypocrisy is exposed, while the good traits of the characters are brought to the surface when it comes to "the show-down."

Arthur Hoyt who, with Neva Gerber, will be starred in the next Lynn Reynolds Bluebird; George Chesbro, Edward Cecil and Jean Hersholt will have prominent roles in "The Show-Down," supporting Miss Gonzalez and Mr. Hernandez. Waldemar Young and Mr. Reynolds prepared the scenario.

LESTER CUNEO IN "THE HIDDEN SPRING" (Metro).

Harold Lockwood's villian, Lester Cuneo, who has figured as the heavy man in a great number of Metro-Yorke plays, appears in "The Hidden Spring" as a rather different character than usual. Up to the production of "The Haunted Pajamas," the last Metro-Yorke feature, Cuneo usually appeared as the typical heavy, who fights with the leading man in nearly every play.

In "The Hidden Spring" Lester Cuneo is Bill Wheeler, the strong man of a mining community, who, through nearly all of the picture, is the staunch ally of Donald Keeth, the young lawyer, portrayed by Harold Lockwood. Bill Wheeler is one of the men in the mining town who has been wronged by the unscrupulous boss of the community, Quartus Hembly. When Donald Keeth takes Wheeler's case and fights it in the court against Hembly, whom everyone fears, Keeth wins the everlasting friendship of the rough-and-ready Wheeler, and the latter tells him, "Keeth, I'm with you from death to breakfast."

From that moment an alliance is established between Keeth and Wheeler, so well portrayed by Lockwood and Cuneo, who in real life are as great bosom friends as they become in "The Hidden Spring."

"EYE OF ENVY" FIRST HORSLEY-ART DRAMA.

On account of the unanimous demand from exhibitors using Art dramas program, the releasing of the David Horsley productions, starring Crane Wilbur, will be begun immediately, the first one going on the program after "When You and I Were Young," the Apollo release starring Alma Hanlon.

The title of the first to be released is "Eye of Envy." This is a story somewhat unique, in that while its story is allegorical, it has nevertheless all the intensity of a straight dramatic production. Harrish Ingraham directed it, from a story by J. Francis Dunbar.

The principal characters are Ambition, played by Mr. Wilbur, Avarice, played by Jode Mullally, and Innocence, played by Gene Grosby.

The incidents which make up the interesting plot are all pointed and filled with meaning, so that the story impresses a vivid moral as well as furnishes novel entertainment.

Paralta Finishes Two Plays

Kerrigan's "A Man's Man" and Miss Barriscale's "Rose O'Paradise Ready for Triangle.

THE Paralta studios in Hollywood, at which the Bessie Barriscale corporation and the J. Warren Kerrigan company are at work, has been a busy place in the past two months. The proof of this is that Miss Barriscale has completed a big production of Grace Miller White's popular emotional love story, "Rose O'Paradise," and J. Warren Kerrigan and his company have just finished his production of a screen version of Peter B. Kyne's "A Man's Man."

Scene from "A Man's Man" (Paralta).

The Kerrigan production is described as a very important contribution to the screen, showing Mr. Kerrigan in a character which will greatly add to his popularity as a star. While John Stewart Webster, the role Mr. Kerrigan plays, is a fighting man, he is of a different type than any part this star has ever played. Mr. Kerrigan's leading woman is Lois Wilson, who lays Dolores Ruey. Other important members of his cast are Kenneth Harlan, Ed Coxen, Ida Lewis, Eugene Pallette, Joseph J. Dowling and John Steppling.

In "Rose O'Paradise" Miss Barriscale plays the role of "Jinnie" Singleton, an orphan persecuted by an uncle to secure her fortune. The uncle has her father incarcerated in an insane asylum. He escapes, but to die at her side, warning her of her danger. To escape her uncle she takes four little kittens in a water pail and her old violin and makes her way to another town to Lafe Grandoken, an old cobbler, and his wife, and takes up her abode with them. Here the cruel machinations of her uncle reach her in sensational incidents which make up a thrilling emotional love story.

Scene from "Rose O'Paradise" (Paralta).

Miss Barriscale has never done sensational "stunts" in any play she has ever appeared in, but in "Rose O'Paradise" she does one in an escape down a rope from the second story of a building in which she is confined as "Jinnie."

Miss Barriscale's supporting cast includes Howard Hickman, David M. Hartford, Norman Kaiser, Edythe Chapman and Lucille Young.

Uncle Walt Mason Stories

Will Be Picturized by Filmcraft Corporation—To Release One Rhyme Reel Each Week.

WALT MASON, or Uncle Walt, as he is more popularly known to the readers of nearly two hundred of the biggest newspapers of the country, has finally been backed into a corner by the Filmcraft Corporation of 220 West 42nd street, New York, and, with the assistance of "The George Matthew Adams Newspaper Service," an exclusive contract to produce his short stories and poems has been jimmied out of him and now reposes in the safe of the Filmcraft Corporation.

Walt Mason.

R. V. Rothermel, president of Filmcraft, is an old-timer in the sales end of the film business and from long experience is qualified to speak on the salability of a product to the trade. He admits it himself so it must be true that the signing up of Walt Mason is one of the best jobs he has ever done, not only because there is a strong demand for a new and distinctive type of single-reel picture, but also because there is a tremendous market value attached to Walt Mason's material due to a steady and persistent building up of a following of millions of readers carried out for the last ten years by the George Matthew Adams Newspaper Service in such papers as the New York Globe, Philadelphia Bulletin, Boston Post, Chicago News and scores of others, to say nothing of such publications as the Ladies' Home Journal, Judge, Every Week, and so on.

It is Mr. Rothermel's idea that the steady, persistent, plugging type of publicity is the kind that wins in any field, and it appeared to him that Walt Mason's representation six days a week for nearly ten years in such newspapers and periodicals is strong enough to appeal to the most conservative film buyer.

These pictures are all single reels and specialize in natural, humorous situations amplified in each case by just a flash of animated cartoon comedy to give distinction and variety.

The George Matthew Adams Newspaper Service is working in conjunction with Filmcraft, and through its connections with hundreds of newspapers throughout the country can give these Walt Mason Rhyme-Reels true feature value to any enterprising exhibitor.

"THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" WILL BE HISTORY OF RUSSIA.

Herbert Brenon is rapidly completing his latest and most pretentious production, "The Fall of The Romanoffs," featuring Iliodor, the Russian Mad Monk and confidant of the Czar and Czarina, and it will be ready for showing about the middle of August. An exceedingly interesting feature of this picture is that it will be an authentic and up-to-date history of the recent astounding events in Russia, leading up to and including the revolution and overthrow of the Romanoff Dynasty.

Iliodor, the Mad Monk, who is playing himself in the picture, has told the world in his revelations the conditions in the Russian Court that led up to the revolution, and these revelations will be reproduced accurately by Mr. Brenon in "The Fall of The Romanoffs." The value of this film from the historical standpoint can scarcely be exaggerated. Imagine to-day how priceless a film would be which authentically showed the French revolution, the events leading up to our own Rebellion, or one of the Crusades?

One of the leading characters of the events pictured, playing his own role in it all lends additional interest. Ilodor has proven to be an exceptional screen actor, despite the fact that it is his first appearance before the camera. Mr. Brenon has surrounded the Russian monk with an exceptional cast of sterling players, including such artists as Nance O'Neil, Alfred Hickman, Conway Tearle, Ketty Galanta, William E. Shay, Charles Craig, Mlle. Marcelle and a number of others. Great care has been taken to make the picture historically perfect, and two Russian experts are supervising the production to be sure that all details are correct.

Boehringer Company Officers to Make Trip.

New Orleans, La.—Ernst Boehringer, manager of the Triangle theater, which ceased to exist as a motion picture house on July 16, having been purchased by New York interests for the purpose of being turned into a vaudeville and motion picture theater in the early autumn, has arranged for an extended trip of the officers of the Boehringer Amusement company to inspect some of the leading theaters of the country with a view to installing improvements in the new Liberty theater which is now building, and which is to be opened as a modern motion picture theater early in November. Upon the return of the officials, Manager Boehringer, in company with his publicity manager, Leon Grandjean, and assistant Manager Blankenship, will visit the principal cities to study at close range the best methods of detailed operation. The new Liberty theater will be as perfect in construction and appointments as it is possible for modern architects to make it, and it is to be one of the show theaters of the entire South. It will have a seating capacity of over 2,000 and every convenience for the patrons will be installed and maintained.

Lincoln, Neb.—The Colonial Amusement Company has been formed here and through E. E. Plans call for a fire-proof, 50x150 structure with front of pressed brick, stucco and terra cotta. Provision also is made for the installation of a large pipe organ.

Strand's Opening the Picture Event in South

Saenger Company Dedicates Magnificent Photoplay House on Independence Day—S. L. Rothapfel, Managing Director of New York's Rialto, Assists in Staging Initial Performance.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The formal opening of the Strand theater on July 4 proved to be the motion picture event in the entire South. No other photoplay theater outside of New York can boast of a greater degree of perfection in every detail than this new temple of pleasure that has been provided for the people of New Orleans by the Saenger Amusement Company. The completion of the Strand had come to be a subject of conversation with the citizens who were interested in a perfunctory way with the progress of the building, for it is a fact that numerous obstacles were encountered by the Saenger management through no fault of their own. General Manager E. V. Richards, Jr., never allowed himself to be diverted from his purpose, however, and the result is that when the Strand was thrown open to the public, it proved to be a wonder to the most of the people who visited it for the first time on July 4.

The Strand has been completed at a cost of close to $250,000 and all of its appointments are of the best and most substantial quality. It seats 2,000 persons and every provision has been made for the perfect showing of motion pictures. Don Philippini, the orchestra leader, has a company of thirty-five of the most accomplished musicians to be procured. Nor has the Saenger management stopped at this musical provision. A magnificent Hope-Jones Unit organ supplements the orchestra and lends additional impressiveness to the program. This organ is the finest one of its kind in the South and is presided over by Prof. Fitch. (A complete detailed description of "The Strand" appears in this week's issue of The Moving Picture World.—Ed.)

The details of the opening of this magnificent theater were placed in the hands of S. L. Rothapfel, the noted exhibitor who has made the Rialto theater in New York a national wonder. Managing Director D. L. Cornelius, of the Strand, with his highly trained house staff followed out the directions of Mr. Rothapfel implicitly. Even the orchestra was under the personal direction of the New York exhibitor, Don Philippini having gladly resigned the baton to the motion picture exhibiting genius. Novelties in light effects, in musical accompaniment, in arrangement of program and many other ways were introduced and made a part of the regular daily presentations. All of which contribute to make the Strand distinctive.

Mr. Rothapfel had a great time while aiding in opening this fine new theater. He came from a comparatively cool climate to New Orleans in about its hottest season and any person who watched him mopping the perspiration from his face could realize that it was not all due to hard work. Nevertheless, Mr. Rothapfel was reluctant to leave. He declared that his reception in this city had been a most cordial one and that the people had a way of making one feel at home that is not frequently experienced in other cities. He was enthused over the Strand and profuse in his praise of everybody and everything connected with it.

"The Strand performances are perfect," he declared, "and I leave New Orleans knowing that at last the South has a real photoplay theater."

Showing "Nation" Film in Kansas Prohibited

District Court Grants State's Application for Injunction Against Exhibition of "Birth of a Nation"—Order to Become Permanent if Film Company Loses Mandamus Case Pending in Supreme Court.

By Kansas City News Service, 206 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

TOPEKA, KAN.—"The Birth of a Nation" is temporarily barred from showing in Kansas by an injunction issued by the District Court of Shawnee County, Kan. The judges of the two District Courts sat together to hear the case, because of its importance. It was the first test of features of the new censorship law—and several State officials had become involved in it. A temporary injunction was granted against the showing of the picture, the chief ground being that the Board of Review had recalled the permit previously granted for its exhibition. If the case now pending in the Supreme Court, in which the State asks for the return of the permit and its revocation, is decided against the film company in the next thirty days, the injunction will, it is said, automatically become permanent; otherwise a further hearing will be had in the District Court. It is also possible, it is said, that the District Court may take up the matter of permanent injunction before thirty days.

The State's application for injunction against "Birth of a Nation" in the District Court caused several letters to be made public which it had been charged had influenced the Board of Review to change its mind about the picture, and order its recall. As previously reported in the Moving Picture World, Mrs. J. M. Miller, chairman of the board, declared that the letters from the State officials reached her after the board had made up its mind to recall the picture for another review, the board having decided after the permit was granted that it could properly condemn the picture.

The evidence in the case, however, tended to show that the decision of the board was directly influenced by the letters, since it was a fact that the recall order had been sent out after the letters had been written.

The same letters were introduced by the attorneys for the Sherman-Elliott Film Company, handling "Birth of a Nation," in the mandamus suit in the Supreme Court brought by the State.

One of these was from Governor Capper, dated May 9, and addressed to Mrs. B. L. Short, one of the members of the Board of Review. This letter was as follows:

"I am sorry to learn that the board passed favorably upon 'The Birth of a Nation.' I cannot help but feel that it will be a serious mistake to let this picture be shown in Kansas at this time. It is certain to arouse prejudice and create bad feeling in cities like Kansas City, Topeka and Wichita, which have large colored populations. The picture is unfair to the colored people. It has been turned down in a great many cities on that account and Kansas, which has always stood for an equal opportunity regardless of race or creed, ought not to take a backward step.

"Very respectfully,
"ARTHUR CAPPER, Governor."

Charles Sessions, private secretary to Governor Capper, had previously sent the following letter, while the approval of the film was still merely a rumor in Topeka:

"There is a rumor here that the censor board has passed 'The Birth of a Nation.' I cannot believe it. That's why I am writing. That picture is an insult to Kansas and the north. It glorifies the worst gang of cut throats that ever infested America—the Ku Klux Klan. It also pictures our Union officers and soldiers as the rag tag of creation. It also perverts history. That a board of loyal Kansas women would pass such a picture is inconceivable to me and I shall not believe it until I hear from you personally that such is the case."

A third letter offered in evidence, to indicate the pressure brought to bear on the board, was from Mrs. Prentis, a prominent club woman of Topeka, to Mrs. Miller, chairman of the board. It was as follows:

"Just heard that you had passed the 'Birth of a Nation.' RECALL IT. If you value the esteem of the loyal people of Kansas, do this. It is an insult to the old soldiers and to every loyal person in this state. I heard southern women in California bragging that at last they had been able to get their side of the controversy presented to the people . . . . .

"CAROLINE PRENTIS."

In a postscript Mrs. Prentis added: "Aside from any other argument against it, this is not time to be stirring up feelings which that picture will stir up."

Arrangements were made at the convention for the forming of committees in each town to inspect pictures shown there, keep watch as to whether eliminations are made as ordered, and make reports to the board of review.

Three Kansas City Theaters Robbed.

Kansas City, Mo.—Kansas City theaters suffered several burglaries last week. The three touched are located in different parts of the city, and were robbed on different nights. The goods taken varied from the entire receipts of two nights shows to the contents of a candy case. The Mozart theater was the heaviest loser, as the owner of the theater had neglected to deposit his receipts of the two nights previous. The Bancroft theater was broken into and robbed of several wall fans and other equally valuable fixtures. The Linwood theater was the victim of a boy's raid as the only thing touched was the candy case, which was completely wiped out.

The executive offices of the company will be moved to Chicago, and this change will take R. C. Cropper, the president of the company, Phil Ryan, and others from Kansas City. The new office will bear the name of the Standard Film Corporation. The Standard's territory will embrace the states of Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin in addition to the present territory now being held through the other offices. Mr. Cropper has been in Chicago since June 21, and will remain there for active supervision of the change.

Minneapolis News Letter.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

Nothing Stirring in Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—While awaiting the arrival of the new manager of the Triangle exchange and for developments from Mannie Gottlieb's leaving the Favorite Exchange, film circles here are as quiet as a graveyard. The failure of any other exchangemen to quit, get cut loose or be added to the ranks has so surprised the exhibitors that they, too, are quiet and puzzled. The rain and heat have alternated in helping to cut down theater patronage hereabouts the last few days and several Minneapolis houses have cut down their shows from seven nights a week to four and five, while one has thrown up the sponge for the summer at least. The Emerson and Elite theaters are reported as having cut down their number of show nights and the Oak is contemplating such a move. The Zone has closed. The downtown theaters have enjoyed a fair business, but their managers admit a slight falling off of attendance.

Keough Showing First Run Paramounts.

Minneapolis.—Manager James A. Keough of the Strand theater announced that he would display several first run Paramount features following the run of Mary Pickford in "The Little American," beginning Sunday, July 15. Pauline Frederick in "The Love that Lives" will be the initial Paramount offering at the Strand.

"Idle Wives" to Run a Week.

St. Paul, Minn.—The Blue Mouse theater has begun a week's run of "Idle Wives," the second of three features booked from the Saxe Exchange of Minneapolis. The Blue Mouse's action in booking three features from one state rights exchange for three consecutive weeks' showing is something new.

Recruiting Office Books War Picture.

St. Paul, Minn.—The British recruiting office here has rented "The Battle of the Somme" pictures from the Pathe exchange and will display them at the Metropolitan two days at a dollar a ticket. The Minneapolis Britishers have booked the features for two days also at the same admission prices.

Wells Resigns from K-E-S-E.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Charles E. Wells, for over a year road agent for the local K-E-S-E. exchange, has resigned to become manager of the Isis theater at Cedar Rapids, Ia. Mr. Wells will be succeeded by R. L. White. Mr. Wells is the second K-E-S-E. roadman to become an exhibitor within the last two months, William Cutter having taken over the reins at the Arcade theater, St. Paul, some time ago.

Saxe Exchange Handling "On Trial."

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Saxe exchange is preparing for the release of the first National Exhibitors' Circuit feature, "On Trial," produced by Essanay with James Young directing. Thomas Saxe, one of the owners of the local exchange, occupies one of the lofty positions in the circuit, and has given Manager E. C. Davies instructions to go the limit in boosting "On Trial."

Flickers from Filmland.

Minneapolis, Minn. — William Albert Steffes of the Green & Steffes exchange here returned to his desk (also Mr. Green's) last week after a hurried business trip to New York, Washington and Chicago. Upon his return Mr. Steffes looked after the removing of the exchange from the sixth floor of the Produce Exchange building to the eighth. He will attend the Chicago convention and exposition, and incidentally keep his eye and pocketbook open for good, live feature pictures.

Picture Men to Fight Proposed Fire Measure

Contends Ordinance as Drafted Regulating Storage, Handling and Manufacture of Films Too Stringent—Building Commissioner Hilkene Calls Meeting of Film Men to Hear Their Views.

Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—The moving picture men of Indianapolis are busy organizing their forces preparatory to staging a bitter fight against the passage of the new city ordinance regulating the storage, handling and manufacture of motion picture films, which was introduced before the city council for the first time last week. They contend the proposed measure is entirely too stringent and say they intend to fight it to a finish.

Jacob H. Hilkene, commissioner of public buildings, under whose supervision the new ordinance was drafted, has called a meeting of the owners of motion picture theaters and exchanges to be held the latter part of the week in his office at the City Hall, at which the motion picture men will be given an opportunity to protest against the provisions of the ordinance. Following this meeting, Mr. Hilkene said, the welfare committee of the city council will call a meeting at which the motion picture interests may submit their formal protests before the council.

Work on the preparation of the proposed ordinance began soon after the Colfax building fire in Indianapolis, April 9, in which six persons lost their lives and which was said to have resulted from a large quantity of motion picture films that were stored in the basement of the building. Prior to that time Indianapolis had no ordinance governing the storage, handling or manufacture of films. Mr. Hilkene was assisted in drafting the measure by H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal, insurance experts, and one or two representatives of the motion picture industry.

The proposed ordinance as it now stands provides for the appointment of a film inspector, who will receive a salary of $90 a month. The inspector will be required to be on duty from 1 to 5 o'clock each afternoon and from 6:30 to 10 o'clock each evening. His duties include the inspection of all motion picture theaters and places in which films are stored in order to ascertain whether or not the provisions of the ordinance are being enforced.

The ordinance further provides that the handling, storage, keeping or use of motion picture films, including negatives, raw stock, finished products or discarded scrap or used films would be prohibited in a building, any part of which is used for a theater, dance hall, hotel, church, school, department store, public meeting place or any other place of public assembly, apartment tenement or residence building for more than one family.

It also prohibits the storing of films in any building, any part of which is situated within fifty feet of the nearest wall of another building, provided that when an unpierced brick wall not less than twelve inches thick encloses such building, the structure may be used for the storage of films. The ordinance compels the installation of a sprinkler system in all storage places, and prohibits the handling of scrap film in a building within the fire limits. No one would be permitted to handle films in such places without first receiving a license, for which a fee of $10 would be charged.

The ordinance also provides for the construction of fireproof vaults in which films must be stored and handled, and provides that all films must be kept in special fireproof containers. The ordinance, according to Mr. Hilkene, is similar to ordinances now in effect in a number of eastern cities.

Fire Marshal Closes Three Theaters as Fire Traps.

Indianapolis, Ind.—H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal, has within the last two weeks stopped the operation of three motion picture shows in the state—one at Newcastle, one at Hagerstown and one at Frankfort—because of existing conditions which were said to be extremely dangerous to the safety of patrons.

The Theatorium at Newcastle, Ind., was found to be operated in a basement, where, in case of fire, it would be almost impossible for people to get out. Mr. Friedley ordered the showing of the pictures stopped and then sent a report to the State Industrial Board, suggesting that it take some action regarding the vaudeville acts which are shown in connection with the pictures.

The Bagford theater, at Hagerstown, Ind., was reported by one of Mr. Friedley's inspectors as a "veritable fire trap"—low ceiling, wooden booth, insufficient exits, and in general bad condition. At the Star theater at Frankfort it was found that the operator's machine was not enclosed in a booth. Mr. Friedley ordered both places closed until they comply with the necessary requirements.

Mr. Friedley says that inspections of motion picture show houses throughout the state have disclosed some conditions which, if permitted to remain, will sooner or later result seriously. He says a great many of the exhibitors do not seem to appreciate the necessity of keeping their booths in clean and first class condition at all times, as well as seeing to it that all loose films, hot carbons, scraps of films and other combustible materials are kept in metal boxes.

Authorities Try to Stop Establishment of Exchange.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Jacob Hilkene, commissioner of public buildings in Indianapolis, recently ordered Louis Haag, and the Century Realty Company, owners of a three-story brick building at Illinois and Maryland streets, to relinquish their plans for establishing a film exchange on the third floor of the building. Because of the fact that there is no city ordinance giving Mr. Hilkene the power to take such action, he asked H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal, to assist him in placing the order into effect.

The proposed ordinance, which was introduced before the council last week, provides that films may not be stored in any building where any part of the structure is used for public purposes. There is a restaurant on the second floor of the building owned by Mr. Haag and the Realty company, and it was pointed out that if the new ordinance is passed it would compel the men to move the exchange because of the restaurant.

To Build $40,000 Picture House.

Marion, Ind.—This city will soon have another new and modern theater which will be symbolic of the city's onward march to future greatness. It was announced this week that the Royal-Grand Theater Company had secured an option on the colored church and property across from the Marion hotel on West Fifth street, and that a new theater building will soon be erected there. The work of tearing down the church building will begin immediately.

Miss Dolly Spurr, manager of the Royal-Grand theater, said that the new theater building will be capable of seating 1,000 persons and will cost nearly $40,000. It will be so constructed that both vaudeville and motion pictures will be shown. She added that the Royal-Grand will continue to operate at its present location until the new theater is completed.

Adopts Resolution Endorsing Sunday Shows

Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce Sanctions Picture Exhibitions on Sabbath as Aid to U. S. Government in Providing Recreation for Soldiers.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce, the question of recreation for the Government soldiers at this point was taken up with a view to assisting the Government to the greatest possible extent. Foremost among the topics under discussion was the question of Sunday moving pictures at the uptown houses, where thousands of men in khaki gather on their trips to the city. Following the discussion a resolution was drafted favoring the Sunday opening movement, as shown below:

"BE IT RESOLVED, That in view of extraordinary local conditions due to the presence of the soldiers, we believe that, if possible, it would be desirable to have the motion picture shows open on Sundays from 1:30 to 10:30 P. M., provided that the films be well censored before exhibition."

The resolution was adopted, it having been previously shown to members of the board that army officials were strongly in favor of running the moving picture houses on Sunday. The theaters opened again Sunday without interference or molestation of any kind from city or county authorities and it is the general belief in this section that those having power to act will offer no resistance to the Sunday opening plan, due to the fact that the United States Government favors the existing policy. Capacity houses were in evidence at all performances during the Sundays when the shows have been open.

Mushroom Town Near Military Camp.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—One of the so-called mushroom towns which spring up near the scene of activity incident to great industrial prospecting or military booms, has been brought into prominence at the southwest corner of the Chickamauga military reservation, near Wilder Station and Wilder monument. Investors and realty companies have taken all the land in that vicinity and amusements of every conceivable character have been included in the "town's" establishment, including a carnival and midway, together with a new theater costing $10,000, electric light plant, etc. The theater was erected and will be under the direction of the Albert Amusement Company, a recently organized corporation with a capital stock of $25,000. It will have a seating capacity of 3,500. Incorporators of the Albert company are as follows: Will Albert, O. F. Pennypacker, W. V. Turley, H. H. Miller and F. E. Stoops. It is proposed to make the town permanent, even after the troops are gone, as it will form an ideal picnic site. Moving pictures, of course, will come in for a full share of honors in the amusement line.

Memphis Sunday Appeals Passed.

Memphis, Tenn.—Appeals of moving picture theater managers who were recently fined in the City Court for running their houses on Sunday have been passed for the term in Circuit Court. A number of managers were repeatedly arrested several weeks ago for keeping open their theaters on Sunday and were fined by the City Judge, but all efforts to indict the proprietors failed. The agitation was the result of activities on the part of the Protestant Pastors' Union, but since it was agreed to turn the Sunday receipts over to charity, the theaters have been running without interference.

Orpheum May Substitute Female Help.

Memphis, Tenn.—Owing to the shortage of male help on account of army enlistment, and the still greater scarcity which will be in evidence after the conscription plans get to working, theaters on the Orpheum Circuit are being instructed to employ young women wherever possible to fill the places left vacant in clerical, box office and ushers positions. Manager Arthur Lane of the local Orpheum interests has under consideration plans to fill the vacancies by young women, as over a dozen of the male employees of military age have already left the Orpheum theater here for war service.

That the Orpheum Circuit contributed its bit to the Red Cross fund is demonstrated in a report recently received by Manager Arthur Lane from the general offices in New York, showing that over $10,000 was contributed from the booking department alone, aside from individual subscriptions from employees. The Orpheum Circuit operates two houses in Memphis, both of which are showing feature films in connection with vaudeville.

"Tank" Pictures Run Strong.

Nashville, Tenn.—Official Government Pictures, Inc., releasing through Pathe, placed their war feature, "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre," in Nashville for a two days' run, at the Crescent theater, where the pictures made a profound impression. The Crescent Amusement Company increased the admission to 20 cents, and the newspapers carried extensive advertising for several days.

Manager Lane's Matinee Parties.

Memphis, Tenn.—Manager Lane of the Orpheum has brought an innovation to Memphis in the form of "matinee parties," at which time the patrons to his house are served with cold drinks in the lobby before seeing the show. On the occasion of its establishment, more than a dozen gallons of ice cold sherbert lemonade were dispensed from the huge cut glass punch bowl in the lobby which, incidentally, was beautifully decorated with large vases of cut flowers. It is the purpose of the management to continue this feature throughout the summer season, and its popularity has already been evidenced.

Tennessee News Items.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Five-reel features are shown at the Officers' Reserve Training Camp, Fort Oglethorpe, on Saturday nights, for the benefit of the men encamped there. The pictures always prove one of the most popular entertainment features of the camp life.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Orpheum theater is furnishing free admission on Saturday afternoons to inmates of the various Memphis charitable institutions. Last week the orphans from the Wesley House were the guests.

A short time ago he went to Pittsburgh, his home, on a personal business matter, and it was while there that he decided that he would like to see service abroad. Metro Will Handle Chaplin Films.

Washington, D. C.—It has just been learned on good authority that the distribution of the Charlie Chaplin films, to be turned out for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, will be handled in Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia through the Metro Film Service Company, of this city. L. M. Day is the president of the local Metro exchange, and it is understood that he is going to give considerable personal attention to the distribution of these films. Screen Club Enjoys Big Outing.

DENVER, COLO.—At the weekly luncheon of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club it was planned to have its first semi-monthly outing on the heights of Lookout Mountain. T. Y. Henry, manager of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange, was the originator of the idea of making these trips, which are called "get-together outings." Following is the itinerary for the one held Sunday, July 8: All the members with cars met at a given point and picked up the boys who have no cars and proceeded to the summit of Lookout. A banquet was served at the hotel at Morrison on their arrival at that point. The rest of the afternoon was spent driving through beautiful Bear Creek Canon.

Mr. Murtagh has returned from his vacation, and rendered fine music for the production.

Many of these shots will be for [illegible] use in the War Department. After the alterations are completed, it will be renamed the Hippodrome, this being a favorite name as he owns a Hippodrome theater in Pottstown and also in York, Pa. The typhoon fan ventilating system is used in all his theaters, eight fans having recently been installed in the York theater.

Takes Pictures of Atlantic City for Publicity.

Atlantic City, N. J.—First steps in a campaign of publicity for Atlantic City which the originators hope to make nation-wide, were taken Wednesday, July 4, when a complete motion picture panorama of the entire island was filmed from the roof of the St. Charles Hotel. W. H. Keates and F. W. Humphreys, local representatives of the Universal Motion Picture News, are in charge of this campaign, and the picture made on the Fourth was filmed under their direction and with the co-operation of J. P. A. Finnegan, of the St. Charles Hotel. It will be shown in the near future at the City Square theater. This unique form of publicity will be kept up throughout the entire season. Everything of note which occurs in Atlantic City will be photographed and the films shipped broadcast all over the country. The next-picture will be a panorama taken from an airship.

Tolmas Reports Excellent Business.

Philadelphia.—B. R. Tolmas, manager of the Mutual exchange, recently returned from a tour which covered the coast along Atlantic City, Ocean City, Wildwood and Cape May. He found that the Mutual Service was in popular demand, especially so at the Regent theater in Wildwood, which was running a Mutual program exclusively. Mr. Tolmas was accompanied on his tour by P. F. Glenn. They both enjoyed the journey immensely. Mr. Tolman's car was used for the purpose, which stood up well on its maiden trip.

Majestic Institutes Campaign for Second Runs

Disregards Custom of Downtown Theaters Concerning Re-booking of Exclusive First Run Pictures—Begins by Showing Second Run Selznick Productions for Two Days.

By Dorothy Day, Tribune Register, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—The down town houses in this city, with the exception of the Family Theater, have been decidedly averse to exhibiting pictures that had been shown once before in another house. It has been impossible to book a picture second run only in very few cases, and the exhibitors have lost out on several mighty fine propositions as a result.

Manager O'Hare, who recently took hold of the Majestic theater, has at last set aside the hard and fast rule, and beginning the week of the 15th of July will show a second run of the Selznick pictures for two days each week. There is positively no doubt that all high class pictures can be shown again at lower prices to splendid advantage.

The Garden, which holds the first run right for Selznick productions, always charges from fifteen to twenty-five cents admission for the big features, and by charging ten cents the Majestic will catch all the unfortunates who did not see the first run, and many will grasp the opportunity to see their favorites a second time. Des Moines has been decidedly slow in taking up the second run policy, and one or two of the other houses could profit heavily on showing other pictures some time later, taking advantage of the first showing's heavy newspaper advertising and the even better word of mouth praise.

Darche Pays Visit to Des Moines.

Des Moines, Ia.—P. J. Darche, of Chicago, general auditor of the Laemmle Film Service, spent four days with D. B. Lederman, manager of the local Laemmle Exchange. Mr. Darche, accompanied by Mrs. Darche, came from Minneapolis, here. They left Monday, July 9, for Omaha. He reported business as being in fine shape in Des Moines and immediate vicinity.

Many Houses Closing for Summer.

Des Moines, Ia.—Many of the houses in the smaller towns over the state are closing during the hot weather. Others are cutting their service down to two to three days a week. Following is a few of the houses recently closed. The Odd Fellows, at Lytton, who have been operating a picture house in the I. O. O. F. Hall in Lytton; the Newell Amusement Company, of which C. J. Robinson is president, that has been running the Wonderland in Newell; the Commercial Club of Beaman, which has been operating the Opera House as a picture theater; M. J. Coleman, of the Opera House in Melrose, and H. H. Milang, of the Lyric, in Roland, have all closed down, and if war conditions continue to appear so dark it is not likely they will open for some time.

Heavy Bookings on New Pathe Serial.

Des Moines, Ia.—The local Pathe Exchange is jubilant over the success on the advance bookings on Pearl White's newest Pathe serial, "The Fatal Ring." L. A. Sheridan, manager of the Pathe, announces that they expect to duplicate the bookings on "The Iron Claw," which serial was shown in nearly every city in the state—big or little.

Garden Theater Redecorated.

Des Moines, Ia.—D. Damiani has just completed the re-decoration of the Garden theater. The Garden's walls are elaborately decorated in painted carvings and the color scheme has been changed from the old rose pink to a steel blue. Damiani has placed an elegant mural landscape in the back, and added new hangings in the exit doors over the orchestra. The work was done in the early mornings and late into the night, and the house was not closed at any time.

U and I Theater Changes Hands.

Des Moines, Ia.—The U and I Theater on the South Side formerly operated by A. W. Nichols, who also formerly owned the University theater in Drake University, has been sold to Nick Disalvo. Disalvo's two daughters will operate the U and I, having arranged with the A. H. Blank offices for Selznick pictures. The Misses Disalvo are two splendid business women, and great success is predicted for their venture.

Blank to Distribute Selznick and National Circuit.

Des Moines, Ia.—A. B. Blank left for New York City to finish up the final arrangement for the releasing of the Charles Chaplin pictures in Iowa and surrounding territory. He will also arrange for the complete handling of Selznick and productions purchased by the First National Exhibitors Circuit in his Des Moines office in the Garden Theater building. Heretofore the Des Moines office has handled only the bookings of some paper, shipments being made out of Kansas City. John L. Shipley will have the management of the office here, and exhibitors in this territory can secure the Selznick and Circuit pictures from this office.

Des Moines and Iowa News Notes.

B. J. Elbert, of Elbert and Getchell, managers of the Unique theater, a photoplay house, the Empress, pictures and vaudeville, and the Princess and Berchel, legitimate houses, has gone to New York on business pertaining to his houses.

Windelow and Clemmer, two students at Drake University, are arranging for service for the opening of their new house in University place, Des Moines. August 1 is the date for the opening if all plans can be carried out. Windelow and Clemmer formerly operated the Rex theater at Twentieth and Clark streets.

R. L. White, who was recently transferred to the Toronto offices of the K-E-S-E from Iowa, has been returned to Iowa with headquarters in Minneapolis.

A. Kahn, representative of the A. H. Blank enterprise in Iowa, has just returned from a most successful trip in the Eastern part of the state. He reports business great, a decided change from the earlier spring reports.

Standard to Handle West Comedies.

Des Moines, Ia.—Iowa and Nebraska exhibitors can begin booking Billy West comedies from the local Standard Exchange beginning either the 16th or the 23rd. Marty Williams attended the meeting of several Standard managers in Chicago last Sunday at which meeting the first three West comedies were exhibited.

Fowler Operating Three Successful Theaters

Starts in a Small Way Some Years Ago in St. Helena, Ore.—He Now Has Three Prosperous Houses to His Credit—Is Building a $12,000 Structure in Montesano, Wash.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—The most important qualification for the making of a successful exhibitor is persistence, according to Herman Fowler, owner of three motion picture theaters in Grays Harbor County, Washington. Throughout his career as an exhibitor Mr. Fowler has succeeded where others have failed by just sticking to the job. He has always had an assistant and partner in the business, Mrs. Fowler, whose encouragement has had a great deal to do with his success. In 1908 they started a theater in the small town of St. Helena, Ore., but in six weeks the opposition manager saw that he had a dangerous rival and bought them out at a good figure. They went immediately to Castle Rock, Wash., where they found a half burned shack, which had been the picture theater; but a fire which started in the projection room and burned up the two reels of film that composed the show had caused the manager to bolt. Such was the reputation that theater managers had gained in that town that on the first day Mr. and Mrs. Fowler heard their landlady telling some one over the 'phone that they probably would remain only a week or two.

They had the half burned shack fixed up into a decent looking theater and opened their first show with 15 cents in their pockets; but they cleared $45 that first night. Mr. Fowler operated, and Mrs. Fowler sold tickets and sang the songs which were illustrated by colored slides. These slides and two reels of motion pictures composed the show. After two weeks Mrs. Fowler took pleasure in calling their landlady's attention to the fact that they were still there. Ten months later, however, they sold out at a good price and went to Elma, where they now live.

The Gem Theater in Elma was opened on August 13, 1909, and Mr. and Mrs. Fowler insist that 13 has always been their lucky number. As it was first opened the Gem seated 190. It has been remodeled and the capacity enlarged to 275, and the Fowlers now own and operate a Gem in the neighboring town of Montesano, which seats 350, and one in McCleary, which seats 200, and a new Gem is being built in Montesano to seat 600. When this is finished the old house will be closed. This is to be a concrete building and will cost approximately $12,000. Besides the theaters, the Fowlers also own a bill posting plant which does all the posting business in Grays Harbor County. Mrs. Fowler doesn't sell tickets any more, but she does all the clerical work of the business; and she makes it a point to keep in touch with the likes and dislikes of the patrons. She also reads the trade journals from cover to cover, and she motors up to Seattle with Mr. Fowler nearly every week to help him decide on features for booking.

Besides the population of the towns the Fowlers draw on a well settled community of thrifty farmers for their patronage, and they make good use of their bill boards in advertising their shows. Regular newspaper space is also contracted for in the town papers.

Goldwyn Opens Branch in Seattle.

Seattle, Wash.—C. F. Hill has established temporary headquarters for Goldwyn in Seattle at the corner of Fourth Avenue and Seneca Street. The new building at Third and Virginia Streets will be finished by the first of September, and the Goldwyn force will be ready for business by the ninth. The personnel of the force as it now stands consists of E R. Simpson and A. B. Cleland, salesmen. Miss F. E. Broadhead, stenographer; W. T. McCormick, booker; Miss Avis Jackson, inspector. The bookkeeper and several other members of the staff will be added later.

Harrington, formerly with the Seattle Mutual Office is in this city with "The Eyes of the World." This film is now being shown at the Metropolitan, a legitimate house. J. V. Lynn has turned over his duties on the Spectator, a local trade paper to Mrs. Hinsdale and is back at the Paramount office in his former capacity of publicity man. L. J. Schlaifer, president of L. J. Schlaifer Attractions, is on a tour of Montana. Guy Navarree, Artcraft road representative, has just returned from a trip to Spokane, where he reports a growing demand for Fairbanks pictures.

W. A. Mead, Fox road man, has charge of the Fox office during the absence of A. W. Eden in New York.

Goldberg Managing Selznick Exchange.

Detroit.—Harry D. Goldberg, formerly with the World Film Corporation in Atlanta, and at one time manager of the Casino Feature Film Company in Detroit, has been appointed Detroit agent for Lewis J. Selznick in place of D. Leo Dennison, who will be assigned other territory. Mr. Goldberg is making temporary headquarters at the Hotel Statler. An office will be opened after the legal entanglements between Selznick and Garson are definitely settled.

Butterfield Circuit Augmented.

Detroit.—Col. W. S. Butterfield announces a number of changes in his circuit. Frank J. O'Donnell, manager of the Majestic at Ann Arbor for two years, will go to the Majestic in Kalamazoo next season, while Will Marshall, formerly at the Majestic in Kalamazoo, will go to the Bijou in Battle Creek. It has not been settled as to who will cover Ann Arbor for Mr. Butterfield.

The erection of the new Palace theater in Flint, which will be devoted to vaudeville, means that the Majestic will play the big road attractions and the big film attractions. It will be the first time in two years that Flint will have had legitimate road attractions.

With his new theater in Flint, one in contemplation in Sagnaw, and two more in Battle Creek, the Butterfield circuit will be augmented to nearly twenty playhouses.

Detroit Dots.

Dave Mundstock, of the Strand Features, 94 Griswold street, has purchased the Terry Human Interest reel; also a series of cartoon burlesque pictures made by the same concern.

"Doc" Owens is back managing the Knickerbocker theater, Detroit, succeeding Mr. Martin, who has been sent to Kansas City to manage an amusement park for Frederic Ingersoll, of Detroit.

Elect New Officers for Associated Exchanges

I. W. McMahan, a Pioneer in Business, Is President—All Officers Are Active Members of Organization and Leaders in Film Work.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

CINCINNATI, O.—The annual meeting of the Associated Film Exchanges of the Chamber of Commerce for the purpose of electing officers was held on Friday, July 6, at the organization's headquarters in the Chamber, and the following officers were elected: President, I. W. McMahan, of McMahan & Jackson; vice president, W. S. Wessling, Pathe Exchange; treasurer, Mr. Penrod, of the Cincinnati Buckeye Film Company; secretary, H. Serkowich, of the Chamber of Commerce. All the new officers are active members of the Associated Film Exchanges, and leaders in film work, and the new president, Mr. McMahan, is widely known as one of the pioneers of the moving picture business in this section. He has the unusual distinction of being not only a leading film man, as a member of the McMahan & Jackson Film Company, but a prominent exhibitor as well as the firm controls several big houses, and he is thus closely in touch with both sides of the business.

Cox Interests Purchased by Theatrical Men.

Cincinnati, O.—Details of one of the most important theatrical transactions closed in the country in a long time was completed in Cincinnati a few days ago in the office of Ben L. Heidingsfeld, an attorney specializing in theatrical matters whereby the interests of the late George B. Cox in large moving picture and theatrical enterprises were transferred by his widow to the Messrs. Lee and J. J. Shubert and Jos L. Rhinock. Properties located in Cincinnati, New York, Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, Kansas City, St. Louis, Denver, Indianapolis, Louisville, Chicago and other cities are involved in the transaction as well as the Cox interests in the World Film Corporation and other producing and distributing companies. Mr. Cox was known to be one of the largest owners of theatrical properties in America at the time of his death, and these properties passed intact to the estate. The purchasers were personally present at the closing of the deal, and left at once for Indianapolis and Chicago to inspect some of the houses which passed to them. The sale is said to have involved an amount running well into the millions, but no figures were given out by any of the interested parties.

Universal Managers Entertain Miss Rodrigues.

Cincinnati, O.—"Universal Dora" arrived in Cincinnati a few days ago, on schedule on her walking tour of the country in the interest of recruiting service. A detail of regulars met her at Chester Park and escorted her to Fountain Square, in the heart of the city, and Miss Rodrigues then took up the program of daily talks in front of the Lyric Theater, to stimulate interest in recruiting. Local officers of the Universal entertained Miss Rodrigues during her stay in the city, and were immensely proud of her excellent work, which did much to enable the First Ohio, Cincinnati's home regiment, to secure the additional members necessary to bring it to war strength.

Urge Reappointment of Wilson on Censor Board.

Cincinnati, O.—Indicating a striking change from the feeling which existed when the Ohio Board of Censors was first appointed, when film men and exhibitors felt that the Board's activities would interfere with their business, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce have sent letters to Governor Cox urging the reappointment of W. R. Wilson as a member of the Board. The letters express the high opinion of the two organizations of the ability of Mr. Wilson, and their satisfaction with his work on the Board, and declare that his services have been of great benefit to the public, as well as fair to the moving picture business. Exhibitors all over the State have been asked by the [illegible] members of the trade to take similar action, and indications are that Mr. Wilson will be kept on the Board, as no opposition to his re-appointment is known.

McMahan & Jackson House to Cost $75,000.

Cincinnati, O.—Some confusion arose by reason of the recent report of the starting of work on the new McMahan & Jackson house on Sixth street, to the effect that the work would cost $22,000. This figure represents only the cost of the wrecking of the interior and the reconstruction necessary to put the building in shape for remodeling, and is only a fraction of the total cost of the new theater. The minimum figure set for the house complete is around $75,000, and McMahan & Jackson are beginning to believe that this will be considerably exceeded before the theater is turned over to them complete. However, they are not stinting their requirements in any degree, as they desire to make the house one of the most attractive in the downtown district of Cincinnati, and will let the cost take care of itself.

Pershing Picture Shown at Opera House.

Cincinnati, O.—The first moving pictures showing the landing of General Pershing and the first contingent of American soldiers in France were shown recently at the Grand Opera House as a special added attraction, and were received enthusiastically.

Strand Theater Reopened.

Springfield, O.—The Strand theater, which has been completely remodeled, has been re-opened under the mangement of Philip Chakeres, manager of the Princess, and has made an excellent start under its new management. The house is in a section which has not heretofore had a first-class house, presenting current features, and Manager Chakeres looks for unequivocal success for it.

Cincinnati Notes.

At a meeting of the Cincinnati Screen League held a few days ago plans were discussed for a membership campaign designed to add greatly to the size of the organization. It promises to be a hummer.

Lou Foster, formerly in the film business in Cincinnati, now a member of the Famous Players' Staff in Detroit, was in the Queen City a short time ago on business, and reported flourishing conditions in the automobile town.

The fine work done by Cincinnati exhibitors in helping along the Liberty Loan issue, and especially the enterprise of the Cincinnatians in presenting Secretary McAdoo's message on the subject to the industry, were recognized by him in a letter of thanks received a short time ago by H. Serkowich, secretary of the Exhibitors' League.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

Pennsylvania Censors Issue Drastic Edict

Prohibit Portrayal of Eliminated Portions of Pictures by Utterance or Other Methods of Communication.

Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Exhibitors of this state have received notice from the Board of Censors of a new rule that prohibits the portrayal in any manner of eliminated portions of a film. The order is regarded as an extremely drastic one, and film men are of the opinion that it will be declared unconstitutional. This latest edict of the Censor Board is as follows:

"Rule Number 27. When an approval is issued following the agreement of the applicant to make eliminations suggested by the Board, it shall be issued subject to the condition that no exhibitor of the film shall. in exhibiting same, produce any eliminated portion thereof by act, publication, utterance, or other means of communication."

It appears that the order is directed against theaters which have enacted eliminated portions of film productions on the stage with living actors. This move on the part of the Board has aroused much discussion among the trade, and the opinion prevails generally that the ruling will not stand in the courts because it attacks free speech and free press. It is also pointed out that the censors' duties are confined to the elimination of objectionable films or portions of films, and that their jurisdiction ends when this has been carried out.

Free Admission for Soldiers, Sailors and Marines.

Pittsburgh.—True patriotism was evinced last week by H. B. Kester, manager of the East Liberty Cameraphone theater, Pittsburgh, when a sign was placed over the box-office, "United States Soldiers Admitted Free; Also Sailors and Marines." The offer called forth considerable praise, as it is a distinct encouragement to the boys in khaki. This gift to the boys of Uncle Sam began July Fourth, and, according to Manager Kester, will continue indefinitely. "Bully for this theater," said more than one soldier last week as his uniform gained him admittance and he went into the theater for an hour's recreation, which, had he been compelled to pay for, he might have foregone.

Cole Joins Leader Film Service.

Pittsburgh.—Al. Cole, formerly with the Pittsburgh Pathe exchange and the Liberty Film Renting Company, has been appointed manager of the Leader Film Service, 804 Penn avenue. Mr. Cole is a film man of broad experience and has a large acquaintance among exhibitors of this section. The Leader Film Service, which has been in existence only a few months, reports trade extremely active. Among other new contracts, the Victor theater, McKeesport, has arranged to show the Leader subjects.

Hippodrome Reopened by J. Mans.

Grafton, W. Va.—The Hippodrome theater, which has been dark for some time, was taken over recently and reopened by J. Mans. Assails Work of Maryland's Censor Board

Miss Turnbull Favors Pictures as Form of Entertainment but Decries "Indecencies and Immoralities Allowed to Creep In"—Reformers Make Attempt to Prevent Re-appointment of Censor Harper.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mount Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—It seems that whenever the reformers who go about prying into other people's matters with an idea to a great moral uplift find a dull period on their hands, they invariably turn to the motion picture to amuse themselves. Of course, they may be in good faith with the action they are taking, but in view of the fact that a censor law has been passed, and the Governor of Maryland has appointed people of high standing to act on the Censor Board, it does not seem at all necessary that their work should be interfered with.

It has now come time for the re-appointment of Charles F. Harper, of Salisbury, Md., to the Censor Board. Governor Harrington was about to proceed with the formality when a small delegation appeared and requested that he be not re-appointed because the censored pictures have not been as pure as they (the committee) think they should have been. Miss Grace H. Turnbull, an artist of Baltimore, says "I am not opposed to motion pictures as a form of entertainment . . . for I recognize their place in supplying amusement and diversion to the masses of the people . . What is objected to and what ought to be corrected immediately is the indecencies and immoralities that are allowed to creep in." She goes on to state that the board should not savor of politics and that the incumbents should give their entire time to the work and that eliminations should be made by the censors instead of merely recommending the eliminations. Miss Turnbull should read the law carefully; the eliminations are not recommended, they are ordered. Beside Mr. Harper, Mrs. Thomas B. Harrison and William F. Stone are members of the Censor Board and have been doing excellent work.

The petition, which was signed by men and women of prominence, follows, as it was mailed to the Governor: "In view of the fact that you are about to make a fresh appointment on the Board of Motion Picture Censors, and that the office is one dealing solely with moral questions, we, the undersigned, most respectfully and urgently request that the person thus appointed be one who has already in some substantial way shown his interest in the moral welfare of our community and will devote the whole of his time to this work, the importance of which can best be measured by the thousands in our city and State whose lives are so intimately affected by it for good or evil."

Among those who signed the petition are George L. Jones, secretary of the Henry Watson Children's Aid Society; U. P. Bradley, local Boy Scout executive; J. L. Cornell, of the Society for the Suppression of Vice and Eugene and Joshua Levering.

Lewy Conservation Film a Success.

Baltimore, Md.—"Fighting at Home" is the name of the Food Conservation film which has been produced by Harry Lewy, co-proprietor of the Great Wizard theater of Baltimore, and directed by J. A. Barry, formerly with the Triangle Fine Arts. This picture was given a premiere screening at Ford's Opera House on Friday, July 6, throught the courtesy of John T. and Charles E. Ford, the owners, and it is understood that consensus of opinion was very favorable. National Food Director Hoover was invited to attend the initial performance, but could not be present. In this film are seen many of Baltimore's prominent social people. Mayor Preston and his entire family take a prominent part. The plot deals with two lads who go to enlist. One is accepted, while the other is turned down owing to physical unfitness. The soldier is at first considered the hero, but later the other wins laurels by directing food conservation and planting.

Pictures Aid Railroad Inspection.

Baltimore, Md.—Each day that goes by sees further development of the motion picture, not only in the amusement, educational or advertising line, but as an aid to the industrial leaders throughout the country. Recently at a staff meeting of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad officials at Deer Park, Md., a film of part of this system, which was taken from the observation end of a train, was shown and made a great impression. President Daniel Willard was present when the pictures were shown and the idea struck him that as the pictures show so clearly and accurately the condition of the track and the rolling stock, it would save the expense and trouble of inspection trips by having a cameraman take pictures of the road. It is expected that this road will shortly institute a special department to take care of this work.

Mr. Warner was taken sick last September and was forced to retire from active service as leader of the orchestra at this theater. For 30 years he had been connected with theatrical interests.

Seligman, who has piloted the affairs of this house for about a year with success, it is understood, will return to his home city, Philadelphia. It is not definite who will take charge of the house, but rumor has it that J. J. Hartlove, who formerly managed this theater for some time, will again take it over.

Additional to these Mr. Ruffner has started something new in lobby displays, at least for this section. The glaring one-sheets or three sheets and the frames of still pictures have been discarded for terra cotta pedestals surmounted by huge boxes of flowers in bloom. The pedestals are in cream and blue, giving a pretty effect. The attractions are announced on these pedestals. He has also provided a private projection room fully equipped with screen and machine where pictures may be shown him instead of the feature men having to run them off in the theater after hours or before hours.

Hedderich Leases Queens Theater—Will Give Sunday Shows.

Owensboro, Ky.—A. C. Hedderick, formerly in the moving picture business at Evansville and Howell, Ind., has leased the Queen theater, of Owensboro, Ky., from George A. Bleich, who operates two other houses in the city. A short time ago it was announced that Mr. Hedderich had arranged to come to Owensboro to manage the house, but leasing it was a later development.

Manager Hedderich announces that performances will be given every Sunday afternoon, closing at 7 o'clock, so as not to interfere with church services.

Commendable Advertising Scheme.

Louisville, Ky.—For more than a year now a special page in the Sunday Courier Journal has been devoted to the doings of the Mary Anderson and Strand theaters. Each week the photograph of some prominent screen artist is reproduced under the heading, "Our Gallery Stars," and a coupon is inserted in the paper each week, and the picture of whatever star proves most in demand is printed. The four center columns of the paper are given over to news of the players, plays, and answering various inquiries, while two columns to each side of the sheet are devoted to the theaters, the Strand occupying two columns and the Mary Anderson two columns. Here the bill for the week is given, and various comments on films to be shown later, etc.

Moore & Dean Open Big Theater in Berkeley

U. C. Photoplay House Has Many Distinctive Features—Seats 2,000 Persons, and All on One Floor—Equipped with $25,000 Fotoplayer.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North street, Berkeley, Cal.

BERKELEY, Cal.—The U. C. Theater, University Avenue, near Shattuck, was opened on the evening of June 30 and has since been doing a volume of business that has been a pleasant surprise to the management. This new house, the seventh of its kind in the College City, is one of the largest in the east-bay unit of the Greater San Francisco, and in many ways marks a breaking away from the old accepted ideas of moving picture theater construction. Its most distinctive features are the seating arrangements, two thousand persons being accommodated on one floor, without a post to mar the view and the noticeable absence of gaudy decorations.

The auditorium of the new U. C. Theater is one of the largest in the country, being one hundred and forty-five by ninety-one and a half feet in size. This runs parallel to University Avenue, but is separated from that thoroughfare by a two story brick structure built separate from the theater, but corresponding to it in design, thus making it free from traffic disturbances. The foyer is twenty-five by ninety-one feet in size, carpeted in a fine grade of Wilton, as are also the aisles, potted plants and oil paintings of distinctive merit lending it an unusual charm. At the end of the foyer is the rest room for women, furnished with rich carpets, upholstered reed furniture and fine draperies, the color scheme being in blue and gold, the colors of the State University, a scheme, by the way, that is followed throughout the house. The main vestibule of the house is fifteen by thirty-five feet in size and the lobby is twenty by thirty-five feet, both being a study in marble, potted plants and cages of canaries being freely employed to add to their charm.

The marquee is one of the interesting features of the exterior and extends the full width of the house to the outer edge of the sidewalk. It is supported by pillars with a monogram formed of the letters "U. C." cast in them. Above it is a large round house sign that can be seen for a long distance, and the entire front is brilliantly illuminated. The facade is of tapestry brick, relieved by tiling. The manager's office is off the lobby, near the front, and here is also a smoking room for men.

While a ticket office has been provided the pay-as-you-enter system is being used, the equipment having been furnished by the American Coin Register Company. The operating room on the mezzanine floor would be a source of pleasure to any moving picture operator, being exceptionally large and airy, with splendid facilities for ventilation. Two Powers Cameragraphs No. 6B are installed here, with a double stereopticon, and all the latest ideas in regard to controls, film storage and rewinding. In a separate room is located the Westinghouse motor-generator set, while adjoining this is a wash room for the use of the operator. The screen is of local manufacture.

Music is furnished by a $25,000 Fotoplayer, the largest ever built by the American Photo Player Company, the instrument occupying two organ chambers thirty-five by fifty in size. The sound comes through two Grecian grills of attractive design located on each side of the stage. Frank Van Derzee is the head organist and rendered the Schubert Overture, arranged by Suppe, as the opening offering.

The seats in the U. C. Theater are wide and roomy and are of the spring edge variety, these having been furnished by C. F. Weber & Co. The end seat standards carry out the college spirit, being cast with a football and the college monogram. The ventilating system is an especially efficient one, the air being forced in and drawn out without any possibility of a draft. The heating plant is located in a separate building. The lighting system is an indirect one throughout the house, the main auditorium securing its illumination from ten attractive boxes on the upper side walls which cast a warm glow on the attractive ceiling.

The house is furnished with nine exits and there is an eight foot runway on three sides, enabling it to be emptied on short notice. That it can also be filled quickly was demonstrated on the opening evening when every seat was occupied within twenty-three minutes after the doors were opened.

The U. C Theater is being conducted by Moore & Dean, under the direct management of A. H. Moore, who is well known here through his former connection with local houses. Late in July Manager Moore will present "Joan the Woman," with Geraldine Farrar, for three days at a Red Cross benefit.

Turner & Dahnken Sells House.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Reno, Nev. house of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit has been sold to Hurst Bros., who conduct the Grand Theater in that city. The transfer was made by the local concern on account of the price offered, the limited size of the field and the fact that it was so far away. The operations of this firm are now being confined to California, where nine houses are conducted.

Sells Several Houses.

San Francisco, Cal.—Fred Frisk, who conducts the United Theater Exchange, has effected a number of transfers of late, having sold the Unique and the Empire Theaters of Napa, Cal., to Ernest Rosenthal, the Varsity Theater, Berkeley Cal., to Roeder & Lange, and the Empire Theater of San Jose to E. Jones.

Whitaker Sees "The Planter."

San Francisco, Cal.—Herman Whittaker, the novelist, motored to Reno, Nev., recently to witness the premier presentation of "The Planter" at the Grand Theater. This was shown in Nevada first on account of the fact that it was made by the Nevada Motion Picture Company, backed by Reno capital. The production met with a very flattering reception.

Pioneer House Sold.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Grand Theater, one of the oldest in this city, having been built before the fire of 1906, has been sold by C. Floodberg to Taubner Goethe, who was formerly in the real estate business at Sacramento. Mr. Floodberg is shortly to be married to an attractive heiress of this city.

Abolishes Charge Accounts.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Western Poster Company has inaugurated a rule that in future charge accounts will be done away with, owing to the expense and labor entailed in bookkeeping, and that cash must be paid for all slides, posters and supplies.

Goldberg Visits San Francisco.

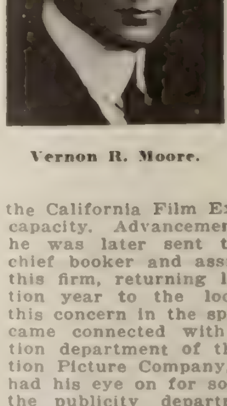
Moore Winning Deserved Success.

San Francisco.—Among the young men in the film world of the Far West whose work during recent years has been such as to attract the attention of the leaders in the business is Vernon R. Moore, director of publicity for the Progressive Motion Picture Company, of San Francisco. Although but little past his majority, Mr. Moore has made the most of his advantages and his association with progressive business men for years, together with a special training along the lines he is following, gives him an experience not enjoyed by many much older.



Vernon R. Moore.

He first became interested in moving picture work while filling a position with the Post-Intelligencer, a leading paper of Seattle, Wash., and resolved to get into the distributing end of the business. He came to San Francisco in 1913 and entered the emlpoy of the California Film Exchange in a minor capacity. Advancement was rapid and he was later sent to Los Angeles as chief booker and assistant manager for this firm, returning late in the Exposition year to the local office. Leaving this concern in the spring of 1916 he became connected with the sales promotion department of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, a position he had had his eye on for some time, and when the publicity department was created last October he was placed in charge.

Since his association with this concern he has assisted in some of the biggest booking campaigns and his, frequent trips on the road have acquainted him with the needs of exhibitors and the local conditions that must be met at different places. The work that he has done in assisting exhibitors to secure desirable publicity has attracted wide attention and many of his suggestions have been adopted as a part of the established policy of a number of houses. He is a member of the One Hundred Per Cent. Club of San Francisco, an organization of live salesman, and is doing his best to deliver the maximum in efficiency.

Cleveland News Letter

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Cleveland Exchanges Centralize.

CLEVELAND, O.—With the opening of three exchanges in the Standard theater building, this city will have all of its film exchanges and supply houses centered within one street—Prospect avenue.

The Standard theater building is just across the street from the Belmont building and the little Flatiron building, wherein are housed the Victor and Bluebird film exchanges, the Mutual, World, Fox, Pathe and other companies.

On the third floor of the Standard theater building the Famous Players film service will open an exchange, while on other floors will be located the new Goldwyn company's branch and the General Film company. The latter will move from its present location at 10[illegible] Superior avenue, N. E.

The Oliver Moving Picture Supply company also will move the week of July 16 from its location near the General Film company's present location to the Corona theater building, Fifth floor. This building is next to the Standard theater building, and opposite the Belmont building.

All of the new exchanges or removals will be completed by the latter part of August, according to the present indications.

The other buildings housing film folks are the Sincere, two blocks east of the Belmont and Standard theater buildings, and the Columbia building one block east of the Sincere.

This, therefore, will save exhibitors from both Cleveland and out of town many steps and a huge amount of time. They will be able to start at Ontario or East Ninth streets and make all their stops without leaving Prospect avenue. The film district will thus be brought into a compass of four blocks.

Screen Club's Executive Committee.

Cleveland, O.—The executive committee of the Cleveland Screen Club as announced last week by President Emory N. Downs, is composed of the following: E. A. Eschmann, branch manager for the World Film Corp.; H. A. Bandy, branch manager for Goldwyn; George Cole, Cleveland Leader; M. A. Lebensburger, of the Selznick Enterprises, and M. A. Phelos Retires from Publishing Venture.

Elyria, O.—Milton Phelos, formerly a theater manager of Columbus, O., and who recently started a local trade paper, has retired from the publishing venture, and is now managing the Strand theater here, formerly known as the People's.

Great Time at Screen Club Affair.

Cleveland, O.—The Cleveland Screen club held its first picnic of 1917, Wednesday, July 4, at Brett's Lake, near Akron, O. There was a large attendance and everyone had a "big" time.

A long stream of autos assembled at East 55th street and Euclid avenue at 10 a. m. for the trip of 40 miles to the picnic grounds.

On the grounds there was a ball game between the exhibitor members and the exchange members, but it was impossible to keep track of the score, due to a duplication of umpires, of which there were plenty, all of whom made it their business to give the worst decisions possible. The theater men claimed the game 49 to 8 while the exchange men were more modest and said the score was 16 to 14 in their favor.

After an afternoon of games, swimming, fishing and other amusements, there was a fine fish and chicken dinner at Young's Hotel, at the lake, and then the procession started back home, reaching Cleveland just before dark

ESSANAY.

SEVENTY AND SEVEN (A Black Cat Feature—Two Parts).—The cast: Buddie (Ellis Paul); Hiram Beatty (Julien Barton); Si Scroggs (Patrick Calhoun); Jane (Helen Ferguson); John (Mark Elliston).

Hiram Beatty, an impoverished civil war veteran, and his grandson, Buddie, are ejected from their little home by Si Scroggs, a tight fisted farmer, for non-payment of rent. Beatty is the holder of some mining stock which he thinks is worthless. The farmer, however, learns it is of great value and seeks to steal it. In this he is frustrated by Buddie, who, armed with a musket, guards the stock and his grandfather. Jane and John, hired by Scroggs, learn the truth about the stock and inform Beatty. The sale of the stock brings happiness to all four, and the downfall of the miserly farmer.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

A LITTLE SPECK IN GARNERED FRUIT (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Kid McGarry (Carlton King); His Bride (Nellie Spencer). Directed by Martin Justice.

The bride breathes a wish. "Precious," she lisps, "I think I would like a peach." The husband, Kid McGarry, champion welterweight of the world, solemnly rises to his lady's bidding. Forth like a knight he fares into the wintry streets, and then realizes the apparent hopelessness of wresting a peach from those chill February streets and shops. Everywhere it is the same—millions of oranges but no peaches. The kid knows of one place where lavishness is the order in the entertainment—that is Denver Dick's gambling place. Willing to go to any extreme, even a violation of the code of the sport, to gain the peach for his bride, the Kid goes to the police station and offers to lead a raid on the gambling joint. He does so, has a hot fight with Denver Dick, gets battered—but gains a peach, having the happy fortune to find one lonely beauty that has escaped the epicurean paws of the followers of chance. He hurries home with it. Into the lap of his bride he places it. "Naughty boy," she says fondly. "Did I say a peach? I think I would much rather have an orange!"

THE GIFTS OF THE MAGI (Two Parts).—The cast: Mr. James Dillingham Young (Mr. William Dunn); Mrs. Dillingham Young (Miss Patsy De Forest); Hair Dresser (Claire McCormick). Story by O. Henry. Directed by Brinsley Shaw.

"Life is made up of sobs, sniffles and smiles." Delia sobbed the day before Christmas when she counted pennies, nickels and dimes she had dropped into the little bank for Jim's gift. A twenty dollar a week salary doesn't leave much surplus. One dollar and eighty cents was all the bank would yield.

The powder followed after the cry and the mirror gave the inspiration. Her hair fell below her waist—fine and heavy. It would bring money. To a hairdresser Delia hurries. The hairdresser offers $20. Shorn of her hair, Delia spends the afternoon looking for a watch chain worthy of Jim's watch, left him by his father. Before Jim gets home Delia curls her short hair into little rings. Supper ready, she sits waiting, the chain in her hand to keep her courage up. When she hears him she whispers a prayer, "Please God, make him think I am still pretty." Jim comes in and looks at her, with a stupified expression of not understanding. She explains, but he looks about the room as if expecting to see her hair somewhere. She gives him the chain with a charming expression of love and Jim wakes up enough to express his thanks and to present his gift—a pair of long-coveted jeweled side combs bought with the price of his only treasure—the watch. The little "singed cat" and an adoring husband put their gifts of the magi away, but the spirit of them made happiness.

KALEM.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE (Episode of "The Further Adventures of Stingaree").—The cast: Stngaree (True Boardman); Howie (Hal Clements); "Gypsy Prince" (Frank M. Clark); Nellie Stearns (Edythe Sterling); Tom Banks (Jack Lott).

When John Stearns refuses to allow his daughter, Nellie, to marry Tom Banks because the latter's mother owes him money on her homestead in Australia, Tom decides to try his luck. Nellie promises to wait for him.

Stingaree and Howie find a stray lamb which has broken its leg, and carry it to the shack of "Gypsy Prince," a gambler, despite the latter's protestations. When "Gypsy" proposes a "game," Stingaree insists upon using his own dice. But "Gypsy" exchanges the dice unnoticed by Stingaree, who is consequently a heavy loser.

Returning to camp, Stingaree finds the dice were loaded. In answer to Howie's proposal of an immediate revenge, Stingaree says: "No. Howie, leave him to me. Some day my chance will come." Later, while holding up a stage, he finds "Gypsy" a passenger, and relieves him of his valuables. Tom Banks is also a passenger. He tells Stingaree he is penniless, and confesses he was on his way home with a thousand pounds when "Gypsy" won his money. He rides away, leaving word for Tom to clear out.

Stingaree sends a telegram to Nellie to come on the next stage. He signs it "Tom." Then he rides to "Gypsy's" shack and holds up the gambler. "Gypsy's" partner comes to his assistance, but Stingaree gets the better of the two and leaves with the thousand pounds.

Tom loses his way. Stingaree, following, fills Tom's canteen with water while Tom is asleep, pins a note indicating the way to the stage. He then holds up the stage, forces the driver to take a package and a note for delivery to "Tom Banks, whom you'll meet down the road."

Following Stingaree's directions, Tom reaches the road and hails the stage. He is astounded to find Nellie. The driver delivers the packages. One contains the thousand pounds, and the other a message: "Good luck. Stingaree." From a nearby hill Stingaree watches Nellie and Tom embrace.

PLOUGHING THE CLOUDS ("Pokes and Jabs Comedy").—Jabs is an aviation instructor Pokes loves fluffy haired Jennie Buchdough. Her parents think Pokes is just about right. She does not return his affection. Life holds no further charms and he seeks the river, but finds the water too cold. He decides to join the army and die on the battlefield. That will melt her heart. But the physical examination is too strenuous. He finally arrives in front of Jabs' aviation field, and Jabs takes him for a flight. While they are in the air Jennie and her parents arrive at the field. When the aeroplane lands Pokes is too wobbly to leave the machine. Jabs hurries to Jennie's side and she gives him a rose and her photograph. He tells her of his new pupil, does not mention Pokes' name, and says, "Watch me loop the loop."

He and Pokes ascend. Jabs loops the loop and does other stunts. Pokes says he'd rather get out and walk. Jabs takes Jennie's photo and kisses it. Pokes sees it and learns Jabs is his rival. He grabs Jabs and they fight. Jabs is thrown out and lands at Jennie's feet unhurt. Pokes has a terrible time alone. They beg Jabs to save him. Jabs agrees, loads the aero-torpedo cannon and shoots. The machine is blown to atoms, but Pokes floats gracefully down with his umbrella, through the skylight into the laboratory. The rest run out, but Jennie remains. Pokes recognizes her and folding her in his arms remarks, "Jabs is a good shot but I win the prize."

The King of Beasts.—The lion is one of the largest and strongest of the cat family. At six or seven years of age, Leo is full grown. He is a native of Africa, and parts of central Asia, and prowls chiefly at night for food. The voice of the lion is a mighty roar and the loudest call among animals. By nature, the lion is cowardly and disinclined to attack man, but when angered, or driven by hunger, it becomes ferocious.

The Lumber Industry.—The lumber industry constitutes one of the most important as well as extensive industries of the world. The leading lumber producing countries are the United States, Canada, Sweden, Russia, Germany and France. Goats Milk the Best.—Goats are valued for their hair, milk and the flesh as food. The skin is used for a variety of purposes and yields the leather known as morocco. The comparative food value of a goat's and cow's milk is that goat's milk has less mineral content and a larger percentage of fat. Goats rarely have tuberculosis and their raw milk is safer for children.

THE MAGIC OF MOTIVE POWER (Two Parts).—(The evolution of transportation from the coming of Columbus to the modern submarine.)

Aladdin rubbed his wonderful lamp and by magic transported palaces, but Aladdin's magic is no more amazing than "The Magic of Motive Power" that has been developed along the American continent. Columbus depended upon the trade winds to bring him to the discovery of a new continent. The Indians then invented the drag-pole method of transportation for long journeys. Then in the pioneer days came the stage coach and the prairie schooner which transported the path-finders across the Western plains. Then came the horse car, later the trolley car, then the trolleyless car and the elevated trains to transport the inhabitants of our larger cities and today steam locomotives pull veritable palaces across the continent as if by magic. Then came the hydro-aeroplane and the submarine. Later thes various epochs are presented in the film.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE GRAY GHOST (Episode Five—Two Reels—Rel. Week of July 23).—Marco has gone to headquarters to try to trace his employer, Wade Hildreth, who has disappeared. Jerry Tyron, the detective who has lost his job for believing that there is such a person as the Gray Ghost, goes to the hospital to interview the waiter Jacques, who was hurt in the fight at Bishop's. He finds that it will be some time before the man can speak, and does not know where to turn for a clue.

Arabin, the jeweler, returns from his trip and enters his private office, where his secretary, Williams, is waiting for him. The jeweler opens the safe. Williams strikes him down, takes the necklace, and then props Arabin up in a chair. Outside the store, in the meantime, two auto trucks have driven up, and the drivers are examining their engines, apparently for engine trouble.

Inside the store are several of the Ghost's men buying and looking at goods, and strolling about looking at the cases. At exactly ten o'clock, the secretary, Wiliams, sends the stenographer out. The office boy comes in with a card from a Detective agency. Wiliams says that the men are to be taken to the vault, and shown everything. They are the Ghost's men in reality. The boy takes them to the vault. Then Williams tells the boy to bring all the store detectives to Mr. Arabin's office as he wants to see them all. They appear, and Williams holds them up with a gun, and backs them into the private office. They discover the body of Arabin in the chair, and try to telephone, but find that they are trapped.

The Gray Ghost leaves the actual robbery of the store to his lieutenants, while he embarks in a launch for his yacht. On board are Hildreth and Morn Light. She is in a faint. Hildreth is impotent, and the Ghost triumphant. He says, as he looks at his watch, "Well, my boy, I think the two million dollar necklace will very soon belong to me."

THE SOUL HERDER (Three Parts).—The cast: Harry (Harry Carey); John Marks (Jean Hersholtz); Jane (Fritzi Ridgway); Child (Elizabeth Janes). Scenario by George Hively. Produced by Jack Ford.

Harry is in jail and is miserable. When the sheriff lets him out Harry asks what he was put in for. The sheriff tells him about his shooting up the town the night before and orders him out of the town.

Indians on the war path meet John Marks, the minister, with his three-year-old daughter. John hides the baby and tries to parley with them. One shoots him. Harry sees the act and arrives after the Indians have left. The baby begins to cry. Harry is startled. She doesn't like his clothes and asks him to dress like her father, which Harry does. In a pocket he finds a letter to John from Jane, his sister-in-law, urging him to come to Buckhorn.

Harry arrives with the baby. Jane kisses him and he is embarrassed. He finds his new surroundings pleasant. But the next day trouble begins, when he and Jane meet Bill Young, one of his henchmen. Harry fights and Jane informs him he can't be her brother-in-law, for he would never have done such a thing; that he is unfit to touch his child again. Harry tries to explain.

Suffering from the effects of the trip, little Elizabeth falls ill and constantly cries for daddy. The doctor urges Harry to go to the child and Jane is glad to have him quiet the restless baby. He tells Jane though he isn't much on preaching, he will see if he can't make Christians out of some of these coyotes. On the following Sunday the doors of the church are thrown open. The populace only laugh and continue their revelry. On the fourth Sunday Harry goes to the saloon and tells the crowd he has come to coax them to church. Some start to argue, but become silent when Harry fires and forces them to pass out the door, after depositing their guns. At church he informs them that, having missed preaching to them for three Sundays, they will have a four-hour session. When three hours are up and a man has fallen asleep Harry fires near him, and tells him that they are not to take the place for a rooming house, or they will find there is truth in what he is preaching about fire and brimstone. A hat is passed, but only a dime is given, so Harry stands at the door and makes everyone donate. All blame Jane, and the following hight Bill, Vester and several Mexicans break into Jane's cottage and carry her away. The baby, missing Jane, goes to tell Harry Jane has gone. BUTTERFLY PICTURES.

THE PLOW WOMAN (Five Parts—July 2.)—The cast: Mary MacTavish (Mary MacLaren) Andy MacTavish (H. C. de More); Ruth MacTavish (Marie Hazelton); Lieut. Jack Fraser (Kingsley Benedict); Buck Mathews (Hector V. Sarno); Bill Mathews (Eddie Polo); Mary, as a child (Clara Horton); Jack, as a child (George Hupp); Trooper (Tommy Burns). Scenario written by J. Grubb Alexander. Produced by Charles Swickard.

Andy MacTavish, a stern Scotchman, held that women were slaves and needed no education. He was power supreme over his daughter, Mary, and his wife, whose failure to present him with a son damned her in his eyes. When she gave birth to another girl Andy became so violent that the frightened woman passed away.

Womanhood found Mary a willing slave to the sister whom she mothered. Lieutenant Fraser was like a brother to Mary and Ruth. Seeing the look of love in Ruth's eyes, Jack confessed his love. They forgot to tell Mary.

The railroad was planning to build through this country, and the squatters urged to protect their land by filing claims. MacTavish found Buck Mathews and his brother Bill, "badmen," had already jumped his claim. Buck went to the cabin, where he found Mary and Ruth alone. Mary attempted to protect her sister, and aroused the admiration of Buck. Fraser entered in time to force the half-breed to leave. MacTavish returned and accused Jack of stealing his claim, but Mary told her father that he had saved it.

A cyclone arose and Andy read from the Bible. Ruth furtively read from a book given her by Fraser. Her father demanded the book, and the girl refusing, he snatched up his whip. Mary and Ruth backed to the cabin door. A flash of lightning struck MacTavish, paralyzing him.

Buck determined to get Mary. One day he appeared as she was plowing the fields. She raised her whip and struck him.

Mary sent Ruth to school. Some months later she received a letter from the matron that her sister was not a proper associate for the other girls. Mary found Ruth was the mother of a baby boy. When MacTavish saw the child he promptly thought it Mary's, and ordered her from the house.

Fraser later tried to arrest Buck and a battle ensued, during which the building caught fire. Fraser was rescued by a troop of soldiers. Buck escaped and wrought up the Indians, who started to sweep over the prairie. They met Mary fleeing with the baby, and were about to murder her, when Buck saw the child. His white blood aroused, he fought, keeping Mary behind him, until rescued by Fraser and his troop. Buck, fatally wounded, died after being forgiven by Mary.

Fraser went to MacTavish's cabin and was surprised to find Ruth. MacTavish, believing him the betrayer of Mary, grappled with Jack and was about to strike him with a knife, when Ruth told her father she was Jack's wife and it was their baby Mary took away. MacTavish was pacified, and Jack set out to find the girl. Re-united, Mary took up her mission of service to the others.

HAMMON EGGS REMINISCENCES (Cartoon Comedy—Rel. Week of July 23).—Hammon Eggs is a retired actor, and he cannot do anything but act. He has a lovely time on the farm acting for the cows and hens. He wanders out and meets a lot of animals, who laugh at his recitations and his dance to Mendelssohn's Spring Song. The cow proves she can do better herself and proceeds to prove it. He sings an ode to the birds of spring, "Oh beautiful fish, oh birds of the sea, why do you always bite bites out of me?" One of the cows asks a hen for an egg, and then throws it at Hammon, whose recitations come to an abrupt end.

IN THE LAND OF LIGHT AND GLOOM (Dorsey Educational—On Same Reel as Foregoing).—India is the land of light and gloom. On the one side we see the luxury of the Rajahs, and on the other the grinding poverty of the people. All classes are very religious, and adhere strictly to caste and never intermarry. We see the Maharajah leaving his palace; he is the descendant of a line which has ruled the same land for twenty-two centuries. The Nizam of Hyderabad owns more elephants than all the circuses in America, and they are always hungry. They are used for processions, parades, tiger hunting, clearing the jungle and building purposes. We see the original "Gunga Dhin" watering the elephants. Kipling has immortalized him, and this is a perfect specimen of the type of watercarrier. The elephants love their bath. In the background we see a tomb. Whenever we see one in India we know that it denotes the grave of a Mohamedan, as the Hindus always cremate their dead.

NESTOR.

After a series of experiences that scare the colored valet nearly white, Edith and a girl friend arrive, Edith having made up her mind to make up the quarrel. The counterfeiters lock her in a room, but she is rescued by Eddie, and he sends for a minister and a policeman, the former for a little ceremony that he and Edith agree upon, and the latter for the crooks, who are now captured and bound.

Her bodyguard seize him and he fully expects to be boiled in their great pot. LooptheLoop becomes jealous of Priscilla, and Inbad prefers boiling to life with the missionary. LooptheLoop, however, saves him and takes him to her hut. Snagtooth then enters furtively and forces the sailor to accompany him to Priscilla, for she has promised him a plug hat if he could corral the sailor for her. Inbad escapes and is pursued by everybody. At last he jumps into the ocean and swims out of sight.

RED, WHITE AND BLEW (July 26).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); father (Louis FitzRoy); professor (George George); girl (Claire Alexander). Written and produced by Milton H. Fahrney.

The old professor, accompanied by his daughter and the young professor, arrive home from a trip, bringing with them a full blooded young Indian, upon whom the old professor intends making certain experiments. Jerry has been informed of their intended home coming and is at the train to meet them, but receives anything but cordial greeting from the old professor who intends marrying his daughter to the young professor.

Jerry and the girl, however, are not discouraged and try to plan a method of meeting. Chance favors Jerry by placing him in possession of the Indian's "other clothes" and the girl, supplying the paint from a box of water colors, he is soon the actual duplicate of the real Indian. They then inveigle the Indian into the wine cellar and taking advantage of his taste for "fire water," soon have him enjoying what he believes is his "happy hunting grounds." The only trouble with the plan is that he does not remain where they put him and "leaves the reservation." Then things happen and keep on happening, every one, including even the girl, taking Jerry for the Indian, or the Indian for Jerry, until the aid of the law is called upon to straighten out the tangle, and then even the law gets tangled.

of Prague, Bohemia, are extremely timely. These are shown in this issue. Prague is the ancient city of Bohemia, now having 400,000 Bohemian and 100,000 German inhabitants. The Charles Bridge over the Moldau River dates from 1357. Of the thirty statues on the parapets, the most famous is that of the nation's patron saint, John of Nepomuc, who was thrown from the bridge in 1383. Other views include the old Hussite Church, the Altenuschule Synagogue, San Salvator Church, the old Council Hall, and a fountain named after Franz I of Austria. There is a pretty picture of the gorges of Edmundsklamm.

The second section of the reel is devoted to the Tunisian town of Kairawan. It is a sacred city. The Mosque of the Three Gates was erected in the ninth century. It is interesting to note that this is the only Tunisian town in which the mosques are open to Christians. The Great Mosque, which contains many of the tombs of rulers of Tunis, is a beautiful structure. In it are 439 Roman and Byzantine columns, the spoils of the sack of many cities about the Mediterranean. The Mosque of the Companion is especially sacred, as three hairs of Mahomet's beard are buried here in the tomb of one of his companions.

"The Dauphines," a beauty spot of southeastern France, completes the reel. It lies at the foot of the Alps, and is a remarkably entertaining series of views.

REEL LIFE, NO. 65 (July 26).—When Gaumont releases this number of "Reel Life" several important motion pictures will be given to the screen. First, perhaps, comes views of the first government owned theater in America, the Sylvan theater at Washington, D. C. The pictures show the spectacular pageant with which it was recently opened, "The Drama Triumphant." The first dramatic efforts of man are seen in "The Dawn of the Drama." This is interpreted by the Noyes' Dancers. In order follow Serge Ourainsky of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, Mme. Tamaki Miura, Japanese prima donna, and a procession of goddesses and muses. Many prominent artists of the opera and stage who assisted in making the occasion a success are shown on the screen.

Madame Schumann-Heink has a model poultry farm in the El Cajon Valley, Cal. Here she raises chickens for the market, which she also supplies with eggs. It is a beautiful sight to see two or three thousand chickens of the same age, all of them white, let out of their pen for a run in a field. The various operations necessary for the constant vigilance to keep the farm on a successful basis are pictured. It is a most illuminating section for all who have never seen a poultry farm.

"A Dangerous Eagle Hunt" pictures the daring and successful effort to secure specimens of the young Golden Eagle for the Oakland (Cal.) Public Museum. The camera caught the men while making a venturesome hunt among the high cliffs of the coast range. The young birds, 60 days old, had a wing spread of five feet. The reel also has pictures of "Juvenile Craftsmen," rich children working in a Polytechnic Elementary school at Pasadena, Cal. The reel concludes with the customary "Leaves from 'Life.' "

LA SALLE.

A MATCH IN QUARANTINE (July 24).—Otto and Aunt Zasu live side by side and conduct their quarrels over the line hedge. Otto's niece, Matie, and Aunt Zasu's nephew, John, fall in love and are threatened with disinheritance by their kin unless they stay away from each other. John paints "Let's Elope" on Matie's dog and they get away from their watchful relatives.

On the way to the minister they notify the health department that there is smallpox at Otto's house and the inspectors arrive as Aunt Zasu is searching Otto's house for her nephew. The elopers steal the health department flivver and are arrested for speeding. After a night in jail, with Otto and Aunt Zasu spending the night in quarantine, they secure freedom through the efforts of their friend, the judge, who marries them outside the cell door. They bribe the health officers to lift the quarantine, and upon announcing their marriage are ordered from the house. The judge goes back to plead for them and Aunt Zasu orders him to marry her to Otto.

THE GREAT STANLEY SECRET (Chapter 1, "The Gypsy's Trust"—Four Parts—July 23).—The cast: Blair Stanley (William Russell); Vivian Stanley (Charlotte Burton); Quabba (William Tedmarsh); Louise Grafton (Rhea Mitchell); DeVaux (Ward McAllister): Watchman (George Ahern). Directed by Edward S. Sloman.

Arthur Stanley and his wife, Esther, are killed in a railroad wreck and their little son, Arthur, around whose neck is tied the Stanley jewel, survives, injured. DeVaux, friend and accomplice of Stanley's renegade cousin, Blair Stanley, who covets the jewel and the Stanley earldom, is on the wrecked train and discovers the boy.

Nearby with his camp of gypsies is Quabba, friend of Arthur Stanley. He discovers that DeVaux has substituted a dead boy beside the Stanleys and has carried Arthur Stanley to the hospital as an unidentified survivor. DeVaux cables Blair Stanley about the wreck and he starts from London for America to gain possession of the jewel, which DeVaux has stolen from the injured boy. DeVaux, fearing identification of the boy, steals him from the hospital. He is shadowed by Quabba. When DeVaux lays down the lad, wrapped in blankets, to douge the watchman, Qubba substitutes a log and takes the child to his camp. DeVaux hurls the log into the ocean.

Quabba takes the boy to Stanley Hall, Va., the Stanley home. DeVaux sees the child. Blair Stanley arrives and the jewel passes into his possession as Quabba watches the transfer. The gypsy steals into the room and there ensues a fight in which Quabba, in temporary possession of the prized gem, hurls it out the window. Quabba, ignorant that DeVaux knows that the boy is alive, turns him over to Louise Grafton, old friend of the Arthur Blairs.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION

MELISSA OF THE HILLS (American—Five Parts—July 23).—The cast: Melissa Stark (Mary Miles Minter); Jethro Stark (Spottiswood Aiken); Tom Williams (Allan Forrest); Cyrus Kimball (George Periolat); Dr. Brand (Perry Banks); Cutler Sanders (Harvey Clark); Sam Allison (Frank Thompson); Larry Watts (John Gough); Mrs. Sanders (Gertrude Lebrandt); Mrs. Watts (Emma Kluge);. Sally Smith (Ann Schaefer). Directed by James Kirkwood.

Jethro Stark lives in Crabtree Valley in the hills of Tennessee with his daughter, "Melissa of the Hills." Stark is a circuit rider, a simple preacher of the gospel with a mission to save souls and minister to the sick.

Stark's self denial is unappreciated by the feudist families of the mountain, chief among these being the Allison and Watts clans perpetually at war. Sam Allison, deputy sheriff and leader of the Allisons, has killed a Watts from ambush. The Watts gang swears to wipe out the Allisons.

Tom Williams, a struggling young lawyer practicing in Crabtree, is in love with Melissa. The latter reciprocates with childish affection. Cyrus Kimball, the village miser, a crabbed octogenarian, is fond of Melissa and unbends only to her.

The Allison faction of feudists becomes convinced that Preacher Stark is favoring the Watts faction because he nurses Watts children through an epidemic. Sheriff Allison dis-

TYPHOONS COOL & VENTILATE
TYPHOON FAN COMPANY 1544 B'WAY NEW YORK CITY

Pearl received the warning sent by the secret Order of the Violet God. Fifteen days were allotted her to return the diamond. She is deep in thought when Knox is announced. He informs her he has but five days left and now that she has the setting they must work together. Feeling confident Carslake has the diamond, Pearl and Knox visit his home. They see a queer little man entering. Stealing in they conceal themselves behind the curtain. The man tells Carslake he wants the diamond or he will tell what he knows about it. Pretending he is going to give it to him, Carslake opens his safe, turns around, fires and kills him. Knox rushes in and demands the diamond. Carslake presses a button, the safe doors close and he disappears. Pearl discovers a steel shutter has been slammed down on the window. Carslake sets fire to the house.

Tom Carlton is sent to report the fire. Carslake sees the Priestess and two Arabs enter the house. He hears Carslake tell one of his men after this fire he will be rid of all followers. The Priestess enters a room. Carslake locks the doors and pulls a lever; the walls begin to close in. Accidentally Knox touches a small protuberance in the moulding, the floor beneath gives away and Pearl and Knox fall into the room of the closing walls. Carslake throws himself upon Tom and knocks him unconscious. The walls have closed so they are crushing their occupants.

THE FATAL RING (No. 3, "Borrowed Identity"—Two Parts—July 22).—Suddenly Tom regained his senses and, staggering towards the lever, drew it back. The walls receded and all were saved. Knox, eager to escape, grasped Pearl and pulled her back, but Tom knocks him to the floor and carries Pearl out. Knox advises Pearl not to have anything to do with him, as he is after the diamond. Pearl warns Knox he has but three days left, while she has thirteen.

The next evening, Knox calls Pearl's attention to a girl who seems to be in distress. Pearl learns her brother has to have $5,000 by that night or otherwise he will do away with himself. Pearl consents to lend the girl the money, but to save his life they must leave at once as he is on his employer's yacht. Accompanied by Knox, Pearl boards the yacht. She discovers the brother is Carslake. Securing the setting from Knox, he has him locked up, while the girl locks Pearl in her room. Carslake and the girl take a motor boat to shore. Speeding along, Carslake is astonished to see Pearl pointing a revolver at him. She secures the setting and the diamond. Bending to tie her shoe-string, Carslake plunges into the water.

Tom Carlton hears a shot, jumps into a launch and goes in search. Pearl, accompanied by the police, arrive at the yacht and find Knox in a struggle. Pearl is about to be cast into the water when Tom saves her. Pearl gave the diamond to Knox. "Now that everything is cleared, I want to know why our lives were to be forfeit."

THE LAST OF THE CARNABYS (Five Parts—Astra—July 22).—The cast: Lucy Carnaby (Gladys Hulette); Gordon Carnaby (William Parke, Jr.); Lucy's Mother (Eugenie Woodward); Charles Etheredge (Paul Everton); John Rand (Harry Benham). Directed by William Parke.

Lucy's mother intrusts to her care the watching of Gordon, her younger brother. The name of Carnaby was held with great honor and reverence. Through generations it had never received the slightest stain and Lucy and Gordon, now the only survivors, it remains to them to uphold this priceless honor.

After the death of her mother, Lucy learned the home was heavily mortgaged and that they were on the verge of being penniless. Gordon seemed not to realize this and he went on night after night accumulating large bills. Lucy reprimanded him. John Rand, a wealthy broker, asked Lucy to marry him. Thinking of the circumstances she was in, she refused.

Gordon became indebted through gambling to Charles Etheredge, a crook, who had forced his way in society by his large fortune. Etheredge remembered that Gordon had a beautiful dog and, wishing to make some friend a present, agreed to accept the dog in payment. Gordon steals the dog; the dog escapes and returns. In search of the dog Etheredge comes to see Gordon, but meets Lucy. Immediately he becomes infatuated with her and asks her to marry him. Gordon enters and sees Etheredge trying to force his attentions upon Lucy. Drawing a revolver, he kills him. With one thought that Gordon might reform and save the family name, Lucy makes him escape while she takes the blame.

THE LITTLE BOY SCOUT (Five Parts—June 28).—The cast: Justina Howland (Ann Pennington); Thomas Morton (Owen Moore); Miguel Alvarez (Fraunie Fraunholtz); Elizabeth Howland (Marcia Harris); Luis Alvarez (George [illegible]).

Justina Howland lives in Mexico near the U. S. border with her uncle Miguel and his son, Luis Alvarez. The uncle plans to have Justina marry Luis in order to get the money which she will inherit. Matters come to a climax when Miguel sends for a priest and announces the marriage will take place at once. Justina escapes on the mule that brought the padre to marry her and crosses the border, where she is given shelter by the soldiers, under command of Lieutenant Morton. In the morning she tells her plan to get to her Aunt Betty in Lowell, Mass. The soldiers discover she can dance and get her to dance for them, taking up a collection to take her safely to her aunt.

Justina arrives safely and all goes well until Uncle Miguel makes the discovery of Aunt Betty's address on a photograph and comes to Lowell, bringing Luis with him. The two Mexicans arrive at about the same time as Lieutenant Morton's regiment. Betty is delighted to see her rescuer again, and when she learns that he is the 'local' Boy Scout Master, she envies the boy scouts and decides to become one of their number.

Miguel hunts up the local sheriff and brings him to Aunt Betty's home to capture the runaway. Miguel asserts that he is the girl's lawful guardian and will force her to marry Luis. One of the scouts has been hurt and brought to Aunt Betty's home, so Justina decides to put on his uniform and gets away through the window, while Aunt Betty holds off the searching party.

A long chase follows until Justina finds herself unable to go a step farther and breaks down. The pursuers catch up, and at the same time Lieutenant Morton, warned of Justina's fate, appears. The girl is leaning against a large stone (the state boundary mark) and she unconsciously moves to the other side of it, putting herself across the boundary of New Hampshire. For that reason the uncle is unable to take his ward until he secures a New Hampshire sheriff.

While this is being accomplished Morton secures the services of a minister and the little party is turned into a wedding procession, the Boy Scouts forming a lane of honor through which the latest recruit, plucky little Justina, and her new husband, walk.

She meets him in the person of Faith Fanshawe, whose automobile is broken down. Faith gives Barry a fifty-cent piece for repairing her machine. McGraw); Shamus O'Brien (Edward O'Connor); Old Man Cosgrove (George Henry); William's Mother (Helen Strickland). By Peter B. Kyne.

William Cosgrove, son of a wealthy pork packer, is the crack player of the Yale team. Heegan, a scout for the Giants, certain that he has discovered a new baseball star, rushes to McGraw.

Meanwhile, a stray ball has hit one of the dogs of "Madame de Montignon," a vaudeville star. "Big Bill" Cosgrove rushes to her with an apology. The lady proves tractable and hands Bill her card.

Bill misses his afternoon class and repairs to the theater. However, there seems to be a cloud on the horizon of his love, for he is confronted by a Frenchman who, from the wings, is sending a kiss to "Madame de Montignon." Bill learns that the beauteous Madame is not married.

Madame accompanies Bill to a restaurant. Bill learns Madame's real name is Leonora O'Brien and she is the daughter of a Chicago plumber. But Bill proposes, and is accepted.

Meanwhile, the act is supposed to go on in a few minutes. No Madame. The manager is nervous. The Frenchman suddenly has an idea and puts it into execution. Madame's maid can go through the act. She appears and makes a greater hit than her mistress.

Suddenly Leonora rushes to the theater in time to see her maid secure the audience's approval. Bill calls on his father and explains that he is in love. Father nearly collapses. Mother proves obdurate. Father calls on Leonora and tries to bribe her. Bill marries Leonora. Father promises to cut his son out of the last cent.

When they reach home a letter signed McGraw is awaiting Bill. He is offered a job with the Giants which he accepts. Father approves the news. Mother is shocked. She forces father to call on McGraw and proffer a sum

TO HONOR AND OBEY (Five Parts—July 14.)—The cast: Lorrie Hollis (Gladys Brockwell); Richard Hallam (Bertram Grassby); Marc Patton (Charles Clary); James Hollis (Joseph Swickard); Alphonse Kronin (Willard Louis); Rose Delvane (Jewel Carmen). Story by Olga Printzlau. Directed by Otis Turner.

Richard Hallam, a flashy, disgruntled individual who curses fate for his own shortcomings, proposes to Lorrie Hollis, and is accepted. Marc Patton, a wealthy broker, also loves the cabaret girl whom Hallam has won. Married life goes well with Lorrie and Richard until the latter loses his money in the stock market.

Part of Hallam's losses has been money which he embezzled. He is desperate, and persuades Lorrie to visit Patton and induce him to manipulate the market so that he, Richard, will be reimbursed. Patton consents and Hallam is made wealthy.

Later, however, Lorrie's husband hates her because of the price he thinks she paid for Patton's action. With riches, too, he loses his love for his bride of humbler days and forms an attachment for Rose Delvane. Domestic affairs become steadily worse. The crisis comes when Patton's former secretary, Barker, cries out in a restaurant where Hallam and Rose are dining that Hallam got his fortune on a tip "his wife bought from Patton."

Hallam drives Lorrie from the house. Patton seethes under Hallam's unjust treatment of Lorrie. At last, affairs in Great Western, the chief stock in which both men are interested, narrow down to a fight for supremacy between Hallam and Patton. The latter outmanoeuvres his rival and crushes him.

Rose promptly says good-night to Hallam when she finds his wealth gone, and Hallam ends his life by suicide.

Finally, Patton and Lorrie, together, find happiness.

DOWN BY THE SEA (July 16).—The cast: The Girl (Betty Compson); Her Father (Harry Rattenberry); The Boy (Harry Ham); The Other Girl (Ethel Lynne); The Tough Lover (Eddie Gribbon). Story by Epes Winthrop Sargent. Directed by Al. E. Christie.

Flirtatious Harry, in a soda parlor with his sweetheart Betty, sees Ethel and returns her smiles. Betty indignantly leads him from the place, but his promise not to repeat the offense smoothes her temper, and they become engaged. They take a trip to the beach with Betty's father, and Betty sees Harry in the company of a bevy of mermaids who have been diving and disporting on the sands. Harry explains the girls forcibly took possession of him. "I couldn't beat them off with a club, could I?" he asks with an injured air.

Betty agrees and leaves with the announcement that she has an engagement. While Harry returns to the bathing girls, she hurries to an employment agency and engages three lovers, who appear on the beach attired in bathing suits. While Betty thrums her ukulele the first sits at her feet and attracts the attention of Harry, who fears to object. When the third appears on the scene, however, he can restrain himself no longer. Engaging the swains in regular order, he places two of them hors de combat, only to be on the point of being himself exterminated by a tough when Betty saves Harry by planting a well-directed blow with her ukulele on the head of the other man. Harry resolves never to skid again.

WORLD PICTURES.

WHEN TRUE LOVE DAWNS (A Brady-International—Five Parts).—The cast: Susan Breville (Susan Grandaise); Robert Breville (Brenton Marchville); George Destray (Albert Signer); Paul Lancy (Paul Guide); Duchess of Breville (Marie Jalabert). Directed by Louis Mercanton.

Susan lives with her grandmother, the Duchess of Breville. Destray is a frequent visitor. Robert, Susan's brother, leads a gay life, while his chum, Paul, an artist, earns a meager living. Although deeply in love with Susan, Paul dares not aspire to her hand. Robert is warned that he is deeply in debt. When Paul hesitates to speak Susan tells him she has enough money for both. They become engaged. Robert stakes his all on Ajax, the favorite. The horse is beaten and Robert loses everything. He and Susan realize the estate must go to meet Robert's debts. Paul promises to work doubly for the happiness of Susan.

A few weeks later Destray, a disappointed suitor, returning, finds that the estate is for sale. On the day of the sale Destray buys the estate. He shows Robert the deed, explaining he did it because he loves Susan. Robert tells the Duchess. Susan overhears and rejects Destray's offer of marriage, because she does not love him. The Duchess must return Destray's gift. But realizing how her grandmother suffers, Susan tears up the letter of rejection and accepts his offer of marriage. She writes Paul pleading she makes this sacrifice because of her grandmother.

Two years later the Destrays are living in Paris. Susan feels neglected. Destray has little time to devote to his wife. Susan reads of Paul's success, goes to the exhibit and sees the painting of the ruined arch which he had made during his stay at the Breville estate. Paul becomes a frequent visitor at the Destray home. One day she visits Paul's studio. Destray calls on Paul to paint panels for his banquet hall, and finds Susan's glove. Susan writes Paul not to follow her to Breville, where they are going. Destray is surprised to learn that she is eager to leave Paris. Paul takes a cottage near the Breville home. Destray and Robert go to the quarries, and when they return Paul is with Susan and the Duchess. Destray believes he knows why Susan refused to accompany them.

Destray finds it hard to conceal his jealousy. He comes upon Susan locking papers into a drawer. Later Destray reads the letters and finds a picture of Paul and a diary in which Susan had written that, though she makes the sacrifice of her love for her grandmother, not all the kindness of her future husband will make her forget Paul. Destray realizes he is an obstacle to her happiness, and that she has tried to fight down her love for Paul, but it is getting too strong. Touched by her effort to do right, he replaces everything.

Susan tells Paul she cannot live a life of [illegible] she will go away with him. The following day Destray is shown where the blasting at the quarries is to be done. Paul notifies Susan all is ready for their flight. Destray watches Susan meet Paul. He overhears them say that they will be all in all to each other tomorrow. Susan returns and begins to pack.

At the quarries Destray connects the wires with a second charge, to produce a seemingly accidental explosion. Saying good-night, he kisses Susan's hand. His actions strike her as peculiar. During the night, apprehensive, she comes on him arranging the affairs of his estate. When she asks an explanation he reassures her.

Before leaving the next morning Destray hands a packet to the attorney. He tells Susan he is going to the quarries. He does not permit her to accompany him. Susan sets out for the quarry. Rushing she learns that Destray is on a nearby hill. She goes to him, but when he realizes that at any moment they will both be blown to pieces, he pleads with her to leave. She refuses, demanding an explanation. In despair, he is obliged to carry her off. A moment later an avalanche of stone and sand descends where they have left. She realizes her husband had tried to end his life. They return together. She cannot bring herself to ask his forgiveness but she writes "Forgive, I love you." He reassures her. She realizes only the path of duty leads to true happiness.

try, she accompanies a city fellow to New York.

Fitzhugh Castleton, wealthy, is tired of his lot. His fiance, Lydia Van Dusen, loves sports more than she does Fitzhugh. The night before their wedding Fitzhugh is insulted by Bobs, a sailor, and, his manhood aroused, proceeds to wipe up the street with him. With new respect Bobs extends his hand and a friendship springs up between the two.

To avoid a loveless marriage, Fitzhugh goes away with Bobs. On the pier he leaves his coat, in which is a letter asking the finder to notify his attorney of his death.

In New York, Sylvia is astonished when a brood of children and a wife come to greet her Romeo. Unwilling to acknowledge defeat, she wanders about and reaches the pier. Finding Castleton's coat she formulates a plan. She asks Crosby, whom she finds on a park bench, to marry her under the name of Fitzhugh Castleton. Showing him the signature of Fitzhugh Castleton, Sylvia has his assurance he can forge that handwriting to perfection. Sylvia presents herself to Castleton's attorney.

Crosby is arrested on an old forgery charge. After verifying her claims, Fitzhugh's attorney advises Sylvia she may draw on him for necessary funds until her late husband's will is to be opened. Later, established in the Castleton home, Sylvia is happy. Returning from Australia, Castleton and Bobs go to the Castleton home and, peering through the window, see a beautiful girl. After convincing the butler he is Fitzhugh Castleton, he asks who the lady is. He is told she is Fitzhugh's wife. Fitzhugh swears the butler to secrecy and becomes the gardener. Fitzhugh has learned to love Sylvia but finds it difficult to reveal his identity without branding her as an impostor.

Sylvia insists on riding a certain spirited horse, though the groom warns her that only the master could ride him. He runs to tell Fitzhugh, who follows. She is stunned by a fall and finds herself in Fitzhugh's arms. Crosby, released from prison, reads of the entertainment given by the widow of Fitzhugh Castleton and recalls his marriage to Sylvia. He calls and she is obliged to give him money. Sylvia realizes the falseness of her position. Though believing Fitzhugh a gardener, she would be willing to marry him, but cannot bring herself to confess her duplicity.

Fitzhugh realizes unless he obtains his will from the safe he will be compelled to reveal his identity to save his estate from his aunts, who are the beneficiaries. Sylvia comes upon him tampering with the safe and, believing him a thief, is heartbroken. But loving him she forgives. Crosby comes for more money. When Fitzhugh interferes, Crosby announces that Sylvia is his wife. Put out of the house, Crosby threatens to return. Hoping to be freed of the complications that have arisen, Sylvia returns to Lone Meadows. The attorney, coming to arrange the settlement of the will, is startled to find Fitzhugh alive. Crosby threatens to start a scandal unless he is paid for his silence. Della, his wife, believing he loves Sylvia, follows him and tells Fitzhugh Sylvia had given Crosby money to marry her under the name of Fitzhugh Castleton. The shadow of doubt concerning Sylvia's marriage cleared away, Fitzhugh resumes his position and goes to Lone Meadows. Despite his changed appearance, Sylvia recognizes him and rushes into his arms.

THE COOK OF CANYON CAMP (Morosco—Five Parts—July 19).—The cast: Jean the cook (George Beban); Silent Jack (Monroe Salisbury); Mrs. Jack (Florence Vidor); Marie (Helen Eddy); Marie's father (John Burton).

Jean, a French Canadian, presides over the kitchen in the lumber camp near Quebec. He is the life of the camp and as soon as his work is done in the morning he runs down to the beach with his mirror to signal Marie, his sweetheart, who lives across the lake with her father, and every night he paddles over to call, always pacifying the father with a plug of tobacco.

A new man comes to the camp to work as a logger and because he dees not have anything to do with the other men he is dubbed "Silent Jack." One night Jean discovers Jack in the woods crying. The sympathy shown by the French cook compels Jack to tell that his sorrow is caused by having caught his wife in the arms of another and hearing her confess her love for the other man and how he had left the house without word. Jean tells Jack that he has suffered a similar misfortune and induces Jack to write a letter for him, supposedly to Jean's wife.

Marie's father hears Jean tell Jack that he has a wife and tells Marie, who is heartbroken. Jean, with the letter, which bears no names, ransacks Jack's baggage the next day and discovers his address in Quebec. He takes the train to the city and gives the letter to Jack's wife, who [illegible] from her husband.

The wife returns with Jean to the camp and, through means of Jack's little boy, a reconciliation is effected and in gratitude Jack gives Jean a check for a thousand dollars. The two are married and with the money Jean goes to the city and opens the [illegible] of which he has dreamed.

THE LOVE THAT LIVES (Famous Players—[illegible] Molly McGill (Pauline Frederick); Harvey Brooks (John Sainpolis); Jimmy (older fellow) (Pat O'Mally); Jimmy (boy) (Joseph Carroll); Dora Palmer (Violet Palmer); Pete McGill ([illegible]).

Molly, scrubwoman, resolves that her little children shall have all the sweetness and joy [illegible] her mother [illegible].

Her baby daughter is run over and killed and her boy, lonely in his mother's and sister's absence, begins to form bad associations—so Molly, at bay, is driven to remind herself of an offer of one of the brokers at the office where she works—and she accepts his offer for the sake of her child.

Keeping her altered life a secret from the boy, she has him placed in a vocational school where he meets fine boys and begins to learn a trade. During all his schooling days, Molly keeps up her terrible sacrifice for her boy until he graduates, when she returns to the life of scrubbing floors, doubly hard after the luxury to which she has grown accustomed.

One day she reads in the paper of an heroic act of her boy who has become a fireman, and, unable to resist the temptation to see him once more, she goes to the station where he is and sees him, happy, among his comrades and talking to a winsome young girl, quite evidently his sweetheart.

This girl later seeks employment as a stenographer in the broker's office where Molly is again working and the broker seems to be attracted by her much as he had been by Molly. Molly keeps a watchful eye on the girl and when, one night, she is asked to work late, Molly hides in the closet of the broker's private office.

Just as she springs out to rescue the girl and a struggle ensues between the two women and the furious man, a fire breaks out in the building and even, as the man throws the keys out of the window to the street, ten stories below, the smoke penetrates into the private office and they realize their terrible predicament.

Molly kills the broker in self-defense just as her son, the fireman, appears at the window, having risked his life for his sweetheart, whom he knew to be in the building. When he recognizes his mother in the crouching figure of Molly, he is unable to decide which one to save, as he knows that there is time for but one.

Molly forces him to take the half-fainting girl, and, as he carries her down the ladder to safety and happiness, the mother's face shines, transfigured by a great happiness, that her sacrafice has not been in vain.

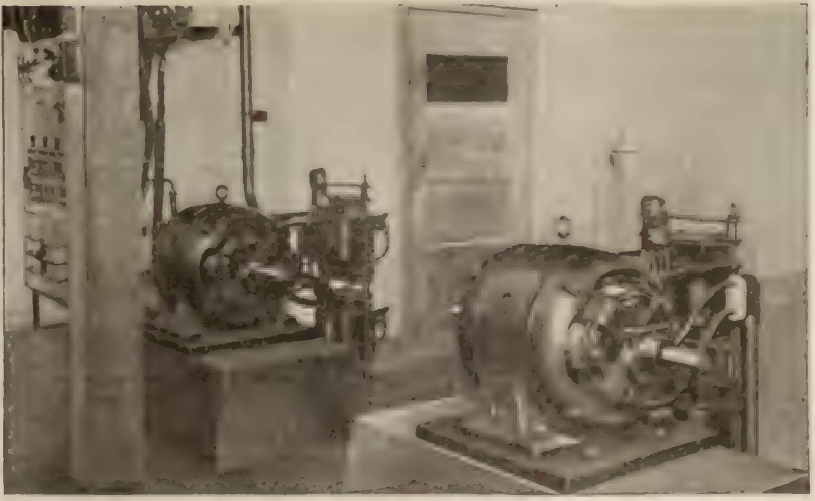
What Proves a Good Film



Two Wagner 125 Ampere Rotary Converters installed in [illegible] Theatre, [illegible]

Your patrons are the judges and the box office receipts are the verdict.

But when the film is delivered to you it is not a finished picture. It is up to you to deliver it to the public right.

What kind of projection have you? Do you buy a good film and reduce its value when you put it on the screen? Are you using alternating current for projection or direct current from apparatus that handicaps the operator? With you can get maximum value from any film and probably at less current costs than now. It's up to you, Mr. Exhibitor, to investigate.

Simplex

Back of Every RESULT There is a REASON

For instance,

last week we told you of the loyalty of the Exhibitor and the Distributor to the Simplex.

But figs

don't grow on thistles, and level-headed men can't be kept enthusiastic about a machine that doesn't deserve it.

So you

naturally look back of these results for the cause; for you know that there's a reason for all things.

THE REASON IS that the SIMPLEX is designed and built right in every detail

We wish you could see that well-conducted, well-equipped, well-manned factory of ours. At every machine, at every bench, in every man you'd find the causes that lie back of that loyalty we spoke of last week.

But we are in New York, and "YOU" are everywhere

So you can't see all these things with your own eyes. However, that doesn't matter much, for is not a tree known by its fruit? Take any Simplex anywhere, remove the Intermittent (done in a few seconds); feel the fit of the bearings; see the finish of the surfaces; and, if the Machine is an old one, notice how little the vital parts are worn.

Do that to any part of the Machine and you'll be able to see with your mind's eye the things we would like to show you at the factory.

Have you a copy of Catalog "A"? If not, what is your address?

Benjamin Chapin Is Praised by "Zit"

By "ZIT"

There have been war pictures, sex pictures, melodramatic pictures, love pictures, fight pictures, educational pictures, religious pictures—pictures that have been passed by the Board of Censors, and pictures that have not passed—pictures that have ten or fifteen-thousand-dollar-a-week stars—pictures that cost a million—pictures whose directors get in some cases more than the picture earns—but it has remained for Benjamin Chapin to give to the world a picture that will go down in history as positively the most artistic, most educational and most beautifully acted.

It is a photo-drama series of episodes of Abraham Lincoln's life in four chapters and called the Lincoln Cycle, namely, "My Mother," "My Father," "Myself" and "Call to Arms."

Mr. Chapin as "Tom," the Father of "Abe," Repulses a False Friend

Of course, we only know Lincoln's life by what we have read, or what we have been told; and the way Benjamin Chapin has directed and acted. In this picture one would imagine he had lived with Lincoln. Here is a picture that embodies a few people, and the few people have made their mark in the motion picture world. The boy who takes the part of Lincoln in his boyhood is the finest piece of child acting that has ever been offered to the screen. Chapin is in every move Lincoln. In the first episode, "My Mother," it shows her devotion to her son, and at her death if your Adam's apple doesn't swell up in your throat, you are not human. Even the woman who hasn't an Adam's apple will find one there.

The second episode, "My Father," which character is also portrayed by Chapin, gives in detail the late President's sturdy father, who almost refused to allow him an education. The third, "My Boyhood," will bring tears and laughter, and the fourth, showing Lincoln as the President of the United States, confronted by war, fighting Congressmen and politicians, really reveals President Wilson's state of mind to-day.

A more psychological or a more opportune moment to present the Lincoln Cycle could not have been chosen by those who are setting forth this historic tribute to the motion picture industry. Every mother and father should absolutely compel their children to see this dramatic screen production. Every school teacher and principal of public schools, high schools, seminaries and colleges should impose a fine upon every student who reports that he has not seen the picture within a certain time. This picture is as essential to the educational mind as water is to a thirsty being.

The younger generation are always anxious to know how big men who have succeeded in life started as boys, and here you see Lincoln from the little log cabin where he was born, rise, almost from starvation, to the Presidency of the United States. Every boy has ambitions, and his ambitions will be greater after witnessing the Lincoln Cycle.

Every theater in the United States is going to play this picture. Thank goodness there is a picture being presented that hasn't any love sick, mushy stuff or a villain running around to stab another man in the back, the hero jumping out and saving the girl he loves, or a woman who tries to lead a straight road and is foiled, or vice versa. This is a picture that will go down in history as a tribute to the motion picture camera, and if the managers and Benjamin Chapin do not make a million, they have the honor of presenting to the public an artistically finished piece of work, which in later years, when we are all dead and gone, will stand out when others have been put to sleep and buried.

Be a volunteer and see the Lincoln Cycle. Don't wait until Draft Day, for you may be ordered to see it.

LINCOLN CYCLE ★ BENJAMIN CHAPIN

SUCCESS

The greatest Soul-Stirring Moving Picture Success since "The Birth of a Nation" is the Benjamin Chapin Cycle of Lincoln Photoplays, "My Mother," "My Father," "Myself," and "The Call to Arms."

The One Best Bet of the Week

Two Reel Harry Carey Feature Released Week of August 13th

ANYONE can own an automobile, but it takes a regular guy to own and love a horse. This isn't an epigram, it's a diagram—of the plot of a very dramatic and entertaining Harry Carey Feature —"Cheyenne's Pal"— two reels, released week of August 13. "Cheyenne" is Harry Carey, and "Pal" is "Pete," the gray horse that has carried his master thru many a movie escapade, carried him to safety when an avenging posse was on his trail, and helped our hero in the rescue of maidens in distress. Pete is the apple of Harry's eye. Your audiences will enjoy the dramatic tale woven about a bad man's love for his horse. Harry has been selling horses to one of our allies, and the officer in charge is keen to buy Pete. Harry has a roll and goes on a bender. He spends all his money, and when he sees his best girl's love for him diminish along with his roll he sells Pete, and then remorse overtakes him. He sees Pete loaded on the ship, and in the night sneaks in and forces Pete overboard. He jumps into the water, makes land after a fight, and having left the purchase money on the ship finds himself down to his last dollar. Before him is a saloon and a livery stable. You have one guess as to where the dollar is spent. You win—especially if you book this humdinger.

"The Brass Girl"

Matt Moore and Jane Gail in Delightful Comedy Drama Week of August 13th

JUST the right touch of comedy, mingled with the proper proportion of serious and well considered acting, puts over this two-reel Victor Comedy-Drama, released week of August 13, in great shape. At times bordering on the farcical, these two skillful players, Matt Moore and Jane Gail, make the love interest and the dramatic situations stand out in a manner that gives the play a real punch. Jane is a worker in brass. Her studio is directly beneath that of Matt, who writes songs. Each makes more noise than the other can stand and the complications that ensue before they decide to occupy an apartment in common as "Mr. and Mrs." makes a show that will please every fan in your neighborhood.

UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY

The FIELD GLASSES OF THE WORLD

FROM all parts of the world come the vivid pictures of the notable events of each week presented by the Universal Animated Weekly. The illustration shows the U. S. Navy fliers arriving at a point on Long Island where certain aviators of the Army joined them for a game of baseball. So fascinating are the subjects shown that millions of fans will go to the "movies" when the U. A. W. is being run who would not cross the street to see a big feature. That is why the Animated will pull them in on your proverbial dull day. Just try it one week and you will book it regularly. Book thru your nearest Universal Exchange.

JOKER COMEDY

"BILL" FRANEY apparently gets his real pleasure in falling on his ear and doing back flops that would break any other man's neck. He has full opportunity in "Out Again, In Again," one reel Joker released week of August 13. He is number 13 in prison.

Bill at the Bar in a Mummy Case

He escapes and gets a job in a museum. He is pardoned and the officers try to find him to tell him so. Do they ever come up with him? Read the answer in the film. It's a hilarious comedy. Gale Henry, in a one-reel Joker of the same week, "Back to the Kitchen," pulls some of the funniest stuff ever. It's a marital mix-up, and for once Gail gets the worst of it, and it's "Back to the Kitchen" for her. A "regular" comedy. Book it.

POWERS

Don't fail to book "Doing His Bit," Comedy Cartoon, and "Algeria Old and New," Dorsey Educational (Split Reel), released week of August 13. The first half reel is novel, original and funny. The wonders of a little known land are revealed in the latter and will please your audiences, from young to old.

"The Rushin' Dancers"

Speedy Nestor Comedy Has Novel and Original Plot

THE dancing craze furnishes Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts a novel plot for the Nestor comedy release of August 13. All the ladies are dance crazy and the men have to do the housework. So they import a female dancer (so they say), but in reality the bunch make Lee the goat, and the women make things lively while the deception is concealed. Then—Zowie! You'll have to book this.

Betty Schade in "A Wife's Suspicion"

Thrilling Plot, Brilliant Acting and Strong Climax Mark Gold Seal Three Reel Release—Week of August 13

TENSE situations, thrills, brilliant acting by an all star cast including Lee Hill, Val Paul and Clyde Benson in support of beautiful Betty Schade, are followed by a climax that is a huge surprise and which furnishes a dramatic punch right up to the last flicker. A notorious crook plans to rob the residence of the wealthy chief of the detective bureau during a reception, and Betty's husband Val is drawn into the plot. Suspicious of her husband's companions, and of his intentions as well, she returns to her old position as governess in the chief's family, and is present when her husband, with another woman, comes to the reception. The other woman feigns illness and is taken by the hostess to her room. There is a wall safe and the guest asks to have her necklace put there for safe keeping, as the clasp is loose. As the safe is opened she tries to memorize the combination, which later she passes on to a member of the gang. With the plans so laid the plot swiftly develops, and the audiences which see it will be fascinated with the surprise climax and the powerful dramatic story. Book and boost.

YELLS of laughter will greet this L-KO stunt comedy called "Rough Stuff," released week of August 13, and featuring Dan Russell, and that screen beauty Gladys Varden, and Walter Stephens, under the direction of J. G. Blystone. The fun rages fast and furious in a hotel lobby, and at a fashion show, where Dan, to get a closer peep of the beauties on parade, disguises himself as a buyer. Walter, as the bell-boy, introduces a new variety of rough stuff that will send your audiences into paroxysms of hilarity. The stunt illustrated is a fitting wind-up to two reels of clever comedy that sets a swift pace in the comedy race. Grab this for your next comedy night and hang out the S. R. O. TRIANGLE

Here's What Exhibitors Say About Triangle

"I am, and have been using your program for over a year, and never had any reason to be dissatisfied either with your service or otherwise, and you can rely on, that regardless of all the rumors I will remain loyal, as long as your service will remain as in the past."

"Permit us to thank you for the good service you have rendered in the past and if an exhibitor's opinion is worth anything to you, take our advice and keep on producing pictures such as you have in the past six months and your support from the exhibitors should be assured."

"I feel that I owe you a letter to let you know my appreciation of what TRIANGLE has meant to me in the past year. I have tried almost all the different programs and TRIANGLE is the only program or any class picture that has given satisfaction in all respects. I have not had one poor picture and I have run almost all of them. Futhermore, I have never received as good treatment and service from any exchange with whom I have done business as I have from your exchange in Philadelphia. I note in your letter that you do not make extravagant promises for the future of TRIANGLE. I like that. Just keep on producing as you have in the past and I feel that the exhibitors will make the 'noise' for you."

"You bet your life I want them—save me a place. I am going to take on Triangle features and Keystone comedies as I find that they bring home the bacon, and that is what I am looking for."

These are just a few extracts from the many enthusiastic letters that we are constantly receiving.

The press of the nation praises the Pathé serial

The Neglected Wife

The chorus of praise has been unanimous; here are a few excerpts, culled at random.

The Los Angeles Examiner says of "The Neglected Wife"—"When a husband is obviously bored—what is the best thing to do? This question a married woman has always regarded with fear and trembling. Since the establishment of property laws and the accompanying matrimonial laws wives have been accustomed to look with terror for the moment when that dreaded 'Other Woman' should appear. In the Pathé serial we see the timid, meek wife and the brisk, capable business woman each destined to play such an important role in the career of the husband. Ruth Roland is altogether charming and likeable as 'The Other Woman'."

The Syracuse Herald says—"There is something doing every minute in the first three chapters of 'The Neglected Wife'."

The Houston Chronicle says—"Mabel Herbert Urner is perhaps one of the most far-reaching of modern American authors, her forte being 'life continuous' and her theory that the life of any man or a woman is a new story every day. Pathe has spent not only money upon the film to secure a careful adherance to atmosphere and environment but has also given to the film that element of sureness which only a good picture can put across."

The Picture Play News of Rochester, N. Y. says—"Critics place 'The Neglected Wife' near the top of Pathé serials in point of genuine interest as well as artistic literary merit. In it there is a problem presented, discussed and solved that is threatening thousands of American homes. It is a live, vital question. Its treatment in the new serial will be closely followed by thousands of wives and husbands, who will feel secretly if not openly, that some phase of their own domestic difficulties may be solved."

Spring, summer, fall and winter Pathé serials outdraw all pictures.

THE CIRCLE THEATRE COMPANY

Circle

INDIANAPOLIS June 30, 1917

Mr. C. R. Seelye, Business Manager,
The Pathe Exchange, Inc.,
25 West 45th St., New York.

My dear Mr. Seelye:

Confirming and supplementary to my wire of the 27th., relative to the tremendous success of the Official British War Pictures, "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre" it gives me great pleasure to advise that not only did this attraction open a week's engagement to the largest attendance in the history of the Circle but thruout the week the record business continued, each day larger than the one before until the final count showed the biggest week in history.

The weather was the hottest of the year yet we were unable to accommodate the crowds and hundreds were turned away from the box-offices daily. You are somewhat familiar with our presentation of this attraction. It made necessary the doubling of our expenses while the admission prices were increased and the presentation backed up by an enormous advertising campaign.

It is my firm conviction that no picture before has possessed such an overwhelming appeal to the people of America. The thunderous applause that greeted the armies of our Allies is indicative of the intense interest in these films and I know of nothing that has created such a sensation, so much discussion or such satisfaction as "The Tanks". Proper presentation and proper exploitation backed up by the overwhelming appeal of the pictures will assure every theatre in America the record business enjoyed by the Circle.

Sincerely yours,

S. Barret McCormick

Goldwyn Takes Chicago by Storm

THE biggest and most successful exhibitors in all America attended Goldwyn's first trade showing at the Chicago Exposition and at its close gave the greatest demonstration of approval ever witnessed in the industry. In addition, this is what they said:

MARCUS LOEW, New York: "Goldwyn Pictures are remarkable productions that establish new standards in the industry."

ROBERT LIEBER, The Strand, Indianapolis: "I never saw such wonderful productions. * * * I predict, too, that Madge Kennedy is America's next great screen favorite."

EDWARD A. ZORN, Temple Theatre, Toledo: "Here is where I book all twenty-six of Goldwyn's first year's pictures. No producers have ever before set such high standards and achieved them."

JOHN H. KUNSKY, Detroit: "No producer has ever made pictures that excel the Goldwyn quality. All of my theatres will play them."

J. W. & W. T. DUSENBURY, The Grand, Columbus, Ohio: "Goldwyn has made the finest productions we have ever seen."

Goldwyn Pictures

Why They Have Faith in Goldwyn

EXHIBITORS themselves are largely responsible for the nation-wide feeling of faith and confidence in Goldwyn and in our productions. They tell us, and they have told other exhibitors, that they believe in Goldwyn.

Because Samuel Goldfish always has been identified with and produced clean, fine, superior pictures and under this big new alliance he has the facilities to make better and finer pictures than ever before.

Because Edgar and Archibald Selwyn and Margaret Mayo have in quick succession produced some of the greatest and most successful plays in the history of the American theater, and bring to Goldwyn a knowledge of box office values that will benefit every exhibitor in the industry.

Because Goldwyn's authors represent the best names identified with big, money-making plays and novels on two continents and because the very pick of all their works are owned and controlled by Goldwyn.

And also because every artistic facility that a producer can obtain has been enlisted into Goldwyn service for the making of Goldwyn Pictures.

When important exhibitors have said all of these things about us, what more could we wish to say about ourselves?

Living For the Industry—Not Off of It

When any industry is born, there usually is born with it a trade paper.

For trade papers, properly conducted, are invaluable to any industry.

As industries grow big, trade papers dealing with them usually multiply in number.

Invariably some of these trade papers enter the field with the radically wrong idea of "living off the industry, not for it."

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD was born with the moving picture industry.

It was founded by an aggressive man whose faith in the future of the industry was boundless.

He knew that there was a place for his paper in the natural and logical development of the industry—but, more than that, he knew that his part was to "live for the industry."

With this basic knowledge, J. P. Chalmers, Jr., founded the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and established its policy.

In the ten years of the paper's constant growth and increasing success this policy of "living for the industry" has never been changed—nor will it ever be.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD plays fair with the industry.

In the judgment of its management, it makes no single move without having first determined that the move is for the greatest and most lasting good of the entire industry—and therefore the greatest and most lasting good of every single individual seriously engaged in the industry.

It gives more than value received in each and every one of its departments.

Its advertising space is sold on a strictly commercial basis.

The possibilities of return to the purchaser are no longer a subject for argument—careful and intelligently made tests have established the fact that advertising in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will produce results.

—And there are no mere "hit-or-miss" policies in its editorial and news columns.

We are here to help the industry—and to help each individual in it when that individual's efforts are helpful to the industry.

Your support of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—in its advertising columns and as a constant reader of its pages—will make the MOVING PICTURE WORLD an even greater power to help the industry in the future than it has been in the past.

Great Stars at a price the Exhibitor can afford to pay.

"LIZ"

"Knowing her way, and hungry for her surcease, she darted down the familiar ways until at last her feet struck the dull solidity of the rotting pier. And then it was but a few more panting steps—"

In "The Guilty Party," O. Henry gives his tremendous drama of "LIZ," [illegible] endings. One, a hopeless final catastrophe, is that which society indolently accepts as "the best way out" for the unfortunate. The other is an O. Henry vision.

The more ideal ending shows what might—in another world, of course—have happened, with no need of good Mother East River taking "Liz" to her bosom to settle in five minutes "the problem that keeps lights burning o' nights in thousands of pastorates and colleges."

A great story is "The Guilty Party." Like all others of the first twenty O. HENRY tales that have been reimmortalized by the magic art of the film, it has met the response from a public that craves honestly for worth.

Facts and Comments

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America re-elected Lee Ochs of New York as President for another year. Ochs and his friends went to Chicago for this express purpose and permitted nothing to turn them aside from their main object, not even the splitting asunder of the League. In an honest endeavor in the highly laudable object of keeping the League intact many exhibitors did everything possible to hold the convention together but met with no co-operation on the part of the present administration. It was there in force to elect Ochs and every suggestion that might help the cause of harmony was brushed aside if it jeopardized that plan in the slightest degree.

SUMMING up the results of the convention of exhibitors one cannot fail to realize how little was accomplished of any real benefit to either the exhibitors of the country or the industry as a whole. This lack of results is all the more regrettable when we learn that there was a good attendance of bona fide exhibitors present. The sum total accomplished was the re-election of the President and his friends, the boosting of his publishing proposition (the real object in view), and the discrediting as far as possible of all other trade papers in the industry. After all, perhaps, nothing more was to be expected of a convention in which such a large sprinkling of the more active delegates were present primarily to protect their interest in a trade publication.

WE MAY now look for the greatest possible amount of capital to be made out of the recent events at Chicago on behalf of the publishing activities of President Ochs and his coterie of friends. Many of the other exhibitors stood by the administration because of their loyalty to the cause of organization. All honor to them. The shame of it all is that their loyalty should be used to further the personal business plans of a few. Attempting to show that the opposition to Ochs and to the Exhibitors' League was altogether on the part of other trade papers was only one of the contemptible moves carefully staged beforehand. Speaking for this trade paper, at least, we can say that the only fighting it does or has done is on behalf of the exhibitor.

THE increase in film exports since the beginning of the war, as revealed by the statistics compiled by the Bureau of Commerce at Washington are most encouraging. Even more so is the reports of our American Consuls from scores of places allover the world, showing that there has been a great increase in the percentage of American films now exhibited and that the American films are most popular and well liked everywhere. This is as it should be when we remember the wider scope of the American producers and their greatest breadth of vision. This ought to and does result in film productions that are less provincial and have a more universal appeal to people of every country.

EXHIBITORS who are running airdomes this year have had a rather discouraging season until the last few days. We are now having some warm weather that will go far towards making amends to the open air theater. The many improvements in ventilating, summer covering of seats, serving of ice water, etc., however, have greatly improved the attendance in many of our up-to-date city theaters. As a consequence, greatly improved business is now enjoyed by many of these houses right through our hottest spells. Proper attention to ventilation is absolutely necessary. A few nights since in New York City two friends went to see a certain production at a good sized theater, but one of the old type. Everything was comfortable on entering, but a thunder shower compelled the closing of the skylights in the roof and as this was the only means of ventilation, except the doors, the atmosphere soon became unbearable. Naturally this particular house will be avoided in future by the party in question in winter as well as in summer, for pure air is just as necessary all the time as cool air in summer.

The Exhibitor's Backbone

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE advantages and disadvantages of the producer's program may be summed up in the producer's intelligence plus that of the exhibitor. The one must not only know a thousand things about present-day standards and modern demands, but he must be entirely amenable to change and improvement—the exhibitor must not only know his audience, but he should try to get the measure of those people in his neighborhood who would naturally attend his theater, who stay away from it persistently from choice. There are few American communities today where there exists any prejudice against moving pictures themselves, but there are millions of quiet citizens of the better sort who regard this form of entertainment with the bored tolerance they show toward a circus.

There is an enormous vote in this country which can never be counted on by the politicians of any party, the vote of people who think for themselves. This great thinking mass cannot be forced, or bought, or jollied, or influenced in any way except through appeal to reason, judgment or a fine sense of duty. Without organization, without shouting and display, without even a name, this great thinking mass swings the destinies of our self-governing people. They might be well called the Nation's Backbone. This backbone is a vital equation in our problems.

We have more high-class magazines, periodicals and newspapers in circulation than all other civilized nations combined. This clearly indicates that untold millions of our people are reading and thinking for themselves. We want those millions to come into the moving picture theaters, and not only to come, but to go away so pleased that they will come again and again. We would like to have intelligent people get the habit of reading from the screen as they are now doing in print. Nothing better could happen to us than to have such a backbone to the entire industry.

Late one afternoon, many years ago, when the MOVING PICTURE WORLD was a thin sheet, I stood at the window of an office with a number of other men interested in the moving picture game and looked down on a throng of working people hurrying home. On their way was a movie theater, and some of them dropped in—"dropped" is the word—from sheer weariness to get relief from the day's drudgery for a few cents. Some of that tired crowd were undoubtedly intelligent; some were easily-pleased weaklings; some were clean and orderly; some belonged to the great unwashed; all were at the end of a day's labor and needed recreation.

There was only one opinion among the quick-guessing gentlemen around me, none of whom is now in the business, and that opinion was far from complimentary to the New Art. Movies were for the shockhead, the uncombed and unlaudried unintelligent. I did not differ from them vocally—they were beyond argument—but I did in print. I could not believe such ill-considered opinion to be of any value to exhibitors. Men who entertain such opinions have no length and breadth of vision—they cannot see one day a head of what is passing before their eyes.

That happened to be a time when examples of this New Art were low in quality because the demand for them was in excess of the supply. Producers became rich from turning out the poorest stuff ever shown on the screen, and it was easily guessed that poor stuff was what the people wanted. The reason for this guess was that it cost less. A few of us demanded better quality, but we were laughed at, scorned and ridiculed. Producers who were coining money asked what we knew about it anyway. They were in a position to force the market, but we were in a position to formulate opinion, and we beat them to it.

First consequence of severe criticism was to enrage producers who were advertising in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—some of them had an idea that purchase of a publicity page included the brains and principles of the staff as well. They had an idea that the word was passed along to reviewers, "Ease up on So-and-so—he is advertising big." I know as far as I am concerned, and I am sure so far as other members of the staff are concerned that no such word was ever passed along the line.

Second consequence of clear-visioned criticism was to stir the exhibitor to a sense of what was due him as a caterer to public taste. It was his privilege to size up his own community, and he must have a choice in the character of plays, not be compelled to take what was thrown at him. Intelligent criticism, whether devoted to encouragement of merit, or to elimination of the unfit, thus led a revolt against autocratic production, broadened the field and resulted in an improvement which is still going on, but it must continue to lead the way—it can otherwise accomplish nothing.

There is not an intelligent critic at work today who does not realize how hard it is to make an impression on hardened opinion as to audience capabilities. Nine men out of ten in this business acquire the easy habit of reasoning from analogy. They find a similarity between stage production and that for the screen and decide that what succeeds in one must necessarily make a hit in the other. They apply the same process to the visualization of novels and to the employment of theatrical stars for the silent drama. Because of this form of reasoning tobacconists put the best cigars in the middle, on the top row, of a box.

An enormous number of stage stars have proven rank failures as screen interpreters. An astonishing number of stage plays have failed to provide adequate material for moving pictures. Novels of unqualified success in their legitimate field have proven next to worthless as photodramas, and most of those which have done fairly well have had new material added in the transformation. The backbone of motion picture production will be formed of those whose methods are suited to the medium.

That production should be varied, just as the tastes of a mixed audience are varied. It is all very well for individuals to assert that farce has the call, or that comedy-drama is the thing, or that only melodrama is popular—all that implies limitation of view. One may prefer the "true-to-life" story, another the romance which takes him away from the material into regions of the spiritual. The exhibitor need not worry about the general character of a story—it is better to have a diversity of program—but the hour is here for him to consider people who are not in the habit of attending his theater, who might be drawn there and held as a large additional source of profit.

The enormous circulation of reading matter throughout our country argues convincingly that our people are reading widely and thinking for themselves. There are exhibitors who will go instinctively to the bottom of this matter and perceive that the backbone of theater patronage is no longer the empty-head and easily pleased, those who make the most noise with their hands and their "ha-hah!" The backbone of his prosperity, like that of our country, is a quiet and orderly mass, people who feel deeply and think sensibly. Let us aim at the best, with the best and successfully rival print with the picture.

A Few More of the Same Kind

By Sam Spedon

WE SAY what others think. We may not say it as others would, but we say it. If we are going to "clean house" we believe in doing it though we die or perish in the attempt. There is an equal compensation in all things. What is our loss will be somebody's else gain. We mustn't look for bouquets until we are dead. If we don't get them, the flowers omitted will help brighten somebody's else pathway and their fragrance make life sweeter.

Constructive Criticism.

It is the business of every man who makes motion pictures his business to take sufficient interest in the business to see its faults as well as extol its virtues. You have often read that request: "If you are pleased tell others, if you are not tell us." We infer that the request is made to correct faults or objections that may be justly called attention to.

Nine times out of ten when we tell a man his faults he will say we are making destructive criticism. We must first be destructive before we can be constructive. To remedy a defect in a building we must tear down to rebuild. We cannot construct universal democracy until we have destroyed demagogy. We cannot build up the motion picture industry on a firm business basis until we have eliminated the evils in it.

Petty Jealousies.

Most of the petty jealousies in the industry are caused by a vain-glorious desire to be considered as popular, prosperous and prominent as the other fellow. Each one wants to be a showman instead of a business man. If he can't be known by his works he immediately rushes into print, shoots off his mouth in public and tries to get in the lime-light. This recalls an old fable: A man had a jackass and a lap dog. He let the dog jump on his lap and fondled him. The jackass said: "I will be a lap dog." He thereupon jumped on the man's lap and received a sound beating for his presumption." Moral—You can't assume what the Lord never intended you to be.

What a Chance.

Sweet spirits of nitre! Read this from the Pennsylvania Board of Censors:

"This is to notify you that on and after the above date the following rule will be enforced in addition to the Rules and Standards already printed:

"Rule No. 27. When an approval seal is issued following the agreement of the applicant, to make eliminations suggested by the Board, it shall be issued subject to the condition that no exhibitor of the film shall, in exhibiting the same, produce any eliminated portion thereof by act, publication, utterance, or other means of communication."

This letter is the result of a picture which was shown at a leading Philadelphia theater during the showing of which the titles which had been eliminated from the film. itself, were read off stage by a professional actor. Which is perfectly permissible providing we do not say or write anything to violate law and decency.

Fear and Respect of the Screen.

Any man or body of men who put themselves before the screen and say "I am the power" remind us of the fellow who put the cart before the horse. The horse is the power, the cart is only a vehicle. The screen and what is shown on it is the power for good or evil, whether it be shown in a theater or anywhere else. When we say we are a power to influence and control we forget that we are only vehicles. People do not fear nor respect us, but they do fear and respect the screen and what it reflects. Let us see that it is respected by standing back of the screen and making it stand out before ourselves and everybody else.

Better Pictures for Smaller Exhibitors.

The better the pictures the better everybody likes them. The faster they come the better the people and the exhibitors like it. The people are impatient to see them and the exhibitors are impatient to get them: those who can afford to see and get them first. That's the reason the smaller exhibitors complain. But our small friends must remember that those who can afford to book and see them first are the ones who pay the first cost of production, and they, the smaller ones, see and get them at a much less price. Better pictures will necessarily raise the minimum price of admission to ten cents. The smaller exhibitors have been running "junk" long enough and they should hail the arrival of better pictures and await with patience their coming to them in their turn, knowing they can promise their patrons a high grade of pictures at a much less price than they have been seen in the first showings in other places.

We Hate to Say It.

One of our readers writes: "Take a shot at the exhibitor who won't give us his help when we need it. I do not mean by this everyone who is not a member of our organization. There are a whole lot of exhibitors outside our club who are "Johnny on the Spot" and lend their support both morally and financially. I mean the slacker who stands back of the firing line and lets "George do it."

Mr. Reader, we have done this little thing two or three times recently but we don't know whether we have hit anyone. We hope so. We will open a broadside this time and see what we can do. The kind of exhibitor referred to is so small we can't draw a bead on him. We find it difficult to strike any vital spot. He has neither brains nor heart. The only way to reach him is to hit his pocket. The "slacker" (We hate to apply this term, even to our worst enemy. It is horrible at best), is the man who stays at home and after the battle is over comes out of hiding to join in the shouting, not because anybody else is benefited by the victory but because it benefits himself. The only way to treat this kind of exhibitor, who won't help fight legislative battles or anything that threatens to destroy or demoralize the industry, is to exile him from the industry and the emoluments of it.

War Time Pictures

By REV. W. H. JACKSON.

AUTHENTIC reports together with positive experience have compelled the conclusion that war-time pictures are to be shown with much more care than two months ago. It is a strange thing how differently a matter seems when it "comes home." Before the United States became committed to positive action it did not matter what kind of war pictures were shown—indeed, it is a question whether the most gruesome were not the most popular; such is the precarious nature of the public taste. Now, however, things have undergone such a change that those pictures written upon imaginary themes, and which show the physically injurious effects as a result of the conflict, have such a depressing effect upon audiences that it is a question if they do not positively hinder recruiting, or at least hinder parents (especially mothers) from encouraging their sons to respond to the nation's call.

There are several good pictures which have been in great demand, in which sons have been brought home "halt, maimed and blind" that a new realization has come to the observers which have inspired thoughts "which would not down" that the heroic in the pictures has become subordinate to the dangerous. The writer has had such a distinct experience along this line while conducting Red Cross picture exhibitions that he was compelled to alter the entire program, when the object sought was to encourage patriotism.

To be both safe and successful in showing war pictures they must all be of a patriotic nature. Patriotic enthusiasm is now running high; and the high and noble principles which underlie the people's duty, hide from them the dangers which they too well know they have to face, and from which they never shrink at duty's call; but to have the dangers flaunted in their faces, without the inspiration of the high patriotism desired only has a deterrent effect.

Patriotism must be the guiding influence of the work of all moving pictures in these days of great expectations; pictures that inspire and arouse people even as an orator his audience, are to be given preference and continued It should be remembered that an audience is affected similarly by hearing as by sight, and the oratory of the picture is as necessary as of the speech. In defining oratory as distinct from eloquence or rhetoric, an eminent authority says it is oratory alone that "moves people"; that which appeals, pleases, and even gains applause, but does not move to action, is not oratory. It is even so with the pictures, they must move people to action to be effective; the writer has seen this done so successfully that after a picture exhibition of the right kind accessions to membership in the Red Cross and kindred organizations, also money contributions, have been large as a result of the inspiration, patriotism and oratory of the pictures.

In the future it will be well for the picture exhibitor, as with the lecturer, to decide beforehand what object he has in view when making up his program, and to act accordingly for the purpose of securing that end. It is further of importance that exhibitions of this kind are those which will bear repeating, for people will come again and again if their highest ideals can be aroused and met. Americans are a nation loving people, they are proud of their history; repeat those days for them, show them kindred ones to come and the glories that have been shall be again in far greater portion, and they will respond and the country will be the gainer.

Supplementing this the following facts have come to our attention: In answer to a letter from Henry L. West, Executive Secretary of the National Security League of the United States to Geoffrey Butler of the British Pictorial Service, stating that certain moving pictures presented under the head of "French Official War Films of the Battle of the Somme" were creating an aversion to war and therefore had an unpatriotic tendency, Mr. Butler wrote as follows:

"Thank you very much for your letter of July 13. I know very well the feeling to which you refer, and have called in all our Battle pictures, (Battle of the Somme, Ancre, etc.), and have submitted them to a vigorous cutting down and taking out of 'horrors.' Those films relating to French scenes which seemed to detract from patriotic responses because of a too much exhibition of the prejudicial have been referred to the French Amdassador for correction."

From this it will be seen that there is a general feeling about exhibiting pictures which have a deterrent effect on the minds of people. These will be carefully pruned of all objections and true patriotism and heroism encouraged as the truth of after effects are well understood by all without excruciating details.

The Intolerance of Certain Criticism of the Screen

By Edward Weitzel.

THE remark attributed to Gordon Craig that "The worst of the Cinema is that one man's work resembles the work of all the others" was true enough, no doubt, during the first years of the moving picture; the indictment will not hold today. A critical observer who has followed the development of the art of the screen for the past two years is aware that a steady improvement is being made in the technique of the photoplay, and that a number of directors in this country, and in France, are placing their individual stamp upon their work. The pictures directed by Louis Mercanton have an atmosphere and an artistic perfection in composition and in the telling of the story that are as distinctive as a painting by one of the French masters. In this country many of the men that devote their energies to directing the production of screen dramas are showing an independence of thought and an advancement in method that are materially improving their output, and there are a number of pictures now in the making that will, when released, furnish substantial support for the foregoing assertion.

It is quite true that, being a photographic art, the exterior scenes of a photoplay must reflect locations as they are actually. The suggestive method of a Craig or a Jones can not be applied when Times Square is the background for one of the situations in a story; but interior settings admit of advanced treatment in design, and are as capable of giving the key to the action about to take place within them as any set devised by David Belasco. As the further possibilities of the motion picture play are revealed, plots will be closer knit, and a way will be found to carry the action on in one scene as long as necessary for its best effect, without stepping aside to show some one listening at a keyhole or to introduce a lovely sunset solely for the sake of its beauty. Crudeness is to be found in the tentative efforts of every human endeavor; but, while noting this crudeness, it is quite as well to observe whatever progress is being made toward better conditions. The vitality shown by this new art must result in its steady improvement.

A writer in "The Theater" has this to say: "If you had been lead blindfolded into the Lyric theater on 42d street and shown one of the palace scenes from 'A Daughter of the Gods,' and then taken across the street and shown one of the palace scenes from 'Intolerance,' could you, in all honesty, have said that one was by Griffith and the other not, or told which was the Griffith film?" Mr. Griffith did not design his palace sets, neither did the director of "A Daughter of the Gods" draw the design for the palace. It was the work of a scenic artist in all probability. The Craigs and the Joneses of the screen are now on their way, if they haven't already arrived.

Another extract from the same article: "When the motion pictures come nearest to authentic art, it will be noticed, is when the actor's face is seen in a so-called 'close-up.' * * * The best, indeed the only, moments in Griffith's 'Intolerance' which kindle a true response are when Miss Mae Marsh's face alone is on the screen." In spite of the opinion thus set down, a majority of the vast number of spectators that have watched the unwinding of the Griffith screen spectacle have found many moments that kindled a true response. The episode of Christ and the fallen woman, the onrush of the army of Cyrus, the dead mountain girl with the two doves nestling against her; these are all incidents in the picture that awaken the deepest sympathy or thrill the spectator to the utmost. As a matter of fact the close-ups of Miss Marsh are used too often, and the pathetic droop to the corner of her mouth becomes a mannerism and loses its power to charm.

It would make interesting reading if David W. Griffith would tell us just what he thinks of his creation. One thing is positive, no screen spectacle will ever again be built along similar lines. The biggest thing about "Intolerance" is its bigness. The number and complexity of its plots defy all attempts to mould them into an artistic whole. The spectator is given more than his mental digestion can possibly assimilate. It is as though four separate banquets had been prepared for him, each perfect of its kind, and placed among surroundings of the greatest luxuriousness, and he is barely permitted to taste of one course at the first table before being hurried to the next and given a mouthful at that, and so on through the quartet of menus.

The writer is looking forward to the time when it will be possible to see the "Fall of Babylon" as a separate picture; also, the episode in the life of Christ. The massive splendor of the one or the spiritual beauty of the other will furnish enough food for reflection to last through that day at least.

McManus Now Serial Manager of Paramount

Originator of "Mary," "Elaine" and "Pauline" Serials to Be Associated with Paramount.

EDWARD A. McMANUS, known in newspaper and film circles throughout the country, has been engaged by Paramount as manager of that organizations serial department, according to announcement from the Paramount Film Corporation yesterday.

For the first time in its history, Paramount is to distribute a big serial in sixteen episodes and thirty-two parts, two a week. The title and players in it have not yet been made public. Mr. McManus' first work will be in connection with this serial.

Edward A. McManus.

Edward A. McManus is the originator of the moving picture serial running in novelized form in newspapers. His first was a picture produced simultaneously in hundreds of moving picture houses on the day the counterpart of those particular episodes of the picture appeared in the daily newspapers throughout the country.

His first big success in this line was "What Happened to Mary?" This was followed by "Who Will Marry Mary?" Both these stories appeared in serial form in leading newspapers and magazines throughout the country while the picturized versions were running in the theaters.

"The Exploits of Elaine" and "The Perils of Pauline," tales of the doings of two young women who came to be known from coast to coast, were other successes of McManus' managership.

When the International Film Service was inaugurated last year Mr. McManus was placed at its head. For a long time he has held responsible executive positions as one of the heads of the William R. Hearst organization.

The negotiations which led to the engagement of Mr. McManus as manager of the Paramount serial department were finished this week, following shortly on the announcement of that organization's purpose to distribute its first serial. Mr. McManus will begin work soon with the Paramount organization and the first Paramount serial will be released early in September.

INCE TO PRODUCE OTHER ARTCRAFT PICTURES.

Thomas H. Ince, through the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, last week announced that he would personally produce from two to four special productions during the coming year for Artcraft. These films will be released through Artcraft in addition to the Hart-Artcraft pictures and the photoplays he will release through Paramount. A telegram from Mr. Ince received by Walter E. Greene of Artcraft, states that these specials will be similar to Billie Burke in "Peggy" and "Civilization" and will offer pretentious films with unusual themes.

PRISCILLA DEAN WINS LOVING CUP.

Priscilla Dean, heroine of "The Gray Ghost," Universal's mystery serial, won two much-coveted prizes on the day of the annual bathing girl parade held recently in Venice, California. She was awarded second prize in the parade itself, out of a list of over three thousand entrants, while later in the day she won first prize in a dancing contest participated in by those who had taken part in the parade. On both occasions Miss Dean was presented with a silver loving cup.

Ochs Is Re-elected President of Exhibitors' League

Stormy Sessions Mark the Seventh Annual Convention in Chicago—Dissenting Faction Forms New Association—Biggest Gathering in History of Organization—Many Stirring Incidents and Able Speeches Give Occasion Atmosphere of Old-Time Political Assembly—New Men Come to the Front

By George Blaisdell

LEE A. OCHS was on July 18, at Chicago, elected president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The date named is a legislative fiction. Really it was July 19, the clock having been set back so that the election migh take place on the third day of the convention, according to constitutional provision. It had been a strenuous day. For fifteen hours the delegates had battled for those things dearest to the delegatorial mind—political power. While the good of the industry had not been lost sight of, it seemed to be recognized that the third day was set apart for politics. The morning session opened with a respectable bolt, respectable in so far that it commanded respect not alone from the personality of the men taking part in it but also on account of their number. There was disinclination to classify the rump gathering at the Hotel Morrison as a bolt. Its nature was more of the provisional sort. There seemed to be a mutual disposition to make use of such words as dissenters, protestants. But bolt it was while it lasted, nevertheless, and there was no mistaking the fact that the administration forces were much concerned about bringing back into the fold the men who had declared there must be a new deal, and a square one at that, before they would play in the administration yard. The efforts at conciliation failed. The protestants made effective their final withdrawal by forming the American Exhibitors' Association, with Jake Wells, of Virginia, as president, and Charles Pettijohn, of Indiana, as general manager.

Lee A. Ochs.

At the head of the insurgents was Charles Pettijohn of Indiana. Assisting him were such men as Jake and Percy Wells, Rembusch, Varner, Herrington, Bullock, Slimm and Trigger. William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, threw himself into the muss with all of his characteristic love of a fight. He talked to both factions. His address to the administration adherents at the Coliseum was worth the trip from New York to sit in on. He did not mince words. He demanded respect for the decision of the majority, he demanded recognition of the fact that the country faced a great emergency, he insisted it was the duty of the industry as a whole to get behind the President of the United States and yield him that undivided support which he was entitled to claim. He pointed out the great opportunity that had come to the motion picture business by reason of the unusual recognition that had been accorded it by the head of the nation. The president of the National Association also explained how it happened that President Wilson had called on him to mobilize the motion picture men—told how, as a resident of New Jersey, he had intimately known the Chief Executive for many years and how, so far as he knew, the President believed in him.

Mr. Brady was cheered and cheered again when he finished. A committee of five was appointed to meet a similar committee of the dissenters in an effort to find a common ground for proceeding together. An incident that had an important bearing on the administration group going the limit in a conciliatory way occurred during the morning session. Jake Wells had dropped into the Coliseum and had addressed the convention. Dr. Hespe, president of the New Jersey League, at the end of a speech in which he displayed much feeling, declared that he would not harmonize with "that kind of cattle."

Instantly Jake Wells was on his feet. All the way from the place in the back of the hall where he had been sitting, to the front of the desk of the presiding officer he was demanding that Hespe explain what he meant. Hespe from his seat at the left of the desk confronted Wells, but his explanation contained no matter that had satisfaction for Wells. Both men were exercising great personal restraint and there could be no doubt it was only the fact that they were in meeting that prevented open hostilities. Delegates jumped between them and Wells left the hall.

The occurrence made a decidedly unpleasant impression. Louis Levine of Brooklyn had the attention of the chair before Wells was out of the door and moved that the president, on behalf of the body, extend to Mr. Wells the apologies of the convention.

"I don't need any motion for that," declared President Ochs. "I apologize to you now, Mr. Wells, for the remark of Dr. Hespe." The irate southerner never turned his head. It was said that when, a few minutes later, he appeared at the Morrison gathering he was in high good humor. The incident, nevertheless, had by common consent put the burden of conciliatory measures on the Coliseum gathering, and the only question seemed to be how best to work it out. Dr. Hespe did not again take the Coliseum floor until twelve hours later. Shortly after the incident, however, at the close of the morning session, the New Jersey delegate visited the Morrison and made amends.

The convention was notable from several distinct points. In the first place, by common consent, it was agreed that never before had there been such a representative group of exhibitors gathered under one roof. Twenty-six states were represented by more than two hundred delegates. The delegates attended the sessions, too. For one thing there were no distracting entertainments to denude the convention hall.

The larger attendance brought to the fore a new group of leaders. Of finished speakers there was an abundance. With one single exception—and of course that proved the rule—every man who took the floor knew what he wanted to say, and there was plenty of evidence that he had been through a school that teaches men to think on their feet. There were present men who had fought in political conventions, who knew the psychology of the crowd, who had the art of attracting close attention and holding it, of moving men and swaying them. Any man who forgets the drama, the suspense, the fighting spirit, the gouges and the quips of the league convention of 1917 is possessed of a short memory.

At the head of the new men—and of the old, too, for that matter—this writer has no hesitation in placing F. E. Eager, owner of four theaters in Lincoln, Nebraska. Mr. Eager entered the convention on Tuesday morning a stranger practically to every delegate. At the end of Wednesday night's session he was unknown to none. Eager has a keen, analytical mind, a voice that carries: he possesses the arts of the orator, all the more effective because he seems to use none. Levity is not in him. Of humor he has a trace, and it was displayed at the big moment of the convention. The business of the delegates was a cold and serious one, and he was there to help put it through. He did. His dominating characteristic was his effort to get at the right of a problem, his readiness to recant, to change his position when a new angle was presented, to make the truth prevail. In Eager the exhibitors of the United States have got a man and a leader.

And Pettijohn, Pettijohn of Indiana? We had seen Pettijohn in New York last spring and thought him a good fellow. We may have thought we had a line on the man, on his ability to do things. But we saw only a small part of him. Pettijohn does not emerge from his shell until he gets into a convention. Then he brings into the scene, into any scene, the rare atmosphere of real politics. When the novice is tearing his hair and shattering his neighbor's eardrums with his yells of protest, Pettijohn smiles. "Just a moment," he is likely to say. "Don't let's get excited. Let's find out what the trouble is all about." His rebuke to President Ochs following the outburst of the newly elected official as to what he would do to the "babies" who had walked out likely will be remembered by the New Yorker.

Monday's Session.

The seventh convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America opened on Monday, July 16, in the middle of the afternoon. There were close to 150 delegates and alternates in the assembly room of the Coliseum, the big structure on Michigan avenue, where was being held the motion picture exposition. Following an announcement by President Ochs as to those who would be permitted to remain in the hall during the sessions a committee was appointed to investigate the status of those in attendance.

"In opening this convention of 1917 I want to extend you a welcome and a hearty one," said President Ochs. "As your president during the past year I have felt the necessity of a great, big organization, just as you have. I ask you to look about the hall, with a few states yet to come in, and see if you do not agree with me that this is the largest attended convention, as to states and delegates, ever held by the league. I believe you feel with me that for the next twelve months we are going to need organization more than we ever have before. I also want to call attention to the fact that we are here for business far more important than the election of a president, whoever he may be.

"I charge you to forget personalities. Let us have harmonious meetings, and let us stand by the man who is elected regardless of who he may be. I want to say to the gentleman who is elected that I will support him as I would myself."

A tangle developed over the interpretation of the by-laws in regard to the eligibility of delegates. The president ruled that states which had not thirty days previously paid their per capita tax could not sit. Maryland appealed from the decision and Judge Tugwell of California, vice president, took the chair pending the determination of the question.

On the roll call Samuel Trigger voted thirty for New York. This brought a protest from Mr. Ochs, who insisted the New Yorker was not a delegate. "Mr. Trigger has no right to cast a vote for New York," he declared. Mr. Horstmann of Massachusetts moved that the vote of New York be stricken out.

"I voted New York as the national vice-president for New York and also as one of the national committee," said Mr. Trigger, speaking to a question of personal privilege. "The president told me at our state meeting it was not necessary for me to be elected a delegate." A sharp colloquy ensued. Joe Hopp of Illinois, raised a point of order, and chose to make it in the form of an interrogatory. He got away with it in that shape the first time, but when he attempted to repeat it Judge Tugwell said he did not recognize any interrogatory. "If you want to make a point of order make it," said the Judge.

"Don't you tell me what I want," roared Hopp. "I'll tell you what you want."

"No," said the judge, and his vôice was very low and his words were widely spaced; "while I am in the chair you will do just as I let you do. I will tell you what you will do."

The retort of the Judge, delivered in the most approved western form, was loudly cheered.

An agreement was reached whereby all states should go before the credentials committee and an adjournment was taken until 8:30 o'clock.

A sharp set-to resulted at the evening session over the appointment of the committee on credentials, and there were protests against what was described as gag rule. Personalities crept in.

"I promise you will not hear any personalities from me at any time during this convention," said Mr. Pettijohn to President Ochs in the course of the debate. "If you are elected as president of this association, on the level, we will support you. I want to make you one more promise. If gag rule becomes prevalent here we will not support you. Mr. President, the most important thing before this convention is the question of our co-operation in this great national crisis. There are personal representatives of three cabinet members watching this convention. We are going to do things right or we are going to meet conscription. We can't stand to have this convention spoiled. Let us be Americans, citizens, patriots."

"I am not in favor of gag rule," said Mr. Clarke, of Mississippi. "We didn't come here with the purpose of gagging anybody and we won't gag anybody. The only purpose of my motion was to help things."

"When Lee Ochs was a candidate last year the chair appointed the credentials committee," said Mr. Ochs. "As to good Americans, you know, Mr. Pettijohn, New York has just as good as men from any state. There will be no gag rule, so don't bring that on the floor of the convention that you just heard it now. We have heard of it for a week, so that it is nothing new, now if this convention goes on record to do the same thing it has done every year the president has appointed the credentials committee."

Convention of M. P. E. L. of America Entertaining Members of the N. A. M. P. I. in Coliseum, Chicago.

"You have either mistaken what I said or else you lack the comprehension to understand what I did say," retorted Pettijohn.

As a result of a nearly unanimous vote the president appointed on the credentials committee Messrs. Furniss, of Minnesota; Horstmann, of Massachusetts; Freund, of Illinois; Fisher, of Washington; Hespe, of New Jersey; Chamberlain, of North Dakota, and O'Donnell, of Indiana.

At 10:55 o'clock the credentials committee reported. It increased the number of Washington delegates from seven to eight and Maryland likewise. The committee decided that aside from sending the California and Illinois protests to the grievance committee the temporary roll should be the permanent one.

Mr. Trigger was refused the floor, President Ochs first inquiring of the chairman of the credentials committee if Mr. Trigger was a delegate. Mr. Trigger started for the door, but when a delegate said to him, "Go on out," the New York local's president changed his mind and sat down. It was voted to hold no night sessions. None was held as a matter of fact on Tuesday, but Wednesday was different.

Tuesday's Session.

The delegates were slow in getting together on Tuesday morning. The Boston boosters kept things livened up, nevertheless, with their songs about Boston, composed the night before by Delegate Moscow of the Beantown outfit. It was 11:15 o'clock when the session was called to order.

Chairman Rogers of the resolutions committee invited documents from the delegates. Wisconsin brought up the question of an audit committee. The president announced he had considered that phase covered by the appointment of the finance committee, but a motion was carried instructing him to appoint one.

The president reported on the proposed screen trailer, sponsored by Mr. Levine and Mr. Blumenthal of New York in connection with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. He said large expectations were based on the work of the committee, of which R. H. Cochrane of the National Association was chairman.

Unanimous indorsement was given to a resolution introduced by Mr. Isenberg of Mississippi pledging the support of the exhibitors to the government.

The convention took strong ground against the pending daylight saving bills at Washington. Treasurer Jeup told of one house in Detroit that had suffered a loss of $300 weekly on the "saving" scheme.

The advance deposits committee reported five recommendations, which were unanimously adopted. The convention pledged itself to do everything possible to eliminate the deposit system. The national secretary was instructed to request all manufacturers and exchanges to demand no deposits and that all moneys be returned to exhibitors not later than September 1 next. An answer was requested to the communication within ten days of receipt, and that a report of any refusals to answer be made to the trade press. It was declared that all lawful means should be used to destroy the system.

"Be it further resolved," the resolutions declare, "that we see a great need of a more standard form of contract and method of trade between exhibitor and exchange, and we therefore advocate the need of such a contract and believe it will be the best means of eliminating the advance deposit system. We therefore advocate the adoption of a uniform film contract which will be equitable and fair to exchanges, producers and exhibitors, and that this resolution be further referred to a committee on contracts who will submit a form of contract to this convention for adoption. We advise that this plan be based on the following plan: (1) No advance deposits whatsoever. (2) All contracts subject to two weeks' cancellation at any time by either party. (3) All film rentals to be paid before leaving the exchange, unless a special arrangement is made between the exhibitor and exchange, whereby the exhibitor is allowed to receive his film on open account. (4) That a committee be appointed consisting of the national officers to meet a committee of the principal producers and exchangemen for the purpose of carrying out the foregoing resolution."

"The only way you can cut deposits down is to get together and stick together," said a delegate; "that is what was done in Oregon and Washington. It is up to each of you gentlemen in your own localities. If one is assailed it is up to his associates to back him up. The whole thing in a nutshell is to get together and stick together."

Mr. Pazemozoglu, of St. Louis, was skeptical as to the success that would follow the attempt of the league to eliminate deposits. He suggested a way that seemed to him the only one available. Mr. Sucknow, of Albany, told how exhibitors in his neighborhood had been able to do away with deposits on shorter subjects, but had been unable to eliminate them on features.

A long discussion followed the introduction of a resolution by Grant W. Anson, chairman of the legislative committee of New York. The measure provided for the creation of a committee to be known as the national legislative and judiciary committee of the league and composed of a chairman and vice chairmen elected by the delegates, the remaining members to be appointed one by each state president for his respective state. The resolutions further called for the location of the office in New York and declared the league should take measures to raise funds to maintain the bureau.

Missouri moved the adoption, and after it had been decided to make the office either New York or Washington as the exigencies of the season indicated the resolution was adopted.

Objection was made to a resolution introduced by Mr. Anson in which the writer called for greater consideration to exhibitors when the screen was to be pledged for national purposes. It was decided that no good end could be served by the resolution in its then form, and it was ordered recommitted. In the course of the discussion Mr. Blumenthal of New York described the visit recently of a committee of motion picture men to Washington.

The convention indorsed a resolution introduced by Alfred S. Black, president of the Maine League, deploring the high salaries paid to stars and asking for a conference with the national association looking to a remedy.

A. E. Morelock of St. Louis presented a resolution describing the contract sought to be enforced in St. Louis by the American Federated Musicians' Union and demanding that local officials take legal steps to rectify the conditions complained of. The convention indorsed the resolution.

W. W. Watts of Springfield, Ill., presented a resolution providing for the adoption of a stereopticon slide containing these words: "This theater is a member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America." Also that the league adopt a sign upon which shall be inscribed "This theater is a member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America," and that it be mounted on the ticket window. The measure provided for the making of a sufficient number of them from a uniform design and that they be distributed to the state secretaries by the national secretaries at the cost of manufacture.

The convention indorsed the report of the committee on screen advertising, which declared it was opposed to any form of screen advertising except matters of purely local character and that the question should be left to local exhibitors.

A bill for $5,000 for legal compensation in connection with recent appearances before the Senate Finance Committee was referred to the executive board with power.

The request of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry that the number of league directorships be increased from ten to fourteen was granted.

The committee on Exhibitors' Trade Review presented its report. A motion was made that the convention go into executive session and it was adopted. The reporters accordingly were requested to leave the hall—"all the other reporters," said President Ochs. "Why 'other' reporters, Mr. President?" inquired Mr. Pettijohn. "Well, all of them, then," retorted the president, smiling.

The report, which contained but a hundred words, recommended that the delegates give indorsement to the publication as the official organ, and the convention adopted the report. A. B. Momand dissented from the committee report and A. B. Clarke, William Hilkemeier, Alfred Hamburger, Thomas Furniss, Thomas D. Goldberg and Dr. Charles Hespe signed it.

Wednesday's Session.

There was a noticeable falling off in the attendance at the Wednesday morning session. It just happened to be another story as to why the crowd was not there, but the reason did not develop for some little time. There had been two caucuses the night before, and a large body of recalcitrants, eighty-seven of them, to be exact, had remained at the Morrison instead of going to the Coliseum.

The meeting had been called for 10 o'clock, but it was 11:35 before the delegates got down to work. Dr. Mary F. Waring, special representative of the National Association Council of Women's legislative committee, addressed the members and asked co-operation in keeping clean the screens of the nation. The doctor got that little thing on a motion by William Brandt, president of the Brooklyn exhibitors, who told of the aid that had been extended to his associates by a woman's organization in Brooklyn.

Ernest H. Horstmann, president of the Massachusetts league, drew rounds of applause when he said that in his state at present there is in session a Constitutional Convention and that a friend of the exhibitors had introduced an amendment providing for the same status of the screen as is now accorded the press.

"We have gone a lot better in this way than the Legislature has been able to do," declared Mr. Horstmann. "If we succeed in passing this amendment it will absolutely prohibit any censorship of pictures in our state."

William McCormick Blair of Washington, representing the four-minute men, talked to the delegates, describing the work of the bureau which sends out all the speakers to the theaters. On motion of Mr. Brown of Idaho it was voted to aid the four-minute men in every way and the executive board was instructed to co-operate with the Government.

At this point Jake Wells of Virginia took the floor. He attracted instant attention. There was a feeling that something was going to crack.

"I am appearing here on behalf of a delegation that is not present," said Mr. Wells, "and what I say will be said for the benefit of the industry. When North Carolina came to the convention we had a candidate to present to the convention (Mr. Varner). Since arriving here and following the proceedings of the meetings we feel that the bylaws should be lived up to. We feel that you should not select or appoint those who are going to serve for the coming year. We feel that these committees should be selected on the floor by the incoming president, whoever he may be. We feel that otherwise these men could not fulfill their duties as officers. If all do not co-operate it would mean the downfall of the organization.

"It is a fact that at this present moment there are eighty-five delegates waiting for the result of this meeting. North Carolina, which came here to do what it could for the industry, will not present the name of H. B. Varner."

"What is the matter with us?" said Mr. Clarke of Mississippi, in the course of a long and conciliatory speech. "I am sure none will accuse me of being a highbinder or supporter of gag rule. If I am wrong I am open to conviction. We will take these men by the hand and give them a square deal. Won't we do it?"

"Yes! Yes!" came from all over the hall.

"The state of Illinois to this minute has not been told how we shall vote for president," said Joseph Hopp of Illinois, following another speech by Mr Wells. "Let the majority rule. We are big enough to rise above the stature of children. When the committee on by-laws is ready to report they will make more clear and define things. You heard a quotation the other day when Tugwell read a paragraph and didn't read the one following it when the second one contradicted. I am wondering if these thirty votes (New York) are a part of the eighty-five back in the hotel. I am wondering if three or four men we expelled from Illinois are a part of that eighty-five votes."

"Let me say to you gentlemen I respect the president of this organization," said Mr. Pettijohn in the course of a stirring speech, "I believe in him, believe he has given his best, but he has lacked the suport of a lot of slackers, or whatever it is you call them." The convention was on its feet and cheering.

"Now that we understand each other we can come down and talk in a more peaceful tone of voice," resumed Mr. Pettijohn. "I don't want to attend a convention where I can't play politics. Rembusch has not been on the floor of this convention, and that is something never before heard of. That proves we have properly managed Frank Rembusch. (Laughter.) I am with you men to bring these other men in, but don't get me wrong. I am not opposed to choosing any man out of this organization if he owns a show and exhibits pictures and is a gentleman of halfway good moral character.

"Let me recount the states of some of the gentlemen over at the Morrison: North Carolina, Indiana, Michigan, New York, Wisconsin, Oklahoma, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia and a few more scattered, men who have been sitting in this convention as delegates. We are not worried about resolutions.

"I am here to say this for Indiana. We came into this convention with our candidate for president. We tried to keep our acts clean and play politics. We tried to play fair. We tried to co-operate in the business of this convention. Mr. Rembusch imposes on me the unpleasant duty of withdrawing his name. Let the gentleman here for Mr. Herrington report his duty also."

Mr. Pettijohn said there had been no orderly reports at the convention. "Some of the politics that has been played here is not good politics in any organization," continued the speaker. "I want to say here there is no man in this hall connected with this organization that is one-tenth as big as the organization itself. I don't care anything about your Trade Review or other papers. We ought to sink the whole bunch. I will take my chances with the exhibitor. We are not interested in this newspaper fight. I don't see why we should take sides. If Lee Ochs is president I will support him, but if you can bring about a united front you will have something you have not had before. You won't have it if you go about things as you have gone about them for the first two days. If you can bring about anything that is right I will go back and report that plan."

Mr. Pettijohn suggested Louis Levine as a man who would be listened to by the Morrison Hotel faction. "Don't get Percy Wells wrong," continued the Indianian. "He delivered his message as he got it," Mr. Pettijohn concluded with a complaint about the size of the president's gavel.

After a conciliatory speech by Mr. Sawyer, of Ohio, the president stated he would like to appoint a committee of three to invite members of the National Association to address the League. The suggestion was incorporated in a motion and carried, and Messrs. Isenberg of Mississippi, Blumenthal of New York and Horstmann of Massachusetts were appointed as the committee.

"For the sake of harmony," said Mr. Slimm, of Ohio, "I am authorized to withdraw the name of Fred Herrington as a candidate for president of this organization." (Applause.)

Mr. Goldberg, of Maryland, denied that his state participated in any bolting caucus. "We are not bolters, we are fighters," he declared. "Neither are we interested in newspapers."

"New York resents what Mr. Pettijohn said," declared Mr. Brandt. "New York is sitting right here with its entire delegation. (Applause.) In spite of the fact that Ochs is her favorite son, she is willing to vote for a better man, but that better man must be produced."

"I have known Mr. Jake Wells many years," said Mr. Ochs in reply to remarks by that delegate. "He is a man that I would welcome into any organization. I like Mr. Wells as I like his brother because he has always been strictly on the level. I ask you, Mr. Wells, this question: If you were sitting in this chair in place of me and you decided in favor of the minority, what do you think this convention would think of you? It is only fair that the majority rule when the majority vote on a measure, and I really believe had you been sitting in this chair you would have done the same things I did. I assure you, Mr. Wells, I have no personal grievance against any state. I have endeavored to work for all and show no partiality. I am just as disappointed to hear of this bolt as any one, and probably more so. We were threatened with it three months ago. It's got to stop. I assure you I would not want to be a candidate if I had to knuckle down to anybody, minority or majority."

Following a lengthy colloquy between Mr. Wells and the president the latter asked the question: "What do you think would be the proper method to bring these men back?"

Massachusetts moved a committee of three be sent to the Morrison to appeal to the dissenters' sense of fair play and to come back to the convention.

Mr. Momand said the dissenters were ready to come back on assurance they could get their rights. "They have not had a chance to submit a minority report," he said, "and say the one dissenter on the committee was not permitted to put in a minority report. The thing can be settled in a few minutes' time."

Then followed the incident referred to between Mr. Wells and Dr. Hespe.

Treasurer Jeup called attention to the fact that the situation was just the same as it was four years ago when the bolt came. "I had enough of bolts then," he said. "I swore never again would I join an organization that would do this. Gentlemen, please don't let it happen. We have got to find some means—we can't have two organizations. We can't have a split in the industry. You need a strong organization for the problem confronting you. I don't like bolting. We have had one example of it. I brought about single-handed one reconciliation. I am done trying to bring about any more."

"I have changed my mind a bit?" said Mr. Levine. "Dr. Hespe, of New Jersey, has changed it. The minority has a just grievance over the statement of Dr. Hespe. This organization to my mind is a welfare organization. It is not political. I believe the committee should be appointed and we

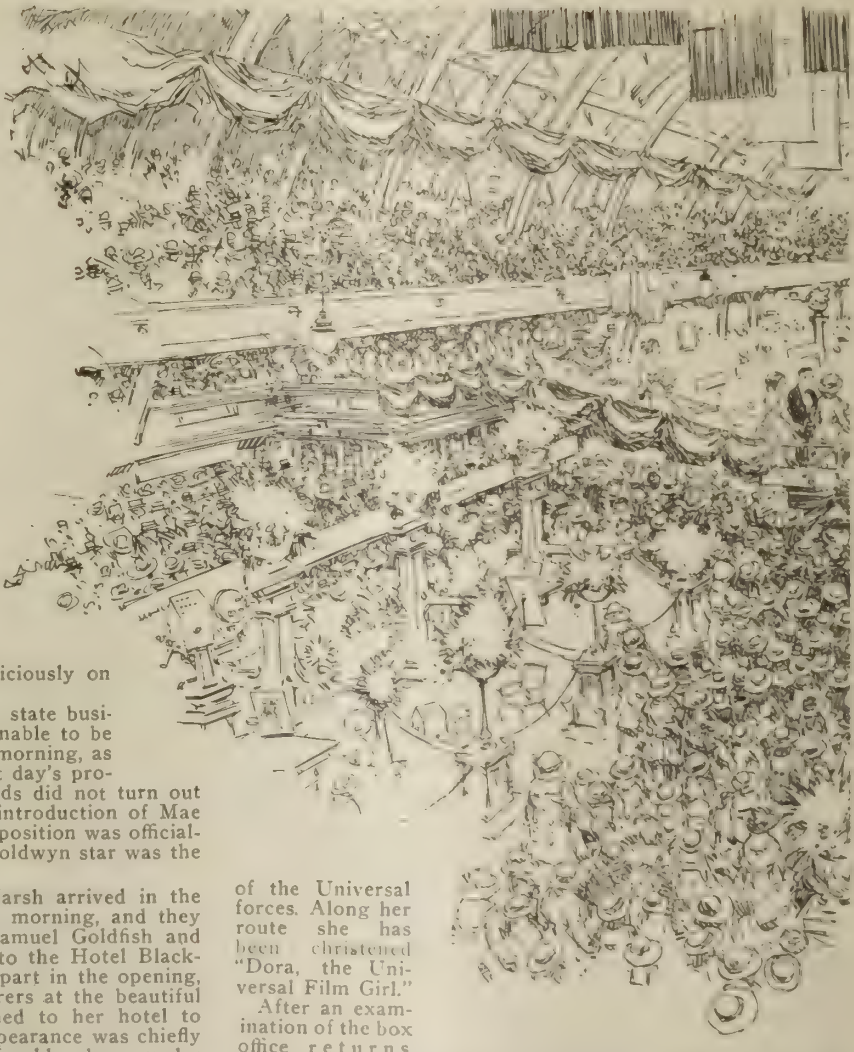
Seventh National Motion Picture Exposition

Big Trade Show at Chicago Coliseum Opens Auspiciously and Attracts Enormous Crowds—Many Picture Stars Get Enthusiastic Reception



NOTWITHSTANDING the many difficulties encountered by Exposition Manager Schindler for many weeks past in selling floor space at the Coliseum and in other preparations, the Seventh National Exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was opened most auspiciously on Saturday, July 14.

Owing to the transaction of important state business, Governor Frank O. Lowden was unable to be present to preside at the opening in the morning, as announced, but this omission on the first day's program almost escaped notice as the crowds did not turn out until the afternoon. It was during the introduction of Mae Marsh by Manager Schindler that the Exposition was officially declared opened, and so the popular Goldwyn star was the recipient of an unusual honor.

Accompanied by her mother, Miss Marsh arrived in the city by the Twentieth Century Saturday morning, and they were met at the La Salle station by Samuel Goldfish and Aaron J. Jones, with whom they drove to the Hotel Blackstone. After playing such an important part in the opening, Miss Marsh received thousands of admirers at the beautiful Goldwyn booth, after which she returned to her hotel to rest up for the evening. Her evening appearance was chiefly confined to the booth of the Chicago Herald, where, under the chaperonage of Louella O. Parsons, she received, or was seen by, fully ten thousand people. It was a great ovation all the time she was present and the aisles near her were jammed.

But Miss Marsh was not the only attraction the opening day. Quite a number of K. E. S. E. stars were introduced, including Bryant Washburn, Hazel Daly, Marguerite Clayton and Little Mary McAllister. Bryant Washburn was also seen in the booth of the Chicago News, where he attracted an immense throng of young lady aspirants who are anxious to become moving picture actresses. It is the intention to select from one of the many young ladies who appear at this booth one girl who will possess the required talent and personal attractiveness to appear in an Essanay photoplay, in which Mr. Washburn will star. It is believed that out of the many thousand of aspirants one will be found that will meet the test. Mr. Washburn will make the selection himself, and every girl who appears eligible to him, after a brief conversation with her, will be asked for her name and photograph, as appearance must enter into the competition.

There also arrived Saturday Violet Mersereau, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, of the Universal photoplayers, and responding to the call of the management, the two last-named comedians were introduced to the pleased throng.

Carl Laemmle had provided another surprise for opening night, when the Universal musicians' band of 15 pieces, accompanied by 150 boy scouts, escorted Miss Dora Rodrigues to the Coliseum for Mae Marsh night. This natty little lady appeared in a Plattsburg uniform and excited much attention. It was given out that she is walking all the way from New York to San Francisco, establishing in all the places in which she stops recruiting stations, and enlisting young men for Uncle Sam. The Universal Film Co. is assisting in making her tour the greatest possible success, and this for the reason that she was formerly a talented member of the Universal forces. Along her route she has been christened "Dora, the Universal Film Girl."

After an examination of the box office returns, Manager Schindler gave out that over 20,000 people had passed through the gates on opening day. He also stated that the receipts at the box-office for the afternoon had exceeded the total receipts for the opening day of last year's exposition.

Pathe Day, Sunday, July 15.

J. A. Berst, vice-president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., accompanied by Pearl White, Doris Kenyon and Sheldon Lewis, came in on the Twentieth Century Sunday morning to celebrate Pathe Day at the Exposition, and they were greeted with a right royal welcome at the Coliseum booth in the afternoon and evening. Miss White, by sitting in a draft, or some way or other, had contracted a severe pain on one side of her neck, which required all her courage to brave the ordeal of introduction to the assembled thousands. The Pathe booth was so densely surrounded by the crowds that the officers had great difficulty in clearing a way for newcomers to see the Pathe stars. Mrs. Vernon Castle at the last moment found that she could not make the trip, owing to indisposition.

Manager Schindler devised this year a plan for the introduction of visiting stars, which is much superior to that adopted last year, as it permits a view of the star who is being introduced from all parts of the floor and the galleries. A raised enclosed platform, gayly decorated, has been built on the floor immediately in front of the entrance and it is connected with the gallery adjoining by a passage-way. Thus the visiting photoplayers are spared the ordeal of forcing their way through the crowded aisles before being introduced.

Violet Mersereau, of Universal, was also introduced Sunday evening, although her appointed debut was fixed for Butterfly Day, Tuesday, July 17. So also were Lillian Walker and little Baby McAllister, who were given an ovation. Amy Dennis, the clever comedienne in the Selig-Hoyt comedies, was also introduced and received with popular acclaim. This is also a decided improvement on last year, as the public are anxious to see as many stars as possible on the evening they attend.

In the spacious and beautifully decorated Pathe booth the visiting stars were greeted by quite a large staff of the Pathe forces. There were present V. H. Hodupp, special representative, New York City; George W. Fuller, manager of the Pittsburgh exchange; L. C. Sheridan, manager at Des Moines; R. F. Werth and F. Gebhardt, salesmen in the St. Louis office; C. W. Bunn, manager of the Chicago branch and his staff; C. R. Seelye, business manager, and J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager. Mr. Berst and the party left for New York on the Twentieth Century Monday.

The attendance for Pathe Day was still greater than that of opening day, and it seemed as if every succeeding day would be marked by greater crowds.

Lillian Walker's Day, Monday, July 16.

Lillian Walker was the bright particular star on the day set for Selznick and Exhibitors' Day, and close seconds in popular favor were Anita King and Rose Tapley. Clara Kimball Young and Constance and Norma Talmadge, who were advertised to attend, did not put in an appearance.

The dimpled Lillian proved to be a great popular favorite wherever she appeared, and like a butterfly she passed from booth to booth, making a brief stay in each. She favored the Herald booth with a long session and was ably assisted by Louella O. Parsons, photoplay editor of that paper.

Miss Walker is at present the star of the Ogden Film Corporation, and her first picture made by that company will be released shortly. She will proceed to New York after the Exposition closes.

Strange to say, the opening day of the week brought the largest crowd, up to that date, to the Coliseum. As one entered and took a glance at the galleries it was seen that they were filled on every side, something which has not happened since Mary Pickford Day at the Exposition last year. It was learned at the box-office that over 23,000 had passed through the doors on Lillian Walker's Day.

Another big Chicago favorite was introduced on this occasion. That was Nell Craig, formerly a popular leading woman on the Essanay forces. She was introduced after Miss Walker and was given a rousing reception. Miss Craig stated to the writer, personally, that she expects to go to New York shortly to engage in work with a prominent producing company; but she did not deem it expedient to give particulars just then.

Butterfly Day, Tuesday, July 17.

One was impressed, as the Exposition advanced, that each succeeding day had larger crowds than the preceding. This was especially pronounced on Butterfly Day, when the police were called in to keep the dense crowds moving so that everyone would have a chance to see the prominent photoplayers in their respective booths.

On this occasion the following Universal stars were introduced: Violet Mersereau, Rosemary Theby, Mae Murray and Robert Leonard, all of Bluebird, the last two mentioned having just been put under contract; also the well known Universal comedians, Lee Moran and Eddie Lyons, who were brought all the way from Los Angeles by Carl Laemmle.

The tiniest adult star yet introduced at the Exposition—Fannie Ward, arrived in the morning from Los Angeles, accompanied by her husband, Jack Dean, in order to delight her multitude of admirers. She was in great demand at the various booths on the Exposition floor.

Other photoplayers introduced on this occasion were Virginia Bartha, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., and Floyd Williams and Virginia Lee, of the Sunshine Film Corporation.

All the prominent members of the Chicago staff of Universal, headed by Carl Laemmle and Joe Brandt, were present, busily engaged in presenting their photoplayers to the best advantage.

The Examiner booth was visited by nearly all the stars present on Universal Day, and Miss Kitty Kelly, photoplay editor of that paper, was kept busy introducing them to the crowds.

The Red Cross booth did a landoffice business Butterfly Day, although the ladies on the committee gathered there in aid of the fund transacted quite encouraging business every evening of the Exposition up to that time.

Mae Murray purchased the evening gown which Lillian Walker had donated for $50, and then returned it to the Red Cross booth to be used further to increase the funds. Miss Murray's autographed photos which she had donated brought $70 the same evening. The sewing basket bag presented by Nell Craig brought $11 at auction and then was returned to the booth to be resold. The table-cloth made and presented by Rosemary Theby was purchased by Carl Laemmle for $17.

Further donations to the booth on this day included a luncheon set of six napkins, hand-embroidered by Miss Clayton herself, and a table-cloth—all of fine linen. Edna Purviance, Charlie Chaplin's leading lady, sent on from Los Angeles a pen-and-ink sketch of herself on a large leather wallpiece, the sketch being done by Bob Hopkins, in his own artistic manner.

Numerous other articles presented on the spur of the moment by enthusiastic visitors and auctioned off by some equally enthusiastic supporters of the cause, netted quite a handsome sum.

Other beautiful articles held and reserved by the ladies' committee at the Red Cross booth, to be auctioned off later, include the following:

A dainty white muslin dress and a sewing bag, the latter in colored silk and trimmed with gold lace and French rosebuds, made by herself, presented by little Mary Miles Minter; a facsimile of her own breakfast set, valued at $101, also an evening gown which she wore in "Miss George Washington," presented by Marguerite Clark; an ivory fan decorated with gold and silver beads and brilliants, presented by Mrs. Sidney Drew; an evening gown and a handsome cameo brooch, the latter valued at $50, presented by Lillian Walker; a handsome cerise ostrich fan with amber handle, valued at $50, presented by Hazel Daly; an entire set of dainty French toilette boxes and trays, also four sewing baskets, beautifully lined, and two knitting sets, all valued at $50, presented by Peggy Hyland; an attractive sewing basket bag, beautifully decorated, presented by Nell Craig; two sets of photographs of himself, autographed, presented by George Behan, and a number of copies of unusual recipes in pamphlet form, written by herself, presented by Beverly Bayne.

World Day, Wednesday, July 18.

Alice Brady Day followed the rule established by the attendance at the Exposition since it opened. The crowds were largely in excess of any that had been seen previously, and it is questionable if any larger can be seen while the Exposition lasts, for firemen and an extra squad of policemen were called in to rescue several women who had been caught in a jam, some of them being bruised, while others fainted. Then the firemen stopped admittance until the crowds had thinned down.

Even the galleries were packed, not a single vacant seat being visible anywhere. The scene as viewed from above was a seething sea of color and action, and one almost gasped as it was realized that it was all due to the magic spell of the moving picture.

Alice Brady, of course, was the leading favorite of the newcomers, and with her were also introduced June Elvidge, Madge Evans and Carlyle Blackwell, the latter, next to the star, being in high favor.

Miss Brady has a taking way while holding court. She has always a ready smile and word for the hand-shaker and never seems to tire while doing it, and all the time she impresses one that she is sincere in her attentions. She was accompanied by her father, Wm. A. Brady, president of the N. A. M. P. I., which held a meeting in the Princess theater the same day. Both left for New York by the Twentieth Century train Thursday.

On reflection it may be stated that Lieut. Sousa's Naval Band of the Great Lakes Training Station was present during the evening, and to this doubtless was due the extraordinary attendance. This fine band of 130 pieces has been under the training of Lieut. Sousa for several weeks past, and the spirited Sousa numbers so ably played by the members under his direction are well worth going a long way to hear.

The Bluebird Photoplays Company, at Carl Laemmle's suggestion, paid the expenses of transportation both ways from the naval station, and Lieut. Sousa donated his own services and that of the band gratis to the Exposition. This was in recognition of the services rendered by the Exposition management to the army and navy and the Red Cross during its run at the Coliseum.

K-E-S-E Day, Thursday, July 19.

K-E-S-E night was blisteringly hot—the first hot day during the Convention—and although the crowds early in the evening were almost equal to those of the preceding night, the hosts in the galleries soon thinned out either to seek the outer air or to take their chances on the floor of the Coliseum.

The management of the Exposition was especially jubilant over the success of K-E-S-E night, as it was expected—owing to the reports in the daily papers that morning referring to injuries sustained by women the night before, that the attendance would be slim.

But K-E-S-E day and night were both up to the mark, as the organization had on hand a fine body of stars, many of whom had worked hard all through the week to make the Exposition a success. George Kleine and George K. Spoor were also seen frequently on the floor during the week, and their interest in the success of the Exposition seemed equal to that of the management.

Pretty Shirley Mason, accompanied by her mother and Raymond McKee, both of the Edison Co., arrived in the city in the morning. Miss Mason paid the World booth a visit, where she was presented to an admiring crowd. Helen Ferguson, Taylor Holmes' leading lady, of Essanay, and Violet De Biccari, of Selig's forces, who played the leading role in "The Princess of Patches," were some of the other new faces in the K-E-S-E booth. Of course, Bryant Washburn, Taylor Holmes, Hazel Daly, Virginia Valli, Marguerite Clayton, little Mary McAlister and John Cossar were also present, as they had been many times before during the Exposition.

The following members of the Kleine, Essanay and Selig staffs were present in the booth: Wm. H. Jenner, manager of George Kleine's Chicago office, who had charge of the booth; Messrs. Smith, Scott and Pierson, division managers of George Kleine's executive office; Wm. Lord Wright, publicity manager of the Selig Polyscope Co.; Fay Lynch, manager of sales for Essanay, and C. C. Whelan, Joe Duffy and Ben B. Bedell, of the George Kleine forces.

During the day George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, provided a water carnival and bathing costume contest at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, on the northern lake shore. An invitation was extended by Mr. Spoor to the members of the convention, at the meeting Wednesday night, to visit his plant and afterwards proceed to the water carnival contest, on Thursday.

About 100 girls belonging to the extra forces at the Essanay plant and some of the Essanay stars participated in the contests. These contests included a prize for the prettiest bathing suit, also for the winners in the diving contest, tub race, and a swimming contest. Virginia Valli won the prize for the nattiest bathing suit, Helen Jackson won the swimming prize, and Evelyn Napier the prize for diving. Lulu Long carried away the prize for the most original costume.

The judges were Ralph Proctor, Lew Fields, Merrill Smith, Harry Scott, E. R. Pierson, M. S. Thomas, of Omaha; Fred Savage, of Hutchinson, Kan., and Dick Hennessy, of Detroit.

Music was played by the Marine band throughout the afternoon, and dancing was also indulged in by the visitors, the admissions being donated to the benefit of the Navy League.

FAIRBANKS ADDS MILLARD WEBB TO PRODUCING STAFF.

Millard Webb has been engaged by Douglas Fairbanks to assist John Emerson in the staging of his Artcraft productions. Mr. Webb closed a successful three years' engagement with co-directors C. M. and S. A. Franklin, starting at the Triangle and terminating at the Fox Western Studio, to accept the offer from Douglas Fairbanks. Some of his best work with the Franklins was assisting in the preparation of the scenarios for "Jack and the Bean Stalk" and "Treasure Island," in addition to taking an active part in their picturizations.

Richardson On the Last Lap

What He Saw in Burlington, the Tri-Cities, Dubuque and La Crosse, also His Comments Thereon

Burlington, Iowa.

AFTER a week's rest I have felt more like a man and a little less like a badly mussed up mess of scrapiron. Entering that distinguished village, my brain was very much in the condition of a badly scrambled egg; leaving it I could at least tell an inquiring stranger my own name with reasonable degree of certainty of getting it right.

No arrangements had been made for me to address the Burlington managers and operators. I had written the operators' organization and they had replied that "they had decided to go to Rock Island." This, I was pretty thoroughly convinced, was merely sidestepping the issue, but that was, of course, up to Burlington.

I had only been in the city a matter of half an hour, and had started out with intent to enrich some dealer in shoes by depositing with him half my wealth, taking in return therefor one pair of foot coverings. At the corner of Jefferson and Third a gentleman approached and asked: "Is this Mr. Richardson?" Pleading guilty I was informed that the questioner was L. P. Blank, manager of the Palace theater, the largest and, I am told, the best playhouse in the city. Mr. Blank is by no manner of means what his name would imply. Far from it. He impresses one as a very live wire—a theater manager who is seeking for the best, looking for suggestions, and not only willing but anxious to receive and act upon those which seem to be good. The Palace theater is a pretty little house, seating, if I rightly remember, 600 Its screen is correctly bordered in black, its picture is of proper size for the house, and its auditorium lighting, while susceptible of improvement, is not bad. I pointed out to Manager Blank several items of possible improvement in the lighting of his auditorium, which he agreed would "help some." He is using Power's machines and a Martin rotary converter. The picture light was brilliant, but was very far from being handled correctly. On the following day, Sunday, Mrs. Richardson and myself, at the invitation of Manager Blank, visited the Palace and watched the show for over an hour. During this time, I don't believe I am exaggerating when I say there was a discoloration of the light, due entirely to carelessness on the part of the operator, at least 25 times, and that is very bad indeed.

I am told, upon excellent authority, that Burlington operators are sadly lacking in technical knowledge of projection, and that the work on the screens is very decidedly less than high class. When I found that Burlington operators did not take much interest in the matter of an address on practical projection, I immediately concluded that this was the condition, and it was, if I may trust the statement of several parties who were in position to know, plus the decidedly mediocre results on the screen of the Palace, the aforesaid mediocre results being entirely due to the operator himself, and no one else under the blue canopy of the heavens.

Galesburg, Illinois.

Just to demonstrate the fact that things cannot always run smoothly, a peculiar mix-up occurred in Galesburg. When I was arranging the itinerary of the trip I received from Galesburg a letter from Arthur Francis Stillson, insisting that I include Galesburg, and offering to pay all expenses if I would do so. Friend Stillson said he would take the matter up with the local union and would insure a hearty welcome and big turnout. Upon this representation, at considerable trouble, I made the changes in the itinerary necessary to include that city. Some three weeks before the date of arrival I received a letter from Stillson, who, after making plausible excuses, said it would be impossible to carry out the original arrangement. But the itinerary of a 19,000-mile trip is not a thing which can be easily monkeyed with, and I discovered that in order to get any kind of decent train service I would be compelled to go to Rock Island by way of Galesburg, laying over in that city one night. I therefore wired the Galesburg local, but it seems that Stillson had not said a word to the union about my coming, and they, not knowing what financial burden they might be assuming, also having their dignity somewhat ruffled through the supposition that I had ignored them, did nothing, and I entered the city of Galesburg lonely and alone. This was unfortunate for at least one man, C. A. Schultz, manager of the Opera House, Dallas City, Ill., who had traveled fifty miles to hear the lecture which he supposed would be given in Galesburg.

This was peculiarly unfortunate, because from all I can learn in conversation with some of the Galesburg operators, while Galesburg has some pretty theaters, there was a great need for an address on practical projection in that city. Here, for instance, is the record of one house in the matter of machine repairs. This theater has been running a single Power's Six A, practically eight hours a day for close to four years, and during that time here is the repair bill: One toggle gear, one flywheel pinion, one aperture plate, one pair of tension shoes, one intermittent sprocket and one main driving gear. Imagine the condition of that machine! And yet this same manager last fall thought nothing, I am told, of expending $60 for repairs on his automobile. Such a case as this would make one laugh if it were not for the fact that it is so tremendously unjust to the moving picture industry and everyone concerned therein.

The Tri-Cities.

From Galesburg to Rock Island, which is one of the tri-cities, Davenport and Moline constituting the two other points of the triangle, Honorable Burlington Route runs a distinctly tank line train, and your humble servant was the goat. But all things, no matter how unpleasant, have an ending, and so did that hot, dusty, day-coach ride. At the station I found a whole bevy of hands outstretched, the same belonging to Brother C. C. Derr, of Rock Island, president Local Union 433; A. C. Mason, Rock Island, vice president; T. J. Garretson, of Davenport, secretary; O. E. Moody, Moline, business agent, and Lloyd Burr, Moline, and Fred O. Slenker, Moline, all of Local Union 433.

A choo-choo wagon conveyed us to the New Harper Hotel, which is owned and managed by W. J. Mueller, who is also owner and manager of the Spencer Square theater.

In the afternoon, accompanied by the business agent, president and secretary of Local 433, together with Brother Slinker, we motored around the three cities, visiting several theaters.

Viewed as a whole, auditorium lighting in the tri-cities, particularly in Davenport, is, from the projection point of view decidedly bad, and in individual instances is very bad indeed. In a few of the houses the managers seem to have made absolutely no study at all of the effect of auditorium lighting upon the screen result. In several instances I pointed out to managers how the condition could be improved, and to their credit the suggestions were in every instance well received, and will, I believe, be acted upon.

Operating room conditions from the ventilation point of view are very bad indeed, there being no proper ventilation in any theater I visited in the tri-cities. True, in some instances, there was a good circulation of air, but in all but one instance the air was pulled in through the ports, out of the auditorium. The one instance in which this was not true was the American theater in Davenport. This theater, a large, excellent house, has consumed a perfectly shameful amount of space in the construction of its operating room, which same is built outside the theater, over the roof of another building. On one side there is at least 175 feet of open space; on the other side there is fully 300 feet of open space; at the rear it is fully two miles to any obstruction, and then the obstruction is in the form of a hill. Up above there is nothing but the heavens. The size of this "operating room" is approximately 7½ by 7½ feet. Its ceiling is about 6½ or may be 7 feet from the floor at the back end, and somewhat higher at the front end. In this "coop" are two Motiograph machines, late model, set on wooden blocks about 10 inches high. You can imagine the amount of space there is left. The pitch in projection is very bad. It does seem that if friend manager insists upon putting the operating room in a place of that kind, he might, at the very least, have made it of half way decent size. In this room there is plenty of ventilation, because about half of one end of the operating room consists of a window, which is kept wide open, and as there is an open window and door at the other end there is certainly plenty of fresh air; also there is a literal flood of light, which has the effect of preventing the operator from having that clear, sharp view of his picture he ought to have, and must have in order to keep it in sharp focus, and in order to detect faint shadows on the screen of which latter there were several during my presence in the house.

In Rock Island I visited the Majestic and the Spencer Square theaters. The Majestic is a nice house, with a good front. It has a good operating room in so far as size is concerned. Power's machines are used, and the picture illumination is good; also the auditorium lighting is not bad.

The Spencer Square has a picture of correct size, but it lacks a sufficiently wide black border, also immediately under the picture is a clock with not only its face but also its entire case brilliantly illuminated. It is about the worst example of friend Clock I have yet encountered, and I have encountered some pretty bad ones. What that clock is doing to the audience in the way of eyestrain it is a shame to tell. Not satisfied with this, the manager has, at both right and left of the screen a very bright exit light. These lights are so bright that I think they could be readily seen and read from the opposite end of the public square in front of the theater, if there were any way of doing it. What, friend manager, is the idea of thus needlessly injuring the eyes of your audience, and by reflex action, injuring your projection by having exit lights so bright that they could be seen all over a house twenty times as big as the one they are in? And this is not all, for there are two bright white lights, one on either side of the auditorium, and six bright sidelights, three on each side if I correctly remember.

The Spencer Square has a good operating room, but it is poorly located, and its ports are too narrow. The Spencer operating room has the lamphouse piped to the vent, and there is a strong suction of air out of the room, but no fresh air intake from the outer air.

In Moline I visited the Mirror and Bio theaters. The Mirror has a picture of correct size, projected by one Power's 6B and one Power's 6A. The operating room is rather small. There are no lights near the screen and no sidelights.

The Bio theater has fair auditorium lighting,, but I suggested to both the Mirror and the Bio certain changes in their plan of auditorium lighting, which I think will work to the very decided benefit of those houses.

Moline is the workshop of the tri-cities. There are some literally tremendous manufactories, devoted principally to farm machinery.

Over in Davenport I dropped in at the Garden, the Family, the American and the Casino. The Garden has a very pretty scheme of auditorium lighting, but it is decidedly trying for the eyes, and by reflex action on the eyes is very injurious to the screen result. The piano and clock lights are confined to their proper space (this is so rare that I must shake hands with Manager Greenbaum, on this particular point), but the clock face should be black and white, with white figures and white hands, also a moderately light green globe at the piano would "help some." The picture is of correct size, but at the time of my visit was quite dim. The operating room ports are ample in dimension, but there is no glass in them. Simplex machines are used. Theo Garretson, secretary Local Union 433, is operating, and his equipment gives evidence of the fact that he studies his business. The light ray from condenser to aperture is entirely inclosed by a metal cone, the operator regulating his light by the screen result, which is as it should be. The optical system apparently is lined up according to the latest practice. The condensers are connected, and there is an aperture dowser at each machine, the two being connected, which latter will be described in the projection department in due time. The room is 10 by 12 feet in size; the lights were out, the room dark, and the walls were of dark color.

At the Family theater I found two Power 6A's, projecting a small, brilliant picture. Current was supplied by a Fort Wayne motor generator set. In the auditorium the sidelights were bad, but the rest was good.

The American operating room I have already spoken of. The Casino uses two Power's. Its auditorium lighting is very bad. There is a clock jammed right up against the screen and literally plastered all over with light. To the right of the screen is one brilliant red light, and on the left wall are two more. There are twelve translucent-bottom, inverted bottom ceiling fixtures, and fourteen white, indirect sidelights. The picture is of correct size and bordered in black, put poor, due to the auditorium lighting.

Oh, yes, by the way, I also visited the Orpheum, of Moline, of which Business Agent Moody is operator. Friend Moody has two Power's 6A's and a good sized operating room with black walls. His dowsers are electrically connected. He dissolves one picture into the next by means of a dowser blade attached to either end of a long swinging bar, which rests on a pin at its center. In the center of each of these dowser blades is a framing light—a very clever arrangement.

I am sorry to be compelled to speak thus of conditions in the tri-cities, but how are we ever going to get them improved if we don't bring them out into the light of day and look them over?

The men of Local 433 have demonstrated the fact that they are progressive—that they are not asleep at the switch. I am informed by Business Agent Moody that the union proposes establishing and as a matter of fact is now arranging to establish a school for its members. This is good. It is a plan which should be followed out, and means should be taken to, if necessary, compel all members to attend school sessions.

Midnight saw the large lobby of the New Harper Hotel well filled with a gathering of tri-city operators and managers, plus some out-of-town men who had journeyed in for the "big doings." George R. Stephenson, proprietor and manager of Watch Tower (Rock Island) Amusement Park, was requested to act as toastmaster, and a most happy selection he proved to be. His anecdotes, interspersed with more serious things, kept the assemblage in the best of humor. Two ladies were present: Mrs. A. J. Drumm, managress American and Princess theaters, Moline, and friend. Mrs. Drumm's husband is an operator and a member of Local Union 433. Aside from the lecture, the principal address of the evening was delivered by Judge Butler, who spoke entertainingly and at some length, covering the good the movies can and do accomplish, and the tremendous power of the screen. The lecture lasted until 3:15, and as the editor climbed on the roost dawn was beginning to color the sky old rose.

The audience had proved to be highly appreciative. After the lecture a unanimous vote of thanks was extended the writer, which also was ordered printed in the local papers and a copy sent to the Moving Picture World. I felt the effects of the rest I had had, for I was able to put the "punch" into things as in days of old, and that, after all, is the secret of success in an address, or in anything else in this wicked old world.

Dubuque, Iowa.

Dubuque is a city of about 40,000 people, picturesquely situated on the west bank of the Mississippi River, a hundred or so miles above Rock Island. It was due to the enterprise of John H. Maclay, manager of the Grand Opera House, that the city was included in my itinerary. Not knowing that the operators were organized (combination, local) I wrote several Dubuque managers and received a reply from Brother Maclay saying that he would undertake to make arrangements for me to address the Dubuque managers.

Dubuque has eight theaters, namely, the Majestic, Dreamland, Grand Opera House, Liberty, Princess, Family theater, Strand, and Star, but the two last mentioned are closed for the summer.

During the afternoon Manager Maclay, his better half and his daughter joy-rided yours truly around over Dubuque and out through the beautiful Natural Park, which is remarkable for the splendid view presented from its headland.

I called on the various managers, and when the lecture was given at the Grand Opera House, 11:15 p. m., all except the manager of the Majestic, a vaudeville, which only runs pictures as a side issue, and the manager, of the Princess, whom I did not see, were absent. The operators themselves had not shown any large amount of enterprise in helping arrange for the matter, but, to their credit, they were all there, and after the affair was over, several operators and managers expressed themselves as having received large benefit

La Crosse, Wisconsin.

Leaving Dubuque I made a mistake. I took the C., M. & St. P. instead of the Burlington, only to discover that, whereas the Burlington Route runs high class, thoroughly equipped trains between Dubuque and La Crosse, the Milwaukee runs nothing but a day coach of somewhat ancient vintage. Inasmuch as the journey required six hours, this was no laughing matter to yours truly.

At the La Crosse station I was met by Brother Kampschorer, the other men all being busily employed (it was the Fourth of July) shooting pictures at La Crosse screens, presumably at holiday speed. Later, however, other brothers appeared and informed us that arrangements had been made for a midnight luncheon at the La Crosse Hotel. The correspondence had been done through the Badger Stereopticon and Moving Picture Machine Company, which institution was largely responsible for La Crosse being included in the itinerary. The arrangements, however, were made by the operators themselves, who did not feel in the least affronted because I had not taken the matter up with them personally, thus demonstrating their broad-mindedness.

The gathering at the La Crosse Hotel was not 100 per cent., but every theater was represented, with the exception of the Star, a small house in which the manager is his own operator. This I consider as being rather remarkable, in view of the fact that it was at the end of a long holiday, the Fourth of July. The men enjoyed their luncheon, which was very nice indeed, and well served; also they remained until the end of the address at 2 a. m. When I had finished, one of the managers shook hands and remarked, "Well, Friend Richardson, that was at least $100 to me." Also an operator made practically the same statement, and the other boys all expressed themselves as having been benefited.

At the end of the lecture, William Freisie, manager of the Majestic theater, on behalf of the assembly, presented the writer with a Sterling silver desk set in the form of a paper cutter and scissors, the same being engraved: "To F. H. Richardson from the Boys of La Crosse." Needless to say, the set, which is indeed a very nice one, will have a place on the desk of the projection editor, even as the La Crosse men will have a corner of the editor's brain set apart to the memory of the pleasant hours spent in their company.

Next day I visited the plant of the Badger Stereopticon and Moving Picture Machine Company, whose apparatus will be described in the Projection Department very soon; also, through the kindness of the men, I was gasolined around and shown the very beautiful scenery which La Crosse habitually displays to admiring visitors, with the remark, "Look at it! By golly, it's all ours." And after you have looked, you don't blame La Crosse for being proud of the beauty of its surroundings.

H. H. Burford, manager of the Bijou theater, accompanied us on the sightseeing expedition, as also did his operator, Joseph Kampschorer, both thoroughly good fellows, whose friendship it is good to have.

Harris P. Wolfberg

A MAN whose brains have developed with the industry is Harris P. Wolfberg, the young film magnate of Pittsburgh, who like Lochinvar, "came out of the West." Mr. Wolfberg has been a film man for several years; he was one of P. L. Waters' right-hand men in the hey day of the General Film and since then has enjoyed identification with several other giants of the distributing end of the [illegible]

Last fall he graduated, so to speak, from the ranks of a hireling and invested his savings along with the backing of several Mid-West financiers in the state rights to "The Crisis" for Ohio and a number of other states. Mr. Wolfberg learned through his managerial connections with the big and successful distributors that co-operation with exhibitors was the vital thing to insure success in the film business, and that the man who had something better to offer was the man the exhibitors wanted to do business with.

Harris P. Wolfberg.

In the beginning Wolfberg's aggressiveness was looked upon askance, but as he continued and made good the old guard began to take notice and he was recognized as a man with ideas and ability and determination to carry them out. He is now enjoying the benefits which so justly belong to him as a progressive distributor of big features. So successful has he been with "The Crisis" that he has now purchased from W. E. Shallenberger the rights to Hall Caine's "The Deemster" for Ohio, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Co-operation with exhibitors was the key-note of Mr. Wolfberg's success. He explained this clearly in an interview.

He said: "I do not believe that everything is done and the incident closed upon signing of contracts or delivery of films. I employ only first-class men to represent me on the road and they are instructed to co-operate in every way possible with exhibitors. Not only do they sell my feature to the exhibitor, but they help him sell it to the public. Through them the exhibitor is supplied with up-to-date advertising material and ideas; electros, copy for newspaper advertisements, etc. My representatives not only go around to the newspaper offices as press agents, but they call upon well known citizens and interest patriotic societies. I know that many good pictures have failed to bring returns to exhibitors because they were not 'put over' right and I made up my mind that this would not happen with my pictures.

"My men always work with exhibitors and the result is that we have earned their confidence and good will, which I prize more than anything else, as I pride myself on employing nothing but honest methods."

"Parentage"

A Picture True to Nature and One for Which a Wide Showing Should Be Obtained.

By the Rev. W. H. Jackson.

THIS picture now making its first appearance at the Rialto in New York is without doubt a notable picture. In dealing with one of life's problems any author sets himself a great task in that he must show present abuses in actual effect and point the way to deliver us from them. In "Parentage" we are shown the difference between the hard, relentless business man who carries his harsh nature into his home, thereby reducing his wife to the level of the common employee under a tyrannical boss; and providing an environment for his son who came as an unwelcome child into his home which could have no other results than to produce a young man in whom all the finer principles of manhood were eliminated: this young man is a very true type of thousands we see every day victims of a harsh surrounding blended with the spoiling influences of a mistaken mother's kindness—a kindness prompted chiefly by a desire to soften the harshness prevailing, and which produces in a boy a strange mixture of pampered maliciousness; here the author has been very successful in producing a type the very presentation of which fully conveys the lesson intended. On the other hand we are shown the considerate man, a man fair in all his business associations, and whose home relations are such that the new-born son is enthusiastically welcomed—indeed extravagantly so; a man whose house is a home—a home where kindly considerations prevail, where the environment is such that the son grows up true to the proper standard of what ought to be normal conditions; the result is a young man successful in life, prosperous and happy, with a bright future before him. These stories are well told, the picture work is perfect, and the portrayal of the characters most acceptable.

It is a question whether as a whole this picture should be shown indiscriminately to an audience with young children included, there are many things too adult for a juvenile mind, besides the fact that there is a possibility of young children seeing in this picture a resemblance to many of their own home experiences to the prejudice of the best interests of that home; an exposure of the delinquencies of the parents before the children is not wise, and this picture is so true to nature that many instances of like character here illustrated will be exposed; for these reasons many occasions here should be shielded from eyes that are too young. On the other hand all grown up young people, and all adults, can see and profit by the picture, and for this reason a wide showing should be secured for it; the good it can do is unlimited. A very good separate picture for children to show two types of boys at school can be made from the school and other scenes of that portion of this picture; as one who is interested in pictures for the young, I do not hesitate to ask that the makers of this picture do so arrange a profitable little one-reel picture from this part of the larger subject.

In commending this picture the writer also feels that there is need to supplement it with one of a companion nature dealing with the girl question from the mother side, the home and environment of the girls is truly as great and important. The title "Parentage" is most appropriately chosen in that it includes the responsibility not only of the birth of the child, but the entire future of a life. The men and women of the future can be affected by such pictures, and those of us who are claiming the full value of the moving picture as an educator, do not mean to confine its powers to the school and institution, but are glad to see them extended to the home in the way this picture extends them and we wish a further larger adaptation of this plan. "Parentage" shows there is a plan and scope in a new and large field, the author of this subject is to be congratulated and encouraged, to so encourage is the object the writer, with the hope that this film may be the beginning of another educational movement to which the wide powers of the moving pictures are dedicated; let every exhibitor show "Parentage.""

"Testing Men for Air Fighting" (Paramount-Bray).

IN THE 76th release of the Paramount-Bray pictograph will be found a comprehensive illustration of the test through which prospective army aviators must pass before being accepted for the service. The first requisite if a man would enter this service is that he have perfectly normal eyes, ears, nose and throat; for his success depends almost entirely on his ability to see and hear perfectly, while his nose and throat must be able to withstand the terrific pressure of the air through which he passes at a speed of 100 miles or more per hour. In examining the eyes the recruit is seated on a stool which is revolved rapidly in order to determine how quickly his sight reverts to normal. He is also tested for color blindness, which is an important matter; and in so doing is given a bundle of different colored yarns which he must match with a chart within a given time. Normal blood pressure is also essential; and to determine whether or not the heart is working properly he is put through vigorous "setting-up" exercises, after which the pressure of his blood is taken. If the instrument reaches more than 150 he is disqualified. His sense of balance is then tested and he is made to walk a straight line, with eyes open and closed. The same idea is followed in describing a circle to the right and then to the left, arriving back at exactly the point of starting. Finally he is taken in a motor through a section of the country wholly unfamiliar to him, after which he is asked to note each important point throughout the tour, and if he has succeeded in remembering most of the things he has seen he has passed this test. This illustration will be found interesting and instructive.

"The Magic of Motive Power" (Selig).

In this two-reel educational the producer has traced the evolution of motive power from the time of Columbus to the present day. The picture opens with the caravels of Columbus showing replicas made for the Columbian exposition at Chicago, one of which is shown under sail. Next comes the canoe, the ocean schooner, the Mississippi side-wheeler, the modern steamship, the hydroaeroplane, the submarine, the ice-boat, the motor sled, the dog sled, the outrigger boats used in the South Sea Islands, and the Buva canal boats of Japan. The part ends with a scene showing the shooting of rapids in small boats. The second part of the picture shows the evolution of street transportation, wherein the hansom cab of London is compared with the modern New York conveniences such as the trolleyless car, which runs by storage battery, the horse car, which can still be seen running across Bleecker street, the stepless car, the "L" train making the 110th street curve, and the Fifth avenue bus. Next attention is drawn to country-wide transportation showing the Indian drag-pole, the ox-cart, the prairie schooner, the stage-coach, the steam locomotive and the electric locomotive, the army water-wagon and the caterpillar tractor. Scenes of the various modes of transportation in India close this reel. An interesting feature of the picture is that some of the scenes have been cut from dramatic pictures. The prairie schooners are shown making camp.

"Artificial Incubation of Eggs" (Universal).

The modern way of adding to our chicken population is illustrated in the "Screen Magazine" No. 26, following some scenes on the old-fashioned method we are shown how the present day incubation system is managed. We learn that an oil lamp supplies the necessary heat, and that an automatic thermometer is adjusted so as to maintain an even temperature of 103 degrees, and we see how the heat is conserved and distributed by means of water trays. After 36 hours the eggs become thoroughly warmed and are then turned for the first time, an operation which is repeated twice daily until the end of the 19th day. Closeups of the germinal disc of the egg are shown at different stages of incubation, and on the 19th day the chickens begin to "pip" their shells. An interesting subject, well illustrated.

"A Submarine of the Past" (Mutual-Gaumont).

The evolution of the submarine is touched upon in this subject, which will be found in "Reel Life No. 63." It opens with views of the oldest submarine extant, which is now mounted on Bayou street, St. John, Louisiana. It was driven by a four-blade propeller, and was 19 feet long with a beam of 4 feet. The picture explains carefully the various points of interest about this submarine, and tells us that the first attempt at submarine building was made by David Bushnell in 1775.

"Havana, Cuba" (Mutual-Gaumont).

A panoramic view of the city of Havana, capital of the republic of Cuba, opens this subject, leading up to individual views of points of interest and importance such as El Morro castle, the land-locked harbor capable of sheltering all kinds of vessels, even a man-o'-war, the Prado Promenade, and the India Park with its beautiful fountain topped by a statue of an Indian maiden. Then there are the statues of Luz Caballero and General Maceo the famous Cuban patriot, and there is the Columbus Memorial Chapel, where the bones of Columbus rested for years before they were removed to the Cathedral at Seville, Spain. San Rafael street, which is one of the principal shopping streets in Havana is also shown, as well as Pimargall street, which is so narrow that vehicles cannot pass each other. The house of the president, the City Hall, and the Senate Chamber are also seen in the picture, which gives a very comprehensive idea of this interesting Cuban city. This subject will be found in "Tours Around the World" No. 36.

"China and the Chinese, No. 3" (Educational-Kri).

The third number of "China and the Chinese" shows us something of how the lower classes of China live, and reminds us that of her 450,000,000 inhabitants [illegible] per cent live on the water. Many of these people live in house boats sometimes ten in a family, and still find room for boarders Attention is also drawn to the opium curse when we are shown some of the results of continued usage of this terrible drug. Criminals of various sorts are said to be direct results of addiction to opium, and we are shown an almost unbelievable number of criminals in chains being escorted to prison. We learn also of some of their methods of punishment and torture, and are shown a murderer in a cage in which he is to be strangled to death. This is accomplished by taking one block at a time from beneath his feet until all are removed and he is left to this awful death. The film is intensely interesting and shows besides what has been mentioned many sights of interest in the poor quarters and also scenes in the business section of Hong Kong.

"Southeastern Texas" (Pathe-Combitone).

One of the most entertaining and instructive numbers of the Pathe-Combitone series "Know America the Land We Love" contains views of Southeastern Texas, covering some of the important industries of the state, including lumbering, oil, ship building and the raising of fox terriers. Scenes at the Sabine kennels are shown, also the oil fields and residences of Beaumont. The city of Orange—a Gulf port—with its lumber mills and ship yards, complete the picture.

"Some Egyptian Towns" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Alexandria, which for centuries has been the capital of Egypt, is given first attention in this number. Views of this ancient city are followed by a glimpse of Heliopolis, the chief seat of the worship of the sun in Egypt's early days. El Badrashein, near Memphis, is seen in the picture, and also Mansura, where a famous battle between the crusaders and the Egyptians was fought. Damietta, with its many mosques and minarets, Tanta, noted for its fairs and Moslem festivals, and glimpses of villages along the Nile close the picture, which will be found in "Mutual Tours Around the World" No. 36.

"Why Worry About Fish Bones?" (Universal).

In the "Screen Magazine" No. 26 Mrs. A. Louise Andreas tells us how to prepare shad in the most delicious way. We learn that we must first remove the head and tail, split the under side and lift out the back bone, and locate and remove with a pincers the small bones, after which the fish rolls up easily. The next operation is to butter the plank thoroughly and lay the shad, skin side down, on it, not forgetting to apply the proper amount of pepper and salt. Melted butter is also added before placing the fish under the flame; and when cooked it is served with a border of mashed potatoes. Cucumber cups hold the tartar sauce, and sliced lemon and radish complete the work. This excellent lesson in cooking is fully illustrated by Mrs. Andreas.

"A Square Deal for Baby" (Mutual-Gaumont).

A well illustrated and timely subject to be found in "Reel Life No. 63" is "A Square Deal for the Baby." Here we are taught a number of things important to know in connection with baby's health and well-being including how and what is best for the baby to eat. We learn that in many towns and cities there are community houses where mothers are invited to come with their babies for advice; and that when they are unable to do this a competent nurse is appointed to visit the house. This subject is prepared in such a manner that it will be acceptable in any theater.

"The Land of Make Believe" (Paramount-Bray).

In the 76th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph will be found some interesting information with regard to how the scenery and props for the elaborate stage productions of New York are thought out and made. The scenes of the picture were photographed in one of the large studios where competent artists are now employed to do their best for the sake of effective display. We see also the costumes for a musical comedy being designed, and learn that inspiration for the costumes of a musical comedy frequently comes from the surroundings in which they will be placed.

"A Study in Fox Hounds" (Paramount-Bray).

Some of the finest kennels in the country were opened to the Paramount-Bray photographers in the making of this study of Fox hounds, which will be found in No. 76 of the Pictographs. The picture shows how these dogs are cared for, and closes with a series of scenes taken during a hunt.

"Whale Meat" (Mutual-Gaumont).
